I wholeheartedly support the remarks of the hon. Member for Meriden (Mr. Mills). My own experience of pubs began about 25 years ago—I must be sure that that puts me over the age of 18 at the time—in the dark, dingy, smokey places that we had to frequent in Scotland in those days because they were all that was available. There has been a remarkable improvement in the standard of public houses since then. I wish that I could say the same for the beer. Like the hon. Member for Meriden, I should like to see a proliferation of small brewers being given the opportunity to sell their products on licensed premises.

Tonight's debate is part of a highly complex issue. The Bill itself is unexceptionable so far as it goes. As my hon. Friend the Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, North (Mr. Henderson) said, we do not intend to oppose its Second Reading. One could say that the Bill is distinguished solely by the fact that it is the only one that we shall be considering this Session that is shorter than the legislation dealing with student loans.

The Bill gives on-licence tenants the same rights as other commercial tenants, thereby bringing them within the scope of the Landlord and Tenant Act 1954, from which they were previously excluded. The Bill's provisions have generally been accepted by the brewers and have the support of the National Licensed Victuallers Association, on whose behalf my hon. Friend the Member for Rotherham (Mr. Crowther) spoke earlier. I am sure that right hon. and hon. Members in all parts of the House accept the conviction and knowledge with which he spoke in respect of the attitudes of an association that represents the wishes and aspirations of tenants. I sincerely hope that the Minister listened carefully to my hon. Friend's remarks and that his points will be taken on board.

Monopolies are complex entities, and the brewing industry is no exception. I suppose that one might more properly call it an oligopoly because there is more than one competing company in that industry. Just because that oligopoly takes a different form in this country from that in other countries—where there is vertical rather than horizontal integration, with the buying out of competitors that one sees in a country such as Holland—does not alter the fact that there are constraints on competition in Britain, which the report of the Monopoly and Mergers Commission properly saw fit to examine.

The Government recognise that there are problems with the present form of the industry. Attempts have been made to modify the Commission's recommendations and to specify which of them should be implemented and which should not. Fair enough. We may challenge the Minister on some of them, and may accept others. Tonight we are attempting to improve the Bill, and we shall do so again in Committee. My hon. Friend the Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, North mentioned giving the Bill backbone, and we shall certainly seek to do that in Committee.

Specific cases cited by hon. Members in all parts of the House are indicative of the many unfair pressures that are often placed on tenant landlords by their breweries. They make it essential that we try to give the Bill real powers. The Opposition do not accept that a voluntary code of practice is an adequate safeguard against abuse, certainly in the form that has been suggested; we recognise the need for tenants to receive adequate protection, however, and will therefore do our best to give the Bill the teeth that it needs.

Let me add my plea to that of my hon. Friend the Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, North, and ask the Government to consider extending the provisions to Scotland. There can be no logic in retaining an anomaly of this kind.

10.30 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Corporate Affairs (Mr. John Redwood): I am grateful to all who have contributed to this workmanlike debate. Many good points have been made, some of which can be discussed more appropriately and at greater length in Committee.

The hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, North (Mr. Henderson) said that he welcomed measures that offered protection to the landlord, balanced by increased competition in the brewing industry. That is the Government's case tonight in comparing the Bill with the orders that we are shortly to consider. The hon. Gentleman feared that the prices of soft drinks were too high: he was worried about paying £2 for some orange juice. He will see that the orders contain proposals to break the ties concerning soft drinks, which may help competition—and competition is the friend of the customer.

I am glad that the Opposition agree that the Bill is necessary. It will be the Government's task in Committee to explain why this Bill, and this Bill alone, provides the required balance—for it is a case for balance, as my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State made clear. Other hon. Members have pointed out that, if we go too far, not enough tenancies will be on offer, and the market will be considerably affected, whereas if we do not go far enough we shall not be offering a reasonable deal to tenants who have made representations to my Department, both directly and through other hon. Members.

The hon. Members for Newcastle upon Tyne, North and for Rotherham (Mr. Crowther) mentioned Scottish and Newcastle Breweries. As we have seen in the press, the brewery is selling some pubs, and I have heard about the nature of the sale from one of its advisers, who tells me that existing tenancies will be honoured as part of its terms. The sale will, of course, lead to more diversified ownership in the pub market, so in a way it satisfies the Opposition's demand that we further implement the MMC's recommendations.

Both the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, North and the hon. Member for Kirkcaldy (Dr. Moonie) mentioned the Scottish legislation. There are two important differences. First, there is more free trade in Scotland anyway, so the market starts from a different point; secondly, there is no Landlord and Tenant Act in Scotland, so the legislation would not be appropriate there. We chose this route because we felt that, in England, there should be a symmetry between the treatment of pubs and the treatment of other types of business tenancy.

My hon. Friend the Member for Faversham (Mr. Moate) made a good point about the need to balance protection with the danger of fewer tenancies resulting. He was worried about the possibility of higher prices. The purpose of the orders is to introduce more competition, which should—in one combination or another—improve service, or prices and choice, for the customer.

I am grateful to the hon. Member for Rotherham for making his points about tenants' protection. He will know that I have met the National Licensed Victuallers Association to hear its representations, and my door is open whenever the association wishes to bring new material to my attention or that of my right hon. Friend. I am sure that the hon. Gentleman will recognise that the Government are keen to ensure that the NLVA has a role in monitoring the way in which changes in the industry take place, and the way in which the Act and the orders work in practice.

My hon. Friend the Member for Ilford, North (Mr. Bendall) and the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, North were worried about the case where a tenant builds up a business and is then threatened with the loss of it as the pub tenancy changes. Under current legislation, there is no compensation in such a case. Under the Bill, such tenants will be eligible for compensation. That is an improvement which many hon. Members will welcome. I am sure that there will be further debate in Committee about the way in which that compensation is arrived at, but it is progress to have compensation and the Government's case will be symmetry of treatment between pubs and other business tenancies.

I know that my hon. Friend the Member for Bury, North (Mr. Burt) wants the Bill to proceed. I was grateful for the persuasive way in which he put his points and for the way in which he said that, if we pledged careful monitoring, he might see his way to welcoming our proposals. I can pledge tonight that the Government will, of course, monitor the proposals when they are implemented extremely carefully and we shall have an open door to good representations on changes.

I know that my hon. Friend the Member for Gillingham (Mr. Couchman) was concerned about the original MMC recommendations and thought that they were a little over the top. I am glad that he now agrees that we have abated some of the recommendations and I hope that he will agree that this is a balanced package which reflects the concerns that were put to the Government by the brewing interests on the one hand and by the tenants' and the customers' interests on the other.

My hon. Friend the Member for Meriden (Mr. Mills) was interested in the plight of small business. Like him, I am a fan of small business and of more choice and competition. He may find that the guest beer provision in the order goes some way to meeting his point. Of course we welcome more small businesses. Pubs provide a way of building a small business for the tenant and there will be more free houses as a result of the proposals. There is a niche in the market for certain kinds of brew. Listening to the hon. Member for Kirkcaldy who, from his Scottish viewpoint, casts aspersions against our English beers, I suspect that he may be part of the market for the new beers which my hon. Friend the Member for Meriden would like to see.

The hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) was worried about the implementation date. It will be two months after Royal Assent. I think that the hon. Gentleman may have been a little confused about the transitional period. There has to be a transitional period for tenancies that are already in force, but new tenancies will be governed by the provisions from an earlier date than he thought. I shall look into his question about the spouse of a publican who dies or who becomes an invalid during a tenancy; that is a point to which I shall respond in Committee.

I recommend the Bill to the House. It represents great progress for tenants. It is part of a balanced package to improve the shape of the brewing industry and I hope that the House will agree that we should proceed without a Division.

Question put and agreed to.

Bill read a Second time and committed to a Standing Committee pursuant to Standing Order No. 61 (Committal of Bills).

Supply of Beer (Tied Estates)

10.37 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Corporate Affairs (Mr. John Redwood): I beg to move,

That the draft Supply of Beer (Tied Estates) Order 1989, which was laid before this House on 6th December, be approved.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): With this, it will be convenient to discuss the prayer:

That an humble Address be presented to Her Majesty, praying that the Supply of Beer (Loan Ties, Licensed Premises and Wholesale Prices) Order 1989 (S.I., 1989, No. 2258), dated 1st December 1989, a copy of which was laid before this House on 4th December, be annulled.

Mr. Redwood: The hour is late and I do not want to detain the House at great length. The two orders are an essential part of our balanced package for the brewing industry in response to the report by the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. The draft Supply of Beer (Tied Estates) Order includes the guest beer provisions, the reduction in the number of tied houses under the formula identified in the measure and the breaking of the tie on soft drinks, non-beer drinks and low alcohol drinks, which will improve choice and competition.

The Supply of Beer (Loan Ties, Licensed Premises and Wholesale Prices) Order deals with the need to have a facility to repay loans and to obtain an exit from the loan tie within a reasonable time, and it introduces a maximum wholesale prices list. It introduces a supply obligation and restricts or prevents covenants on the sale of pubs after 1 January 1990, under which a brewer tries to sell a pub and to stop its further use as a pub.

These are important measures which are part of a balanced package for the industry. They are the result of a great deal of consultation and thought with the industry, with tenants and with customer groups, following the MMC report. It would be best for me to reply to the specific concerns of hon. Members that they raise in the debate.

Mr. Doug Henderson (Newcastle upon Tyne, North): I am somewhat disappointed at the way in which the Government have approached these matters. I should have expected a more detailed and thorough approach by the Minister. The order has caused considerable controversy over a long period. By no means is there unanimity in the House on how these matters should be dealt with.

The Government have failed the industry and the consumer by bringing forward the proposals. They have failed to take the opportunity to restructure the industry and bring about competition. They have failed to satisfy the valid objections of pub customers who are fed up with being overcharged for beer and, in particular, lager. The Monopolies and Mergers Commission reckoned that there is overcharging to the tune of 20 per cent. We know also that there are considerable regional differences. A product produced in a certain brewery sells at remarkably different prices in similar circumstances in different regions. The Government have failed to outlaw overcharging for soft drinks, low-alcohol and non-alcoholic beers. That subject was mentioned in an earlier debate this evening. More important, the Government have failed to give future security to the people who work in breweries and bars.

The proposals are a cave-in to the brewers' lobby. They are half-baked, and they fail to address the need to introduce real competition in the industry, and they will probably do very little to bring down beer prices.

The extent of competition in the brewing industry has always been controversial. The Monopolies and Mergers Commission report in March was but another stage in what has become a long controversy. At the time of publication of the report, Lord Young stated that he was mindful to——

Mr. Graham Riddick (Colne Valley): Minded.

Mr. Henderson: He was minded to implement the findings. We all know that it did not take Lord Young long to be less minded, and it did not take him long to realise the error of his ways. Few hon. Members are surprised that such a transformation can occur after a little word in the ear from Victoria street and, perhaps, a bigger word in the ear from the Brewers Society. We all know that, in March, the Monopolies and Mergers Commission said that brewers are protected from competition in a complex monopoly. By December, and a Secretary of State later, it seems that the brewers are protected from competition by a new complex monopoly.

The Government have repeatedly stated that they believe in competition policy—the Minister hardly needs me to remind him of this—but does competition apply only to local authorities and public authorities? Where is commitment to competition in the brewing industry? Is it the case that competition is all very well if it involves selling or, as has more often become the case, giving away public sector assets? If it entails compulsorily divesting private capital, we are told that it is an infringement of business freedom. Is it not more honestly an infringement of Conservative party ideology, a cave-in to the Brewers Society and the £6 million of advertising, and a surrender to Conservative Back-Bench Members with vested brewing interests? There are many of them present this evening.

Mr. Roger Moate (Faversham): Will the hon. Gentleman say a word about my vested brewing interests, for example?

Mr. Henderson: I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for giving me the opportunity to remark on the number of hon. Members who have declared a direct interest in the industry. I have made no specific reference to the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Moate rose——

Mr. Henderson: I have already given the hon. Gentleman an opportunity——

Mr. James Couchman (Gillingham): On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. I have a vague feeling that the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, North (Mr. Henderson) was looking in my direction. My vested interest is not as a brewer; it is as a licensee and a publican in six tenanted and leased premises. I have no brewing interests whatsoever.

Mr. Moate: Further to that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It was not a point of order, but the hon. Member for Gillingham (Mr. Couchman) has now got his point on the record. Does the hon. Member for Faversham (Mr. Moate) have a point of order?

Mr. Moate: Only to the extent that the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, North (Mr. Henderson) made a point about vested brewing interests. When some of us speak, we are not speaking for vested interests: we believe that we are speaking for our constituents. In my case, I was speaking for the Transport and General Workers Union, which the hon. Gentleman has singularly failed to do.

Mr. Henderson: I know that you will have realised the relevance of that point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker, but it was a little lost on me.

I was grateful to the hon. Member for Gillingham (Mr. Couchman) for raising his point of order because the fact that he thought that I was looking in his direction suggests that he accepts some guilt.

The Monopolies and Mergers Commission may or may not have the right approach to breaking up monopoly in the industry. I believe that if a limit of 2,000 were put on ownership, a firm policy of preventing the further concentration of ownership would be absolutely necessary. Only that action could prevent predators from gobbling up the assets disposed of by the brewers. If the loan tie for large brewers were outlawed, we would need a lower limit on pub ownership, which would be permissible to protect the genuinely regional and local breweries.

The Government now appear to have accepted the important principal of tackling the issue of loan tying. If they have—I hope that they have—how can they justify their scheme to outlaw only half the loan ties above 2,000 units? Surely that would still allow the big six to dictate the market. Bass will still have 4,650 units that are owned or tied, out of an estate of 7,300 units. Allied Breweries Ltd. will still have 4,300 units tied or owned, out of an estate of 6,600 units. Many believe that the impact of that will not be to extend competition meaningfully. Indeed, that view has been put to me by people who work in the industry and who believe that it will create instability, threaten jobs and make breweries more vulnerable to takeover.

It is noticeable that the Brewers Society has been remarkably silent of late. We all recall the outrage expressed by the Brewers Society when the MMC report was published in March which had become something of a reservation by the time Lord Young changed his position in July. Where is the Brewers Society now in December? Does it believe that its complex monopoly has been let off the hook by the Government's proposals? If that is the case, where are the Government now? Can they still say that they have stood their ground in the face of pressure from the Brewers Society? Can the Government still say that competition is on the agenda in the brewing industry? How minded is the current Secretary of State to face up to the issues that his predecessor chose to duck after four months? Do the Government really expect that these proposals will dent monopoly power in the industry? And to what extent do the Government believe that their proposals will succeed in bringing down beer prices around the country?

The Opposition accept some parts of the orders. The publication of wholesale price lists for beer, with discounts that are both shown and known, is an important contribution to increasing the information that is available to publicans. I am pleased that the Government have accepted the MMC's views on this matter—and those of many people in the industry. The provisions that prevent brewers with over 2,000 outlets from tying those outlets to their exclusive supplies of non-alcoholic, low alcohol and non-beer drinks are welcome. That is long overdue. As I mentioned in the previous debate, the Consumers Association estimates that the average price of orange juice in an English pub is £2 a pint.

Large profits are to be made on soft drinks, low-alcohol beers and non-alcoholic beers. Regrettably, the Government have caved in on applying the regulation to regional breweries with fewer than 2,000 units. The Monopolies and Mergers Commission believes that the provision should apply to outlets throughout the country, and I agree.

In my area in north-east England—I apologise for repeating what I said in the previous debate—the new regulations have motivated Scottish and Newcastle Breweries to dispose of its outlets over the level of 2,000. That means that, in many instances, people who drink in regionally owned pubs will have to pay more in the long term for soft drinks and low-alcohol beers. I am the first to concede that in my local area there is not the same demand for low-alcohol beer as there is perhaps in other parts of the country. However, that is no excuse for not providing protection. Consumers in the north-east and those who consume in other regional breweries should have the same rights as those who patronise pubs in national chains.

The Opposition welcome the provision to allow tied pubs to offer a guest beer if they wish. There is a danger that swap arrangements will develop between big brewers. That would undermine consumer choice and keep small cask beers from the smaller breweries out of pubs. As with the soft drinks regulations, regional brewers with under 2,000 units will be completely exempt from the provision and drinkers in north-east England, who are largely required to drink in the outlets of regional brewers, may not have the same choice as drinkers in other parts of the country.

The Opposition believe that the regulations are inadequate to break up what the MMC described accurately as a complex monopoly. Consumers and workers must have better protection. Because of the way in which the regulations have been presented to the House, we do not feel bound in the long term by their contents. We shall not finish with the matters before us this evening. They must be kept under constant review.

The Labour party believes that competition can be enhanced and security for the industry's work force achieved only if several other measures are taken. Further concentration of the big brewers must be stopped. Companies such as Anheuser-Busch and Heineken should not be allowed to plunder the United Kingdom market and would not be allowed to do so under a Labour Government. They would be subject to strict regulations which would be reinforced by the Office of Fair Trading —[HON. MEMBERS: "That is what this is all about."] The matter of the tie should be reviewed. We recognise the need for protection to allow smaller regional and local brewers to develop their business.

Mr. Roger Gale (Thanet, North): How would the hon. Gentleman effect the regulation under EEC regulations?

Mr. Henderson: The EEC has still to come to an agreement on how the balance will be struck between powers in Brussels, in Westminster and other powers. If we gave notice that a Labour Government would not allow further concentration of monopoly power in the brewing industry, that would be consistent with the arguments put forward in Brussels to improve competition not only in this country but throughout the European Community.

Non-brewing retail companies which might move into licensed retailing should similarly not be allowed to dominate the market and any ownership limits should also apply to them. Full statutory protection and the right to buy should be guaranteed for pub tenants. Tied arrangements for soft drinks, low-alcohol beers and non-alcoholic beers should be outlawed in all outlets. The Office of Fair Trading should be charged with constantly monitoring competition in the industry. A Labour Government would want discussions with brewers and their work force on how the British brewing industry can break into the European market. In 1988, we had a trade deficit in beer of £73 million.

If competition, consumers' choice, reducing prices, protecting jobs and building a sound future for the industry matter, the Government should further review these orders and face up to the real issues in the industry.

Mr. Jerry Wiggin (Weston-super-Mare): I am sure that it is no new commentary to my hon. Friends that when the two Front Benches agree, let the people of this nation beware for their freedom for their choice and, on this occasion, for their beer.

In case anybody listened to the speech of the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, North (Mr. Henderson) and interpreted it to mean that the Labour party was against the Government's proposals, I should point out that only one Labour Member has sat throughout the debate, recently joined by another. That shows the depth of feeling in the Labour party. I understand that there is to be no demonstration in the Lobby from the Labour party. It will be up to others to demonstrate that the Government are not going along the lines that we believe to be in the best interests of consumers.

The Transport and General Workers Union, which is deeply involved in the brewing industry, rightly and wisely made representations, as have non-political clubs. The hon. Member for Dagenham (Mr. Gould), who is in charge of these matters for the Opposition, however, believes that there is "a feeling" against the big brewers. In more than 20 years in this House I do not recall once having a letter complaining about a monopoly, near-monopoly or technical monopoly in beer. The reason is perfectly simple. If one does not like the house in which one finds oneself, one goes down the road to another. I do not understand how it has been possible magically to dream up the supposition of a monopoly in the supply of beer.

This is not an unimportant matter. Half of British adults go into licensed premises at least once a month and a third do so more than once a week, so if there were a monopoly we would surely have heard about it. We hear of many strange things, so I am sure that we would have heard about that. The Office of Fair Trading dreamed up this inquiry. There were no complaints on its table. It thought up the inquiry itself. Is Marks and Spencer to be investigated because it sells only St. Michael products in its shops? There is no monopoly there, of course, because one can go round the corner if one does not like its products or prices. So why was the brewing industry investigated in the first place?

If only one point emerges from this debate, I hope that my hon. Friend the Minister will take seriously the widely held view that the Monopolies and Mergers Commission is no longer up to the complex, important and elaborate investigations that it has recently been asked to carry out. I know one or two people on the long panel of those selected for these difficult hearings. They are busy, knowledgeable and intelligent people, but the sheer volume of material presented to the commission is a barrier to full understanding, and the salaries paid mean that the staff are generally young and inexperienced. The Government must grasp the nettle either by employing some seriously well qualified people to head up the teams in the MMC or think of going along the American road and passing proper legislation so that cases can be hacked out in the courts of this country. It is completely wrong and against the interests not just of big business but of the nation's shareholders and our national interest in Europe and the world for our great companies to be threatened by such a totally incompetent organisation. I say that advisedly because I can use this report as an example.

The MMC never understood the nature of the retail market in beer. It failed to recognise the importance of clubs. In one village in my constituency the chairman of the licensed victuallers association has a club opposite his pub. He tells me about the competition that the club provides for his pub. The MMC failed to accept the competition between outlets and the choice of beer available in many pubs. It never grasped one of the most elementary facts about the industry, which is that most profits are generated from retailing and not production. That did not take much finding out because it is in the annual reports of all the breweries which are public companies.

The MMC complained about regional price variations, but took no account of variations in land and house prices or labour costs. We who travel from our constituencies to London know about the differences in retail costs in different areas. We accept that everything is more expensive in the centre of London.

There is a wider choice of beer in the United Kingdom than anywhere else in the world. The United Kingdom industry is less concentrated than that of any other country, except possibly West Germany. Prices in United Kingdom pubs, relative to earnings, are lower than in bars elsewhere. Perhaps this is not a good example, but the other day in Rome I was charged the equivalent of £5 for a bottle of mineral water and a bottle of lager beer.

The MMC never accepted that vertical integration was the brewers' incentive to invest in retail premises. It became extremely concerned about the ability of new brewers to enter the market, but more than 50 per cent. of beer sales occur outside brewers' premises. The beer market, particularly in ale, is a mature market and its most successful new entrants have been internationally known brands advertised at great expense, as we all know as we walk through the streets.

I shall not dwell upon the Landlord and Tenant (Licensed Premises) Bill which has just received its Second Reading for fear of being ruled out of order. Pubs and their ties were created as retail outlets for the breweries. Tenants who entered pubs did so in the knowledge that they had a contract, just as a farm tenant takes on his farm knowing that he has a contract with his landlord. The tighter we make the protection for the tenant, the less we induce the landlord to enter into an agreement. I confidently forecast that the number of tenancies which continue on the same basis will start to decline rapidly as the legislation begins to bite.

I fully understand the concern felt about loan ties, but brewers are not banks and if they lend money for the improvement of a club, which is the usual form, it is not unreasonable that they should tie that loan to some interest of their own. That is a perfectly normal commercial transaction.

One of the more agreeable events of my annual calendar is to attend, as an honorary member, the annual general meeting of the Weston-super-Mare Conservative club. In recent years it has borrowed a large sum of money to purchase the property next door, to expand the club, open it up to ladies and generally prosper. It has become so prosperous that it has amassed capital sufficient to pay back the loan that it received under an agreement from a brewery. I listened with interest as the members argued among themselves about the desirability of paying off the loan and being able to buy cheaper beer, from a wider market, and I understand that desire.

Once the order is passed, however, clubs will be unable to obtain such loans as brewers will be less and less willing —because they will see less and less benefit to their businesses—to make such loans available to clubs. That is to be deplored. The publication of wholesale prices is an interference with trade which is unique to beer. I hope that the Minister will justify that in much more detail and with better arguments than the MMC has used.

The Supply of Beer (Tied Estate) Order contravenes all the Government's best principles. It is the most serious intervention in private property rights since Labour's Rent Acts. Many public houses will come on to the market. Given the size and location of some of those properties, many of them will cease to be licensed premises because their value as residential property will be greater. One more nail will thus be driven into the coffin of rural communities with low-profit pubs.

There has been a decline in the number of brewers. I have the figures for the past 10 years. In 1978 there were 143 breweries and in 1988 there were 107. That decline will be strongly accelerated because, as my hon. Friend the Member for Gillingham (Mr. Couchman), who knows more about the industry than most of us put together, said in his extremely well-informed speech, some of the big brewers will escape the effects of the order by selling their brewing interests. My guess is that before our time is up there will be only a small handful of breweries. That will be the result of the work of the Government—who have no business to interfere in a free market, as they constantly tell us in relation to other areas.

I am disappointed in my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, who brought a fresh mind to his new position. I had expected him to look at this matter and say that his best market philosophies were not in total agreement with those of his predecessor, but he did not take the view that he could reverse his predecessor's decision. I hope that I am not being too mischievous in reminding the House that his successor at the Department of the Environment took a completely different view about a well-known planning application at Foxley Wood. Perhaps in his heart my hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Corporate Affairs will have some sympathy with me in reminding the House of that.

If the theory of monopoly grabs the mind of any hon. Member, I ask him to remember that the position of the regional brewers is greatly strengthened by the order. The competition for the regional brewer, which so far has been the national houses—the big breweries—will be taken away. Out of that will come a greater strengthening of the position of individual regional brewers and that, of course, is at the heart of the reason why the Brewers Society has been so impotent in the matter. That was one of the few things on which I agreed with the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, North. It is a problem of all trade federations—and I have some sympathy for them—that they cannot meet the interests of all their members when there is conflict in the organisation.

Happily, for once there is a positive and easy solution to the problem and I regret that the Government have turned their back on it. It is to review the licensing laws, because it is the existence of those laws which allows the value of a public house to exist. The Government have said that in the next year or two they will review the licensing laws with a view to dealing with the number of licensed houses in an area. Meanwhile, this draconian measure is to be pressed through the House and in three years the Office of Fair Trading will look again at the brewing industry, casting yet another shadow over its future and its commercial development. Why on earth has it not been possible for the Government to say that they will review the licensing laws and consider the proposition that the licensing justices shall not take into account the number of licensed premises in an area? If the Government did that, competition would be rife and free and none of the problems mentioned today, which I do not think exist anyway, would have occurred in the first place.

The Secretary of State should change the decision. The Office of Fair Trading operated under a false premise, the Monopolies and Mergers Commission was incompetent, the Brewers Society was muted and the Government's final decison disastrous. I shall vote against the order.

11.9 pm

Mr. Graham Riddick (Colne Valley): Before I refer to previous speeches in the debate, I must tell the House how pleased I was to be in the Chamber when my hon. Friend the Member for Gillingham (Mr. Couchman) was telling us about his public houses. I have the great good fortune to live bang opposite one of them. It is appropriately called the Constitution, and it is a very attractive and popular-looking pub. A few yards further down the road there is another pub called the St. George's Conservative Club, so I am well served, although I am ashamed to tell the House that I have not been in either of them—[HON. MEMBERS: "Shame!"]. Hon. Members must understand that I am not a heavy drinker, and I have to spend so much time here, working hard.

The comments of the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, North (Mr. Henderson), when he referred to Conservative Members having vested interests, were somewhat discourteous, to say the least. I have no vested interest whatever. My only interest is that I used to work for a company that sold soft drinks to the licensed trade, so I know a little bit about the industry. I realise that that may be a disadvantage when one is talking about a subject, particularly if one is a Labour Member.

The speech of the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, North was one of the most blatant and cynical exercises in political point-scoring imaginable. He is totally out of step with his own Back-Bench Members.

Mr. Alistair Burt (Bury, North): What Back-Benchers are they?

Mr. Riddick: I am grateful to my hon. Friend for pointing out that there are not many Labour Back-Benchers in their places. I can count one, and I know that he has an interest.

Mr. Stan Crowther (Rotheram): In view of what the hon. Gentleman said, how can he say that my hon. Friend the Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, North (Mr. Henderson) is out of step with me, and I am the only Back-Bencher here?

Mr. Riddick: I have talked to the hon. Member for Rotherham (Mr. Crowther) about this issue on many occasions, and I am not sure that he altogether disagrees with some of the comments that I may make.

During the past few months, I have had conversations with Labour Members who were concerned about the possible repercussions of the proposals of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Market Access carried out a survey among right hon. and hon. Members, showing that only 23 per cent. of Labour Members believe that the MMC's proposals should be implemented in full. However, the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, North was criticising the Government for not implementing the MMC's proposals in full, and was suggesting a few months ago that the Government should go further.

I take very little notice of what the hon. Gentleman has to say, particularly his comment that a Labour Government would stop the likes of Ansheuser Busch from getting a foothold in the British market. The proposals will lead to that outcome—they will open the door to the big foreign predators—but he does not seem to realise that.

The brewing industry provides 450,000 jobs in the United Kingdom. It is a significant contributor to the Exchequer and it has invested billions of pounds in pub refurbishment in recent years. There is more variety in the outlets, a larger number of brands are sold—there are more than 1,000 brands of beer in the United Kingdom—beer prices are lower and the average number of brands per bar is greater than in any other industrialised country. Consumer surveys have shown up no great consumer dissatisfaction with the current pub scene. In short, the British pub and the British brewing industry is a success story. How does the British establishment react? As is often the case, we try, perhaps unwittingly, to undermine and even to destroy it.

These orders will severely undermine the delicate and complex balance in the industry. The vertical integration which the order is designed to upset, and which the Office of Fair Trading and the MCC seem to dislike so much, has led directly to the provision of a wide range of brands and the brewers' high level of investment in retail outlets.

The order encourages brewers to entice customers to drink more of their beer, not by making their pubs and amenities more attractive, but by spending more on advertising a few, select big brands.

Nevertheless, the order represents an enormous improvement on the MMC's recommendations. I pay tribute to my right hon. and hon. Friends on the Front Bench who have shown that they are prepared to listen to some of those who understand the industry. They have made some sensible alterations. As I know them both to be firm believers in the free market, I have no doubt that, had either of them been in the Department during the spring, the original report would have ended up where it most certainly belongs—the dustbin.

I hope that I have not embarrassed my hon. Friend the Minister. He will of course deny emphatically what I have said. Unfortunately, the previous Secretary of State, who we imagined believed in the free market, embraced a report the recommendations of which amounted to a massive and unwarranted intervention by Government in the workings of the free market.

The report raises some questions about the brewing industry and about the role of the MMC and the Office of Fair Trading. After an investigation lasting two and a half years, how could the commission have got it so wrong? Its proposals were based on a number of false premises, as my hon. Friend the Member for Weston-super-Mare (Mr. Wiggin) said. It wrongly concluded that most profits were made out of brewing, not retailing. The report failed to understand that consumers are more interested in the amenities on offer than just price. The report almost totally and, it seems, deliberately ignored the clear lessons to be learnt from international experience, which shows clearly that, where brewers have no tied outlets, the market is dominated by a small number of massive concerns.

As my hon. Friend the Member for Faversham (Mr. Moate) said in the Second Reading debate, the report would take us down the route followed by Australia some 10 years ago. The MMC dismissed the results of that experience, which was that the market became dominated by two major players and prices rose way ahead of inflation. The MMC recommendations were condemned by those whom they were intended to help. The original guest beer provision which was designed to help small brewers was condemned by small brewers. The proposed ending of loan ties to the free trade was condemned by those in the free trade. How could the MMC get it so wrong? Was the report plain flawed or was it drawn up with one purpose in mind—to destroy the vertical integration which is the central structure around which the brewing industry is built?

I have heard from more than one source of the Office of Fair Trading's dislike of vertically integrated industries. Sir Gordon Borrie, the director general, has confirmed to me in a letter that he was consulted about the MMC's recommendations when they were being drawn up, so it is a little surprising that the OFT, which has great experience, did not draw attention to some of the obvious flaws in some of these recommendations.

The failure of the MMC and the OFT to grasp the obvious solution to any so-called problem that might exist in the market—to limit the number of houses that any brewery could own in any geographical area—suggests to me that those responsible for the MMC's report were determined to arrive at a preconceived set of conclusions regardless of the realities of the industry and so long as it undermined the vertical integration that they disliked so much. They failed to tackle regional monopolies. There seems to have been dogma at work.

My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State should initiate an investigation into the conduct of the MMC's inquiry. The orders will lead to some breweries divesting themselves of their brewing interests and to more money being spent on brand advertising and less on pub refurbishment and improvements. I fear, too, that the price of a pint will increase, not decrease. If my worst fears come to pass, the MMC will have much to answer for. I am minded not to support the orders.

Mr. Ivan Lawrence (Burton): I declare an interest as the proud representative of the great brewing centre of Britain. The constituency is proud of the contribution to its daily life for over a century of such great brewing names as Bass, Ind Coope, which is part of Allied Lyons, and Marston's which is one of the great regional brewers.

I congratulate the Government on a shrewd piece of business management in scheduling the debate, when the House has been hammered by world-shattering events over the past few weeks, when we have faced the demands of television and the urgent requirements of our families to see us before we slip into the Christmas mode, and when as a result the House is emptier, especially on the Opposition Benches, than it would have been. It is as shrewd a piece of business management as could have been engineered in the interests of business efficiency. When my hon. Friend the Minister says, "The hour is late, these measures are not all that important and really, chaps, it is time for us to pack up and get home," I can appreciate how clever the Government have been.

So it comes about that, at the fag end of the pre-Christmas part of the Session, we are debating changes as potentially damaging to the British drinker and the production of the British pint as it is possible to conceive in a free society. If the Monopolies and Mergers Commission had had its way, the only brewer left in Burton would have been the Heritage brewery, which, although an excellent institution, is a working museum. However great its output and however delightful its product, it hardly satisfies the nation's thirst in the same way as the great breweries of Allied Lyons, Bass and Marston.

The MMC's report was a production so manifestly damaging and absurd in its major pronouncements that the industry could hardly believe its ears when Lord Young of Graffham, in a moment of inadvertence, which he must have lived to regret, said that he was minded to accept it. So great was its authors' commitment to the removal of restrictive practice, wherever it is, however it is and whenever it is, that they seemed never to begin to grasp some of the essential truths about the brewing industry.

They did not understand that commercial rents are not always being charged for public houses. The country is full of small pubs that could not exist if commercial rents were charged. Why is that? Because the brewers can get their profit from volume sales of their own beer, and there is no need to make money from rents. Small villages often have uneconomic village pubs. They are of great charm and beauty, existing in some of the most beautiful parts of Britain, but their existence could hardly be justified by turnover. They are encouraged to continue by the large breweries, which consider them publicity outlets—perhaps loss leaders—or perhaps quite simply can afford to carry their losses.

The Monopolies and Mergers Commission did not understand that beer prices are lower in tied houses than in free houses because there are lower rents and cheaper loans and the prices are kept down by the tie. In my constituency town of Burton upon Trent we visited a number of pubs and found that in almost every case the price of beer in tenanted houses was lower than that in the free houses.

The commission did not understand that the good pubs, and there are very many of them, provide a far wider choice of beers, produced by major brewers, than can be found anywhere on the continent. The French do not come to Britain expecting a limited supply of beer or a limited choice, and neither do the Italians. We could go anywhere on the continent and find nothing like the opportunity in Britain to choose between the different sorts of beers produced by the same brewer, or even different brewers. The sheer number of small pubs in the streets of towns and villages in Britain provides the competition for which the MMC thirsted, and it is far greater than in any street in any town or village on the continent where the tie does not exist.

The MMC did not understand that, if we force major brewers to choose between being manufacturers of beer and being retailers, because they have shareholders they have to choose to be retailers. That is where all their capital is tied up. One major brewer said to me, "We have £30 million tied up in our manufacturing estate, but we have £750 million tied up in our retailing estate. If we are forced to choose, we will shift our production abroad or import beer that is manufactured abroad.", One of the primary fears about the MMC report was that it would cause a serious decline in the manufacturing of beer in Britain.

The MMC did not understand that, in any event, 50 per cent. of beer sales are made not in public houses, but in supermarkets and other outlets. It is no longer true to say that one must go to a public house for beer.

Nor did it understand that the commitment to a certain brand of beer is often very strong. The nearest to a riot that I have experienced in my constituency office on a Saturday morning was when Bass and Allied decided to swop some pubs in Burton. The appalling thought occurred to some of my finest constituents that they might have to walk a little further down the road to get the Double Diamond they loved. They would not put up with a change of product in their local public house. That sort of commitment is peculiar to beer and has nothing to do with the choice that the economists say the customer craves.

As a result of all those misconceptions of what are fundamental truths about how the British brewing industry works and how the drinking people respond to it, the Monopolies and Mergers Commission was driven to some truly absurd conclusions.

It recommended the forced sale of private property, some 22,000 pubs, as tyrannical a measure as could be found in any Socialist regime in eastern Europe, and one which is totally unacceptable to a Britain of the Thatcher era or even to the era that preceded it, when the Prime Minister was my right hon. Friend the Member for Old Bexley and Sidcup (Mr. Heath). He also would never have tolerated such tyranny.

[Mr. Ivan Lawrence]

The commission recommended a low ceiling on the number of tied outlets which, as my hon. Friends have already said and I will not labour the point, would inevitably have forced down sales and forced up closures, reduced public houses and restricted competition and the availability of beer to the British drinker.

The commission threatened the disruption of clubs. They are competitors to pubs. They provide not only a high proportion of the draught beer that is drunk in Britain, but they do so at low prices. It proposes to draw a distinction between the major brewers and the regional brewers. So in parts of Britain, such as Wolverhampton, the regional brewers would be permitted to operate every pub, because the regional brewers are not a major brewer, and the major brewers would not be allowed to operate such a monopoly—an absurdity. Like so many of these economic rules stretched to a completely alien environment, the logic of it leads to the most absurd results.

The commission proposed to restrict the outlets of a brewer's product—an interference with the working of the free market. That is what we have in Britain at present. My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State, the most outstanding spokesman of the free market on the Government Front Bench, choked on his words. He could hardly sit down quickly enough. His introduction of the order took about two and a half minutes flat. No wonder he was ashamed of what he was saying. All his life he has fought for the free market and that is the very thing that the commission's proposals will interfere with.

I do not seek to delay the House a moment longer than is necessary to try to convince hon. Members of the nonsense of the measures. The question is whether the Government have seen enough sense to cut, to trim, to neuter, the commission's harmful recommendations. I am driven to the conclusion that they have not. They have hardly begun. They think that they have come to some kind of compromise and it is true that the compromise will cushion the blow to some extent.

The Government have done good things such as the Landlord and Tenant (Licensed Premises) Bill, to which the House has just given a Second Reading. They have done things that are not unacceptable, such as the introduction of a guest beer, as though there are many pubs that do not now have guest beers. That is another misunderstanding of the commission. Practically every pub has some kind of guest beer, if it is only Guinness. I do not think anyone will mind too much about the breaking of the tie of the soft drinks.

But the fundamental matter is the forced closure, the forced transfer, the restriction of outlets, the restriction of choice, the restriction of competition within Britain where we understand how beer is brewed, the reduction in the access which ordinary drinking people in our society will have. I see one curled up in the corner there. The hon. Member for Ashfield (Mr. Haynes) is a great tribute to the drinking masses. When the drinking people of Britain wake up tomorrow morning and hear what we have done in their name tonight, they will throw up. I am driven to the conclusion that the Government have done nothing near enough to trim away what is bad and absurd in the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report.

I listened to the comments of the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, North (Mr. Henderson)—who has left the Chamber to have his goodnight tipple, or whatever—concerning jobs. The Opposition Benches are crowded with hon. Members who are concerned about the possible job losses inherent in stripping down the major brewers' contribution to employment. One is talking not just of the people working in the breweries but of those employed in pubs and, in my own constituency, in the factories that produce brewery equipment. We must consider all those matters. I welcome back to the Chamber the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, North. I hope that he sustained himself with Burton ale.

Under these orders there will inevitably be a concentration of a smaller number of brand products produced in a high volume. A limitation on choice will be the result. There will also be a restriction on the capital investment in public houses. The price of beer will rise, and although the market may assuredly be open to the foreign brewer, he cannot claim to produce beer of the quality that we in Britain know how to produce.

To argue, as the Opposition have done, that the Bill represents a craven collapse to the brewers' lobby or to the Brewers Society is as much nonsense as we have heard from the members of the Opposition Front Bench on any subject so far in this Session. The very opposite is true. The Government are instead guilty of a craven collapse to the views of some very strange reporters in the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

I conclude by reminding the House of the minority report. Mr. Mills commented:

> "I consider my colleagues' recommendations to be far more drastic than is necessary and indeed that they could worsen the problem . . . I consider that the recommendations are unnecessary and indeed could lead to a reduction of competition and less consumer choice."

My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Corporate Affairs, the great stalwart for consumer choice and for more competition, should take heed of those words.

> "Many [tenants] would presumably become unemployed . . . in my view the proposed changes might even lessen that competition . . . and . . . the other recommendations . . . would be an unnecessary leap in the dark, could be counter-productive and damaging to the structure of the industry and consequently be against the public interest. The tied estate and the loan tie should be left to continue as they are and the brewing industry should be left to change and develop as it is already doing."

I pay tribute to the major brewers in my constituency who have done wonders in improving their pubs. With the help of flexible licensing hours, they have been encouraged to introduce whole families into the environment of the traditional English pub. The standard of behaviour has also improved. At the very moment when the British brewing industry and the British pub are beginning to expand and improve, and to be greater than they have ever been, we are going to break the glass and dash it in the face of the consumer. That is a very odd way for a Conservative Government to behave.

There seems to be no sense in these measures that this Government of all Governments are introducing. They will damage one of our great industries, reduce competition, weaken quality, and drive up prices. If there is a Division at the end of these proceedings, I shall go into the lobby and vote against the Government.

Mr. James Couchman (Gillingham): After that eloquent speech by my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Burton (Mr. Lawrence), I shall not detain the House for more than a few minutes.

Although the interest that I declared earlier is still relevant, let me put it on record that I am no longer a licensee, having passed the joint licenseeship of my six houses to a fellow director. It happened quite recently, and I overlooked it in my point of order.

It is the Supply of Beer (Tied Estates) Order that mainly concerns me, as I believe that it will wreak the most damage on the traditional pub estate. My hon. Friend the Member for Weston-super-Mare (Mr. Wiggin) was particularly worried about rural pubs, and other hon. Members have also mentioned them, but I believe that if brewers are forced to choose between putting a substantial number of their pubs at arm's length and selling them off they will choose the latter course. They will begin to sell valuable high street properties, which will almost certainly be worth more if sold for some other use than they are as public houses, and not only rural communities but many urban ones will lose their pubs.

Mr. Gale: As a friend, colleague and fellow Kent Member, my hon. Friend will know only too well that many rural pubs in Kent are already faced with exactly that prospect, standing as they do in as much as three quarters of an acre of development land. The order will result in villages in Kent and throughout the country having no pubs at all.

Mr. Couchman: My hon. Friend's remarks encapsulate the problem in the south-east, particularly those areas where land values and property prices are high. That is where the most pubs will probably be sold.

Although my hon. Friend the Minister has managed to modify the extent to which certain classes of licensed premises are caught by the Act, he has failed to address the problem of full on-licence premises that are not public houses. I refer particularly to hotels, in which the proportion of turnover representing beer sales is extremely small. I believe that there is also a problem relating to bingo clubs and the like, although I am not personally acquainted with it.

I have one more question for my hon. Friend, concerning the estate that the brewers will be allowed to retain under tie. New developments are taking place: in the old Chatham dockyard in my constituency, a complete new community will be built up through such a development, which includes residential, office, leisure and commercial elements, and the addition of a public house —perhaps two or three—will undoubtedly seem an attractive proposition. What will be the position of the major brewers, who may have the money to invest in the new properties? Will they have to put further houses at arm's length to compete? It would be ridiculous, surely, if the overall pool of licensed premises were increased by those houses.

My next point is very parochial and vested: it relates to the guest cask-conditioned beer that those of us who are the tenants of six major brewers will be allowed to stock. Personally, I consider that my hon. Friend was right to exclude the regional brewers, although we must remember that the biggest is nearly as big as the smallest of the big six. The regional brewers, especially the small ones, had a legitimate fear that their pubs would be flooded with major, heavily advertised national brands of lager if they had had to have a guest beer in those houses.

There are problems that the orders do not address. The orders speak of additional rents that may be required by brewer landlords so that the loss of income shall be made up, but they do not address problems such as the use of equipment. The near-mutilation of counters is involved in the installation of new facilities for the supply of cask-conditioned beer. The installation of a pump is a substantial modification and that problem should be addressed. Refrigeration equipment is used to cool beer and, in its modern form, is a far more complex piece of equipment than it used to be. Can the guest cask-conditioned beer be served through that or will additional equipment have to be installed?

There is also the question of advertising and promotion. I got out my six agreements—in five different forms—and the one point that they have in common is that I am not allowed to advertise or promote within those pubs other people's products. What provision does my hon. Friend propose to make for the advertising of guest beers? What is more natural, if a minor or regional brewer manages to get its product into a major brewer's pub, than to want to promote it in some way? Those questions need to be answered.

We are now seeing no alcohol and low-alcohol beers in pubs—the so-called "NABLABs"—on draught as well as in bottles. If we are to free the tie for NABLABS, it will require additional dispensing equipment which will have to go on to the counter. That will bring into question the brewer-landlord's ownership of those counters and their use for dispensing.

There is a myth about the mineral tie. I am not tied on minerals for any of my public houses. By and large, the major brewers do not tie for minerals. It is the regional brewers which still tie for minerals and they are excluded from the order, which makes it a bit of a nonsense. Those are the questions—which I accept are technical and parochial within the industry—that my hon. Friend has a duty to the House to answer if the order is to have any substance.

I want to say little about the Supply of Beer (Loan Ties, Licensed Premises and Wholesale Prices) Order. The publication of wholesale price lists with discounts that are available will do nothing other than to allow brewers to publish their maximum wholesale prices. Those maximum wholesale prices will undoubtedly be exacted from the tenanted trade, so the tenanted trade—the weakest purchasing power—will be unable to use the benefits of the publication of those price lists.

If I had more time, I should like to say more to the hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, North (Mr. Henderson) about mineral prices. I can justify the prices that are charged for minerals in public houses, but perhaps we shall have another occasion on which to discuss that.

11.47 pm

Mr. Alistair Burt (Bury, North): I seek to detain the House for no more than two minutes. I do not wish to argue the merits of the MMC report, which has been dealt with sensibly by several of my hon. Friends who are better qualified than me. I wish to make just one comment about the Supply of Beer (Tied Estates) Order.

I ask my hon. Friend the Minister not to create a level playing field—an overused metaphor these days—but to ensure that the tenants of regional breweries have the same slope on the counter as colleagues who belong to larger breweries in relation to the tie for minerals and ciders. As my hon. Friend the Member for Gillingham (Mr. Couchman) properly pointed out, it is nonsense that the regional breweries have been excluded from the provision which removes that tie for the larger brewers. The tenants of those regional brewers in my constituency would welcome the opportunity for that tie to be swept away.

I ask my hon. Friend the Minister to look at that point in Committee and to accept certain evidence on it.

Mr. Redwood: A good number of points have been raised. Of course, Opposition Members have raised points in a diametrically opposite way from those raised by my hon. Friends who are worried about the impact that this measure may have upon the brewing industry. My hon. Friends the Members for Weston-super-Mare (Mr. Wiggin) and for Gillingham (Mr. Couchman) and my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Burton (Mr. Lawrence) suggested that my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I might have had some difficulties with the order. I remind them of my personal history in this connection.

I seem to remember that, as a Back-Bench Member, I signed the early-day motion in the name of my hon. Friend the Member for Colne Valley (Mr. Riddick) when the MMC report first came out, and when the then Secretary of State said that he was minded to implement the report in full. I felt, as my hon. Friends feel today, that that was an extremely large attack on property in the private sector, which I could not support. When the proposals were substantially changed on 10 July so that mandatory sale of pubs was no longer to be imposed upon brewing companies, I withdrew my name from the early-day motion, and I am glad that I did as Opposition Members might otherwise have been unkind enough to point it out. That reflected my then judgment that a good compromise had been reached between the recommendations of the MMC and those who did not wish to see any change at all in the industry after the identification of a public interest detriment with respect to competition.

I cannot say that I accept the criticism that I, the apostle of competition and free markets, am eating all my own words, because I am responding to an MMC report which identified defects in competitiveness in an industry and I am making proposals today which go some way to remedy the identified defects. Some Labour Members have criticised me, saying that I have not been competitive enough in the proposals that I have brought forward.

My hon. and learned Friend the Member for Burton was concerned that this measure is not the craven collapse to the brewers that Labour Members are suggesting. He felt that we would have been well advised to take the advice in the minority report. In some ways, one can say that the Government did that, as our proposals are nearer the views of Mr. Mills than to the recommendations of the main report in terms of the treatment suggested for the industry in the orders. I remind my hon. and learned Friend that the minority report also found a public interest detriment. The author of the report did not say that there was no case to answer. He said that he thought that the remedies recommended in the main report went too far. That is the Government's view, too, and that is why the 10 July statement, as amended in response to subsequent consultation, has taken the form of the current orders and not the more extreme form of remedies suggested in the original MMC report.

My hon. Friend the Member for Weston-super-Mare thought that there was some inconsistency in the Government's treatment as between these measures and Foxley Wood. There is a missing link in his argument, which does it some damage. When my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State arrived at the Department of Trade and Industry, the Government had already had second thoughts on the MMC report and, in the light of consultation and of feelings in the House, had come forward with the excellent compromise proposal that has been embodied in the orders, with some minor amendments in the light of further consultation. That was not the case when my other right hon. Friend arrived at the Department of the Environment, where the report had been through only one stage. The Secretary of State then said that he was minded to accept it, and consultation revealed that that was not a good idea. I hope that my hon. Friend the Member for Weston-super-Mare will appreciate the nuances and see that there is a distinction.

My hon. Friend the Member for Gillingham asked a number of detailed questions. He asked whether high street pubs rather than rural pubs might be sold and whether they might pass out of the pub business altogether. I do not think that there will be a huge change between the position after these orders have gone through and the position that already exists. Brewers are becoming much more aware of the valuation of their retail estates, and they are making a distinction, for management purposes, between running the property and running the brewery. That was quite clear in the trends in the industry before the orders came forward. Therefore, I do not think that there is such a sea change as the hon. Gentleman is suggesting and I do not hazard a view as to which types of pubs are more likely to be sold or to pass out of pub use altogether.

Mr. Moate: My hon. Friend is suggesting that there is already a trend in the way in which the brewing industry is structured and that there has not been a significant sea change, but others would suggest differently. We are already seeing evidence of major and significant changes as a direct result of the MMC report. If the trend appears to be hastening and we are to see a substantial divestment of properties—my hon. Friend has said that he was against the original proposals because of the implications for enforced sales of properties—what proposals does he have for altering and relaxing these proposals, perhaps to undo some of the damage that people may suffer?

Mr. Redwood: There is all the difference in the world between forcing people to sell pubs and giving them choices to deal with the problem of the tie which is what the report and these orders address. There is evidence that pubs are coming on to the market, but there is also evidence that before the orders were laid before the House and before the MMC report was published major brewers were looking hard at their property values and were beginning, for management purposes, to segregate the returns on rented property from those on brewing.

My hon. Friend the Member for Gillingham asked about new pubs and new developments. If a national brewer wishes to buy and open such pubs, it will be governed by the dynamic formula. There are several ways in which that brewer could acquire a new pub and still meet the target of the dynamic formula by, for example, adding one untied property for every tied property or by making other changes in the estate. Because of the way in which the dynamic formula works, people are not prevented from adding pubs to their chain, but the numbers of tied and untied are influenced under the formula. I am glad that my hon. Friend feels that the Government were right to exclude the regional breweries. There is logic in that case, as the hon. Gentleman described.

The questions of equipment, advertising and new agreements which might be necessary to implement some parts of the provision are commercial matters that will be settled by negotiation between the parties. It would not be right for the Government to have a view on how those negotiations should be conducted or how they may turn out.

To my hon. Friends who are worried that we may have gone too far against the brewers and who fear that there may be a threat to the British pub, I say simply that that well-known independent publication, "The 1990 Good Pub Guide", passes into the realm of political and industry comment when it concludes:

> "Our research shows that the MMC proposals to break the big brewers' complex monopoly pose no threat to the future of the British pub as a thriving institution."

As my hon. Friends may know, those responsible for the publication have conducted an extensive survey of all pubs. If we are concerned about the charge brought by the Labour party that there may not be enough competition in the proposals, Labour Members can listen to my hon. Friends who feel that too many changes may be in view.

Another independent source—a leading stockbroking analyst in the City, with a good knowledge of the brewing industry—has stated:

> "What will probably happen as a consequence of the latest recommendation is that the proportion of UK beer sales sold in some sort of free market place could rise from 54 per cent. towards two thirds, and it is possible that the proportion could rise even as high as 70 per cent. . . . Our view is that the UK brewers will find the new environment considerably more challenging."

That may well be a sensible conclusion to have reached on the evidence.

Mr. Henderson: Will the Minister give a commitment to the House that he will ask the Office of Fair Trading regularly to investigate this matter and report to him?

Mr. Redwood: I give no specific assurance of the kind sought by the hon. Gentleman, but it is the duty of the Director General of Fair Trading to keep all matters relating to competition under some kind of watching review. It is always open to the hon. Gentleman and his hon. Friends to make representations if they feel that major problems have been brought to their attention.

The hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, North (Mr. Henderson) said that he was disappointed that I had been so brief. I was simply trying to give my hon. Friends adequate time to make their points and myself adequate time to reply to them. I was disappointed in his speech because I came expecting a major parliamentary occasion. I had read "What's Brewing". It said that the Labour party planned to force a new major brewing debate. [Interruption.] It gets better. This great debate, manfully conducted by one Back Bencher, one Front Bencher and one silent Whip was going to be a huge occasion. "What's Brewing" tells us that

> "the aim is to combine with pro-competition Conservative MPs, force the Government to withdraw the orders, and come back with something more impressive."

Where are the pro-competition Conservative Members wanting to unite with Labour on the grounds that the orders do not go far enough? I have not heard any of them speak. If anything, Conservative Members feel that the Government have been a little too firm with the brewers. Where are the serried ranks of Labour Members who are to bring about this amazing challenge to Her Majesty's Government? If they are not testing brews in the pubs of London, they are probably tucked up in their beds where all sensible people should be at this hour. Perhaps the hon. Gentleman's interview in the CAMRA publication is a case of him playing to the camera. Perhaps in future when he is about to savage the Government he will ensure that all his hon. Friends are on a one-line Whip. That seems to be the form here this evening.

The hon. Member for Newcastle upon Tyne, North also says that I stand accused of lacking enthusiasm for competition. I will defend myself with some spirit against that rum charge. Much of what I have said and written shows that I am not lacking in enthusiasm for competition, and much of what the Government are doing shows that they are committed to a firm competition policy. They are much more enthusiastic than the Labour party was when in office and than it advises us to be in individual decisions and problems brought before the House.

I promise the hon. Gentleman that there will be competition. The policies that he faintly outlined tonight would make matters worse rather than better. Competition will be seen in the creation of more free houses, the guest beer provisions and the breaking of the tie on soft drinks and low alcohol beverages. The publication of price lists, which he welcomed, will help competition, particularly from tenants and smaller purchasers who feel that they do not get a fair deal. I am surprised that he attacks the regional breweries. An important part of rigorous competition in the brewing industry is to give the regionals the chance to expand and produce their alternative wares.

I hope that micro-brewers—the very small brewers about whom we heard earlier—will flourish. I am sure that there is scope for the good niche brewers whose products the public will savour and like to buy. There will be more chance for the public to buy such products under the arrangements set out in the orders.

Some of my hon. Friends accused the MMC of bad workmanship and my hon. Friend the Member for Weston-super-Mare said that the MMC should be strengthened in various ways. I remind him that the MMC already has a large number of experienced panel members from industry and commerce. They are there to provide a leavening of experience and expertise based on their business to go alongside the work of technical experts on the staff. I hope that he will bear that in mind when considering the way in which the MMC operates. He also asked whether there had been any case where wholesale prices had been revealed. Proceedings are usually undertaken as a result of inquiries. Two examples that come to mind are British Gas prices and the price of plasterboard. We are not singling out the brewers.

The Government are reviewing the licensing system for the very reason identified by my hon. Friend the Member for Weston-super-Mare. One of the underlying reasons for the power in the market place identified in the report is licensing. But licensing also has benign consequences. There is a good reason why pubs are licensed, as all hon. Members will accept. The Government are aware of the problems. That is why the matter is being reviewed to see whether there need to be changes in the light of the problems identified by my hon. Friends and others.

This has been a good debate. It has revealed that the House is split between Labour Members—who want the orders toughened up and the brewers taken further to task—and my hon. Friends who feel that there has not been enough care taken in responding to the brewers' concerns. In that connection, the brewers have made many good representations in recent months and the orders now represent a sensible conclusion to those negotiations with several important modifications that I hope my hon. Friends will welcome.

It is important that the Government have taken out of the equation food chains which sell some beverages, perhaps alcoholic ones, as part of their general food service. They are not offering a general pub service to the public coming in off the streets. That was a mistake in the earlier versions and I hope that my hon. Friends will agree that it was a good idea to remedy that problem.

The reason why the Government have kept the full on-licence as the criterion is that a definition of a pub is that its service involves serving a drink and nothing else to people coming in off the street. That is the problem that the MMC identified, which is why the orders are drafted as they are. That does not make a huge impact on most of the chains concerned because the number with hotels of the size for which exemption is sought are few and the number of hotels is also few, so it does not have a material impact on the total number of pubs covered.

I hope that the House will vote for the orders, reject the Opposition's prayer against the one order and support the Government's positive resolution in favour of the other. The orders represent a good deal for tenants, for customers and for the brewing industry in the light of the MMC report, and I hope that my hon. Friends will support them.

Consumer Protection

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Alastair Goodlad.]

12.17 am

Mr. David Porter (Waveney): I shall start by thanking Mr. Speaker for giving me this opportunity to raise the subject of consumer protection. I also want to thank and pay tribute to Miss Susan Fleming, a third-year politics major student at the university of East Anglia. As part of her course she has been assigned to work on a project of my choice for one day a week this autumn term, and I am grateful to Miss Fleming for her research. I am grateful to my hon. Friend the Minister for giving me time to air some of my views. I also thank most warmly the staff of the National Consumer Council who have provided helpful assistance.

In order to make consumer protection a reality and not a pious intent, I call for the establishment of a CIA in Britain, a consumers' interests authority. Although I am reluctant to advocate more bureaucracy, I think that, parallel with the green revolution and in tandem with individual choice and responsibility, we need to go into the 1990s with strengthened consumer protection.

The proposals by the National Consumer Council for a consumer guarantee on cars and household goods costing over £50 go a long way towards providing the consumer with real choice and protection in the marketplace. That guarantee concept is at the heart of customer confidence.

Our trading standards service generally does a good job. Sometimes its members are limited by resources, and sometimes by their brief, the criminal side of the standards enforcement, which leaves a gap on the civil side, which has no protection.

An authority or agency such as the one that I propose would include the parameters of the trading standards service to some extent, some parts of the Office of Fair Trading, weights and measures, and the various schemes for independent arbitration and would reduce some of the work load of the small claims courts.

Local authorities should decide their priorities on trading standards. Consider the differences in spending per head on consumer protection last year—it ranged from £2·05 in Warwickshire to 64p in Lancashire. The projected range for the current year is from £2·62 in Warwickshire to 89p in Lincolnshire.

Local democracy apart, consumers are entitled to a more certain sign that local authorities, as enablers, are meeting their commitments. I accept that the figures could, to some extent, reflect the inefficiency of the statistical service. I do not want to go too far down that road, and talk about those figures, but they illustrate my point.

We hear daily about the rights of voters, the rights of women, the rights of workers and even the right to die. Surely, as consumers, we must expect a minimum agreed standard of manufacture and service. That is not too much to expect, is it? I do not think that an agreed standard that manufacturers of goods and suppliers of services have to meet is too much to expect.

Let us take the famous case of Mr. Bernstein. Some 27 days and 140 miles after he bought his Nissan Laurel car, the engine seized. He was forced to take the garage that sold it to him to court, but the judge told him that it was too late for him to reject the car, and that he was only entitled to compensation.

The Supply of Goods (Implied Terms) Act 1973 gives the consumer the right of redress against the retailer if goods are faulty, but it is flawed, because the consumer is deemed to have accepted the car or the goods after an unreasonably short time. Therefore, the consumer loses the right to get his or her money back.

Let us take the case of Miss Cox and Mr. Flowerday, two of my constituents, who started a small business under the Government's enterprise allowance scheme. They bought a brand new Fiat for the business. From day one it was clearly a dud. Eventually, after endless repairs, an independent assessment and much citing of the Sale of Goods Act 1979, a solicitor advised them to accept £100 in compensaton, because they could not afford the court procedures. Why should they have had to go to the expense, the delay and the inconvenience of going to court? If they could have gone to a consumer interest authority, the court element might not have been necessary, but if it had been, the authority would have handled it on their behalf.

Under current legislation, a contract is established between the retailer and the customer. Last Session, I introduced a Ten-Minute Bill—the Public Service Contracts Bill. I sought to lay down the right to compensation when public services such as British Rail, the Post Office, and local authorities failed to deliver an agreed minimum standard, if possible a legal minimum standard. I still believe that that is right, and that it should apply to the sale of goods in the same way.

The Retail Consortium hopes to be able to support the concept of consumers' guarantees, a subject on which much has been said lately. It wants satisfied customers. After all, business depends upon satisfied customers. In millions of daily transactions, best practice prevails, and can be demonstrated to do so. Of course there are cowboy sellers, and unreasonable customers, but retailers are keen to protect consumers' rights.

The Retail Consortium is part of a monitoring group on misleading prices, which was set up by the Minister, who, I think, prefers a code to regulation when there is detailed agreement within a trade and with enforcement agencies. Perhaps the role of the DTI in those matters needs defining.

The convention that the retailer is liable stems from the clout that he presumably has with his own suppliers and the difficulty of the individual taking on the large manufacturers. Consider the Philips fan-assisted oven that did not reach roasting temperature unless the fan was disabled. It was a straightforward design fault, but Philips denied responsibility and passed the buck back to the retailer. The customer was left out of that entirely.

We also have the case of the Honda motor bike, the brake of which would seize in snowy weather—with obvious consequences. Honda did not see it as a manufacturing problem, but blamed the British practice of salting roads in icy weather.

They may be isolated and extreme cases, but an enforcement agency could make even giant manufacturers more responsive to consumer demands. We should never under-estimate the power of consumer demand. The marketing of products in aerosol cans, for example, is being changed out of all recognition because of it.

I believe that there is a growing tide of demand for a legally enforced, reasonable minimum standard for goods and services. In Britain, up to 6 million people a year fail to get adequate satisfaction when something they have bought goes wrong. It is not just the purchaser who loses out. As consumers, we all pay for the production and marketing of shoddy, if not useless, goods.

A potential buyer looking at a line of washing machines or fridge-freezers has nothing to tell him or her how much faith the manufacturer has in the reliability of his product or how efficient the after-sales service will be. That means that British manufacturers are missing a vital element that would help them enormously.

The NCC consumer guarantee would cover the entire product for 12 months at least, and any fault would be repaired at no cost to the consumer, provided that the consumer had not caused it. If the item were not repaired within five days—three days for cars—the consumer would be loaned a similar one, or compensated for loss and expenses. A fault would be put right in three attempts and the product would not be out of use for more than 30 days in any 12-month period, or there would be a choice of a refund or replacement.

The idea is not to cause manufacturers to mark the goods with a guarantee, but to oblige those without it to be clearly marked "This has no consumer guarantee." What an incentive for improvement that would be. What an act of faith it would be for quality manufacturers. What a death sentence it would be for most of the cowboys.

Details are subject to debate, but what about the principle? Even then, things may still go wrong. We have independent arbitration schemes, and banks and building societies have ombudsmen. There is talk of the tourist industry having an ombudsman. Ombudsmen have the good will of the industry and the support of the public. We should have a high street ombudsman for the consumer in the street.

Sweden has an independent arbitration scheme in its Public Complaints Board. It deals mainly by post with civil claims, at very little public cost. The board gives an advisory judgment which, if not accepted, is sent to arbitration. Names and details are widely publicised, which has proved effective. Power of public embarrassment is an additional tool on the consumer's side. Sweden's system is less bureaucratic than our small claims court, and I hope that it commends itself to the Minister.

There is a model in the United States. Most states have a utilities commission with power to refer to the district attorney complaints of violation of legal service standards. In effect, the district attorney can prosecute on behalf of individuals, and most get compensation out of court as a result. It is a principle that can be adapted here—legal minimum standards without being too complex, expensive or off-putting.

A CIA would be customer-friendly and be seen as such. It would present not an obstacle course in the minefield of consumer legislation but a powerful ultimate sanction in a society in which the Government have given the individual choice and responsibility.

I ask two things of the Minister. First, he should give periodic remits to the NCC. It has independence written into its constitution, but it is funded by taxpayers. Will he ask it to explore the issue of redressing the high street and how it may be made more effective? Secondly, if the hon. Member for Clwyd, South-West (Mr. Jones) or any other hon. Member brings forward a consumer guarantee bill as a private Member's Bill, will the Government maintain benevolent neutrality or support the guarantee concept, even if they want to amend the details?

I shall end by paraphrasing Lord Palmerston who, you will remember, Mr. Deputy Speaker—from history lessons, not from memory—said in 1850:

> "a British subject, in whatever land he may be, shall feel confident that the watchful eye and the strong arm of England will protect him".

I say that, in whatever high street, market stall, corner shop or out-of town shopping centre, and whatever service a consumer pays money for, he shall have the strong arm and watchful eye of the CIA—the consumers' interests authority—and the consumers' guarantee available to him.

12.30 am

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Industry and Consumer Affairs (Mr. Eric Forth): I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Waveney (Mr. Porter) on securing the debate. The House should be grateful to him for giving us an opportunity to discuss an important subject that represents a major part of my portfolio and for drawing our attention to his constituents' concerns. I acknowledge the presence of the hon. Member for Clwyd, South-West (Mr. Jones), who has taken the trouble to be in his place, to whom my hon. Friend referred. Also present is my hon. Friend the Member for Great Yarmouth (Mr. Carttiss), who has shown an interest in these matters and who is with his parliamentary neighbour this evening to give him support.

I shall examine any proposals that come forward in the form of a private Member's Bill, or any other form, to give effect to the National Consumer Council's recommendations. I shall do so with a critical eye because I am concerned to ensure that any proposals are workable and not over-bureaucratic. My hon. Friend the Member for Waveney prays in aid the United States, and I admire that country more than most hon. Members. I am aware, however, of the differences between the United States and the United Kingdom. I would be reluctant to take this country down the rather litigious route that the United States has taken in many instances. The costs of remedy often exceed the benefits either to consumers or producers.

My hon. Friend the Member for Waveney rightly laid stress on the importance of giving protection to the consumer. That is a principle to which the Government and the Department of Trade and Industry have always been fully committed. I remind my hon. Friend of a passage in my Department's White Paper of January, 1988:

> "In consumer protection, the policy emphasis will reflect the Government's belief that the best form of protection comes fom consumers making well-informed choices and acting in their own interests. To achieve this, information can be more effective than regulation. However, where the case is made out for regulation on safety or other grounds, the Government will not hesitate to act."

That remains our position.

The consumer already enjoys the protection of a comprehensive and well-developed framework of legislation, backed by effective and equitable mechanisms for redress. The Government provide support to the National Consumer Council and the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux, which provides an important source of advice, information and research to consumers.

Legislation, and even the new type of bureaucracy that my hon. Friend the Member for Waveney has suggested, is not necessarily the answer to every perceived problem. New legislation takes time and can often be over-bureaucratic, and that is a danger that exists with my hon. Friend's suggestion. Voluntary response by industry is often quicker and more effective. Consumers have benefited considerably from industry initiatives to develop codes of practice and to provide mechanisms for the resolution of disputes, driven, as ever these matters are, by the need for it to compete in the marketplace and to attract and retain the confidence of consumers in the products that it is offering. An effective consumer policy is a combination of statute law, self-regulation and information.

My hon. Friend the Member for Waveney has spoken about the importance of protecting consumers' rights when goods are bought. The Sale of Goods Act 1979 sets out what the consumer is entitled to expect and provides him with remedies if things go wrong. The Act is one of the most fundamental pieces of our statute law, covering everything, as has been said, from a box of matches to a nuclear submarine. I do not know how many claims have been made under the heading of the second item, but it is one that we like to quote.

No statute can have been more frequently effective—it is usually unseen in its operation—in everyday life. If the average shopper made only three purchases a day, for example, the number of daily transactions governed by the Act would be over 100 million. Under the Act, traders are required to sell goods which are of merchantable quality, which are fit for the purpose and which correspond to their description. Traders cannot exclude these provisions from their contracts with consumers. The Act allows the buyer, if he acts within a reasonable time, to reject goods which are not of merchantable quality and to receive back the purchase price.

If a latent defect comes to light later, after the goods have been in use for some time, the buyer is still entitled to claim damages and this right is not subject to any time limit except the normal rules which apply to the limitation of actions. In awarding damages, the courts would take into account the use the consumer had had from the goods.

Mr. Martyn Jones (Clywd, South-West): This is crucial to the idea of the consumer guarantee mentioned by the hon. Member for Waveney (Mr. Porter). The problem with the Sale of Goods Act is that rejection is the immediate remedy. In the case of a product that is not repairable, which the Minister mentioned, there is only action at law for repair. If a consumer guarantee were enshrined in law, the product would carry a guarantee for replacement or a refund within a statutory period. That would provide a right for consumers that they do not currently enjoy under the Act. The Minister is missing the problem with the Act in dealing with a rogue product.

Mr. Forth: I am aware of the hon. Gentleman's interest in and knowledge of the matter. He and I discussed it recently, and no doubt will do so again, as I am sure I will also discuss it with my hon. Friend the Member for Waveney. I do not claim that the Act is perfect. The hon. Gentleman knows that for some time we have wanted to update it. Neither do I claim that all is perfect with guarantees. However, I am not yet convinced that the National Consumer Council proposal is workable or ideal. I hope that, between us, we can find the best way forward. I shall strive to do so, and I am sure that the hon. Gentleman will do so.

The Law Commissions' review of legislation governing the sale and supply of goods, published in 1987, made a number of recommendations that have been accepted by Government. The main recommendation is that the old requirement of merchantable quality should be replaced with an up-to-date term that recognises the aspects of quality—something dear to the hon. Gentleman's heart—which are important for consumers as end-users of the goods in question. The new Act will spell out that the relevant aspects in determining satisfactory quality include fitness for purpose, the appearance and finish of the goods, their freedom from minor as well as major defects, their safety and their durability. The Government have announced their intention to introduce legislation to implement those changes, which will clarify and strengthen consumers' rights.

Some have argued that consumers' rights should go further. The hon. Gentleman and my hon. Friend both said as much. The argument is that the right to reject and to obtain a refund should be a long-term one and should not necessarily expire after a reasonable time. They also argue that latent defects may come to light only afer some time in use. My hon. Friend referred to the famous—some would say notorious—Bernstein case of the motor car that broke down after a limited period.

The House should be aware that the Law Commissions gave very careful consideration to all the arguments when they considered this issue, but they recommended against creating a long-term right of rejection. They argued that such a right would create major commercial uncertainties and be extremely unfair to sellers. Consumers who bought a defective product would, in effect, get free use of it until the defect appeared. The seller would then be obliged to take back a used product and to refund the purchase price in full. Suppliers would be obliged to hedge against the commercial uncertainties of such a regime and the unwelcome implications for consumer prices. I should want to avoid that, and so, I suspect, would other hon. Members.

My hon. Friend welcomed the National Consumer Council's recommendations on consumer guarantees. He urged me not just to consider them, but more or less to adopt them. I have already given them careful consideration, and there is much in them that I want to think about positively. I agree that guarantees should state their terms clearly and in plain English and I could support legislation that would make such guarantees legally enforceable. I fully endorse the view that any guarantee must be additional to existing statutory protection.

But I do not accept that it is necessary to lay down detailed terms or procedures which would attach to specific products covered by consumer guarantees. To do that would be needlessly bureaucratic and would constrain rather than encourage competition on the terms of individual guarantees, and it may result in some manufacturers withdrawing existing guarantees which offer different terms, which could have the effect of leaving consumers less protected than before.

The Sale of Goods Act provides the consumer with a clear right of action against the supplier, who is normally a retailer. The NCC proposals would involve the manufacturer, who is not normally a party to the contract.

[Mr. Forth]

There is a risk that that would result in confusion in some disputes, which might undermine the consumer's rights against the retailer under the Sale of Goods Act.

I would welcome measures that would promote greater transparency of information about guarantees and wider and more open competition in their terms, but the NCC proposals would need more development along those lines before they would attract Government support.

My hon. Friend raised the issue of legal redress in consumer disputes and the problems associated with seeking that redress in some circumstances. Earlier this year, the Lord Chancellor announced, in response to the civil justice review, the introduction of a programme of reforms, designed to improve access to justice by speeding up, simplifying and reducing the cost of civil proceedings.

The Courts and Legal Services Bill permits the Lord Chancellor to replace the present system of jurisdiction with more flexible criteria for allocating business between the High Court and the county courts. This will enable more cases of higher value to be handled and tried in the county courts. Procedural changes, such as a requirement for early exchange of information, the introduction of new pre-trial rules covering more informative pleadings, interrogatories and admission of facts, and the creation of a new system of court control could and should also assist smaller plaintiffs to pursue claims more effectively.

A further development arising out of the civil justice review is the raising of the upper limit for small claims proceedings from £500 to £1,000. I appreciate that that may not be relevant in the case that my hon. Friend cited, but it will be a substantial increase in the facility given to consumers to benefit from the simplified proceedings.

My hon. Friend referred to the problems that his constituents had with the purchase of a motor vehicle. The code of practice for the motor industry is an important supplement to the general law covering the sale of motor cars and it is a good example of self-regulation by the responsible sector of an industry. It provides consumers not only with minimum standards in the sale, repair and servicing of motor cars, but also with a mechanism for resolving disputes that does not entail having to go to court.

The code has the support of the Director General of Fair Trading, who also has a role in monitoring it and keeping it under review. Any proposals for changing the code are a matter betweeen the director general and the trade associations concerned, and any complaint about a member failing to abide by the code should be directed to the trade association and also to the Office of Fair Trading.

A code of practice is not intended to be a substitute for legislation, and it does not act as such. Nor is it designed to be enforced in the same way as legislation is, but codes of practice have distinct advantages over statutes. Because they are voluntary, they represent a genuine desire on the part of the traders concerned to go beyond the letter of the law in their dealings with consumers. Codes are also more flexible than statutes and can be interpreted more liberally and modified more readily. Furthermore, codes such as the motor code provide consumers with valuable alternative facilities for resolving disputes, which may be quicker, cheaper and less intimidating than going to court, particularly in the case of larger claims.

I have tried to answer most of the points raised by my hon. Friend. I have also tried to deal with some of the matters that have been considered by others, including the hon. Member for Clwyd, South-West. I hope that my hon. Friend the Member for Great Yarmouth, who has been listening, has been persuaded that the Government are aware of the concern shared by many hon. Members in this most important area. We shall always look positively at suggestions that may come forward in the shape of legislation or in any other form. But, above all, our concern is to ensure that we combine what is effective and practical while resisting what may be bureaucratic. In striking that balance, we shall provide the best and most effective protection for the consumer.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at seventeen minutes to One o'clock.

PRAYERS

[MR. SPEAKER in the Chair]

PETITIONS

Broadcasting (Deaf People)

9.34 am

Mr. Jack Ashley (Stoke-on-Trent, South): I wish to present a petition that is part of a national appeal by 150,000 people who believe that, without adequate subtitling and sign language, deaf people are deprived of the most modern and powerful means of communication for information, entertainment and education. They are right. My good and hon. Friend the Member for The Wrekin (Mr. Grocott) and some of his constituents wish to be associated with the petition, which reads:

> The broadcasters are not providing complete access for deaf television viewers, for example, with subtitles or sign language; the number of viewers affected are at least four million; deaf viewers, as equal members of the general public, are entitled to equal access to television programmes.
> Wherefore your petitioners pray that your honourable House will ensure that legislation be passed placing an obligation on television channel operators to make their programmes more accessible to deaf people by using Teletext subtitles, sign languague or other means and to reach complete coverage by a fixed date.
> And your petitioners, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

To lie upon the Table.

Ambulance Dispute

9.36 am

Mr. Speaker: The next petition is to be presented by the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook). I understand that there are a large number of signatures—up to 100 boxes. In order to protect the business of the House, which today is precious Back-Bench Members' time, I have had to place some limit on the number of supporting pages that can be brought into the Chamber, but no doubt the hon. Gentleman will inform the House of the total number of signatures that the petition bears.

Mr. Graham Allen (Nottingham, North): On a point of order——

Mr. Frank Cook (Stockton, North): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. Speaker: No. I shall take the petition first.

Mr. Robin Cook (Livingston): I wish to present a petition on behalf of ambulance staff, which is signed by 4·5 million electors. Yesterday, when it was presented to myself and my right hon. Friend the Leader of the Opposition, it took six stretchers to convey the boxes into the House. Without questioning your ruling, Mr. Speaker, its effect is that the pile of boxes presented in the Chamber this morning is but a quarter of the total number of signatures collected in the petition.

It is the largest petition presented to Parliament since the new rules were devised 150 years ago. The petition reads:

> that the Ambulance dispute is in need of urgent resolution. Wherefore your Petitioners pray that your honourable House urge the Secretary of State for Health to use the good offices of ACAS and agree to arbitration in order to end this unnecessary dispute: and urge the Secretary of State to provide a pay formula for the Ambulance Service similar to that for the other emergency services.

The record size of the petition is a powerful statement of public support for the dedication and courage of ambulance staff. It shows the public dismay that they are still denied arbitration. Its presentation is timely in that it comes just before the busiest week in the year for this vital emergency service.

I appeal to the House and to the Government to listen to this magnificent plea by the public, who need their ambulance service, for a just and urgent settlement to the dispute.

To lie upon the Table.

Mr. Frank Cook: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Allen: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: No, I will deal with the other petitions first, and then I shall take points of order.

Mr. Allen: The points of order deal with——

Mr. Speaker: Order. I call Mr. Roger Sims.

Mr. Roger Sims (Chislehurst): I beg to present a petition.

Mr. Allen: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I have said already that we must deal with the other petitions first.

Mr. Allen: But, Mr. Speaker, the boxes of petitions are already being taken away.

Mr. Speaker: But the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) has placed his petition in the Bag.

Mr. Allen: My hon. Friend has only placed——

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am well aware that there will be points of order, and I shall deal with them shortly. I call Mr. Sims.

Broadcasting (Deaf People)

9.39 am

Mr. Roger Sims (Chislehurst): I beg to present a petition from Mr. Alan Roberts, himself profoundly deaf, which is part of a national petition presented by the Deaf Broadcasting Council. Its terms are identical to those of the petition already presented by the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Ashley).

To lie upon the Table.

9.40 am

Rev. Martin Smyth (Belfast, South): I beg to present a petition signed by Mrs. G. Menhinnick of Aberdeen and by 4,000 other people from places stretching from Aberdeen to Armagh, and from London to Londonderry, pleading for the cause of the deaf.

To lie upon the Table.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing (Moray): I present two petitions that are also part of the national campaign by the Deaf Broadcasting Council. One petition has more than 1,000 signatures and originates from my constituency, Moray, and from others such as the constituency of my hon. Friend the Member for Banff and Buchan (Mr. Salmond) and of the hon. Member for Gordon (Mr. Bruce), who is present in the Chamber. The other petition has some 4,000 signatures, which were collected in Kent, Surrey and Sussex. I acknowledge the honour of presenting the petitions to the House, and, like the petitioners, humbly pray that the cause that is the subject of the petitions, will be recognised by the Government.

To lie upon the Table.

9.42 am

Mr. Graham Allen (Nottingham, North): I wish to present a petition from the people of Nottingham, North and from others nearby in respect of the television service provided to the deaf. The petition reads:

> The people of the constituency of Nottingham, North and elsewhere showeth that the broadcasters are not providing complete access for deaf television viewers—for example, with subtitles or sign language. The number of viewers thus affected is at least four million. Deaf viewers, as equal members of the general public, are entitled to equal access to television programmes. Wherefore your petitioners pray that your honourable House will ensure legislation be passed placing an obligation on television channel operators to make their programmes more accessible to deaf people by using teletext, subtitles, sign language, or other means, and to reach complete coverage by a fixed date.

It is a great privilege for me to present that petition to the House.

To lie upon the Table.

9.44 am

Mrs. Rosie Barnes (Greenwich): It gives me great pleasure to present a petition on behalf of more than 100 residents of Greenwich and their concerned relatives and friends, who have an interest in deaf people—who at present feel that they are excluded from participating fully in television viewing. My petition is part of the general petition being presented today.

I share the concerns of my constituents. Deafness is an isolating disability. Not only does the condition itself present special problems, but attitudes to deafness because of its invisibility make those problems much worse. I share the concerns expressed by my petitioners and by other right hon. and hon. Members, who hope that the necessary amendments will be made to the Broadcasting Bill.

To lie upon the Table.

Points of Order

9.45 am

Mr. Speaker: I said earlier that I would take points of order after petitions. I call Mr. Graham Allen.

Mr. Graham Allen (Nottingham, North): My understanding is that the number of signatures to the petition concerning the ambulance dispute that were brought into the Chamber represented one third or less of the total number of signatures that have been collected on street corners and outside supermarkets throughout the length and breadth of the land. At school, many of us learned of the effect of petitions in securing the vote in this House, vividly illustrated by coachloads of petitions arriving here. That may even have been one of the reasons why the rules were changed. Nevertheless, petitions are, and always have been, one of the ways that ordinary people can make their views known to this House. They have not been given an opportunity properly to do so this morning.

Mr. Speaker: No, that is not so.

Mr. Allen: Two thirds of the people who signed the petitions have been denied the right——

Mr. Speaker: Order. I cannot have that. How many boxes of signatures were brought into the Chamber is irrelevant. The right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) presented a petition on behalf of 150,000 people, but he held only a few of its pages in his hand. In terms of our procedure, it is not necessary visibly to demonstrate the number of signatures collected by bringing them all into the Chamber. What is relevant is what is stated in the petition, and the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) explained that his petition was signed by 4·5 million people.

Mr. Allen: With the greatest respect, Mr. Speaker, the physical size of the petition and its visual impact—[HON. MEMBERS: "Ah!"] Yes, I am aware that Conservative Members would not like to see televised a large petition requesting a settlement of the ambulance dispute. Nevertheless, the size of that petition is an important factor. It is one of the largest ever presented to this House. To remove the rights of the majority of the signatories to that petition to have their petition brought into this Chamber is detrimental——

Mr. Speaker: Order. I must stop the hon. Gentleman, because he is taking up the time of Back Benchers. It is not a question of a visual impact. We must differentiate between a demonstration of the kind that the hon. Gentleman mentioned and parliamentary practice. It has never been our practice to have that kind of demonstration. We proceed by debate, not be demonstration, and in presenting his petition, the hon. Member for Livingston stated the very large number of signatories to it.

Mr. Frank Cook (Stockton, North): I do not challenge your ruling, Mr. Speaker, but—[Interruption.] If some of the yobs on the Conservative Benches listened rather than sneered, the House might make better progress.

As a member of the Select Committee on Procedure, I should like to raise with you, Mr. Speaker, one or two points and ask you to reflect upon them. You said, Mr. Speaker, that it is your duty to protect the business of this House. I agree. You know, Mr. Speaker, that there is no one more anxious to assist you in that than myself, because you have frequently referred to some of my methods as maintaining good order and discipline—not always by the most popular means.

I put it to you, Mr. Speaker, that the business of the House includes the presentation of petitions in full, if that is the wish of the petitioners. The points made by my hon. Friend the Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) concerning the size of the ambulance dispute petition and the effort that has gone into collecting those signatures nationally are most important.

As to the dissent expressed by Government Members in seeking not to allow the size of the petition to be visually demonstrated, I can only agree with the view expressed by my hon. Friend the Member for Nottingham, North. If we allow television cameras in this Chamber, the electorate should be allowed to see what happens in this Chamber and——

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover) rose——

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am constantly enjoined—not least by the hon. Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner)—not to take account of the television cameras. Am I not?

Mr. Skinner: I will tell you in a moment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Well, I am constantly enjoined not to take account of the television cameras, but it is true that the television cameras should now show what happens in the Chamber. Nevertheless, I am concerned—as is the hon. Member for Stockton, North (Mr. Cook), as a member of the Procedure Committee—to protect the interests of the whole House. The wise thing would be for the Procedure Committee, of which the hon. Gentleman is a distinguished, important and influential member, to consider the matter in terms of the future. I ask the House to reflect on what might happen to our procedures if the presentation of large petitions became a regular practice.

Mr. Tony Benn (Chesterfield) rose——

Mr. Harry Barnes (Derbyshire, North-East) rose——

Mr. Frank Cook rose——

Mr. Edward Leigh (Gainsborough and Horncastle) rose——

Mr. Speaker: I call Mr. Leigh.

Mr. Edward Leigh (Gainsborough and Horncastle): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. It would seem from the words of the hon. Members for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) and for Stockton, North (Mr. Cook) that, although the presentation of petitions is one of the most cherished rights of Back Benchers, certain hon. Members are more concerned this morning with providing an event for the media than with seriously influencing the House.

Mr. Tony Benn (Chesterfield): Further to that point of order, Mr. Speaker. The House exists to protect the rights of the people of this country, who are not expected to modify their demands in the interests of parliamentary business on any one day. Your judgment, or decision, and subsequent announcement, Mr. Speaker, sets an absolute precedent in the history of parliamentary procedure.

When petitions were initiated, it no doubt annoyed the King very much that he had to listen to what was said by his subjects; he probably regarded that as a great embarrassment. The right was won, however, although it fell into desuetude because no one took any notice of petitions. People popped them into the box and told their constituents that they had done so; sometimes the petitions were presented in the House.

There is no shame in referring to the televising of the House: Hansard also covers its proceedings. Now, for the first time, people can see the link between what they do and what happens here, and if that link is broken on the ground that it interferes with the order of business, it is an affront to parliamentary democracy.

Mr. Speaker rose——

Mr. Benn: Let me finish, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The right hon. Gentleman is going well beyond the bounds of what he should say in a point of order; however, he may continue.

Mr. Benn: I do not wish to give offence to you, Mr. Speaker; I wish to assert an ancient right. The fact is that three quarters of a million people who signed that petition believing that it would be presented physically to Parliament have been told today that, because of the business of the House, it cannot be brought in. If 4·5 million people had signed a petition in Prague or Warsaw, all the news media in Britain would have featured programmes about it for a week.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Benn: But, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. Speaker: No. The right hon. Gentleman, whose historical memories and judgment we all respect, should reflect on the nature of the ancient custom of presenting petitions. I am seeking to protect that. Whenever what may be considered an abuse occurs, new rules are introduced.

Mr. Allen: Presenting a petition is not an abuse.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I agree, and am anxious to preserve this ancient practice, but it has always been the custom to place petitions in the Bag, and it is patently not possible to place 100 boxes of petitions in the Bag.

Our practice today is really a symbolic procedure. As I have said, the number of petitions brought into the Chamber is irrelevant. The televising of the House may well provide a visual demonstration of the procedure, but the hon. Members for Livingston (Mr. Cook) and for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) correctly stated the number of signatures, and the number of boxes that is brought in does not really matter.

Mr. John Bowis (Battersea): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I have the highest regard for the tradition of presenting petitions in the House—and, indeed, for the ambulance men whose action prompted today's petition. Is it not the case, however, that you are faced with the difficult task of balancing the rights of petitioners with those of hon. Members? It is particularly regrettable—and, I am sure, would not be appreciated by the ambulance men—that, on a day devoted to Back-Bench motions, the Opposition Front Bench should try to take time from Back Benchers.

Mr. Skinner: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I think that it is all a matter of judgment. The television argument can be looked at both ways. An experimental period lasting a few months has now begun, after which the House will make a decision. Surely this is neither the time nor the place for a decision to cut the number of petitions about such a sensitive issue as the case of the ambulance crews, which is a political hot potato both inside and outside the House.

Contrary to what you said in response to my right hon. Friend the Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn), the fact that the cut has happened during the experimental period is, in a sense, due to the intrusion of the television cameras. It has been said that business has been disrupted by petitions, and such procedures can inconvenience many people, but I would argue that private Bills offend many people and could also be regarded as an intrusion. Indeed, I have said as much many times.

There are two reasons why today's judgment should not have been made. First, the cameras are here and it looks as though you, Mr. Speaker, have acted in a certain way because they are here; secondly, this was not just a run-of-the-mill all-party petition, but one that represented the views of the Opposition versus those of the Government.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Let me repeat—I think that the whole House will understand the point—that this is a debating Chamber, where we argue out our differences. That is the object of the petition presented by the hon. Member for Livingston this morning. He put his case very strongly, and I have no doubt that the 100 boxes contained a great many, but not all the signatures: that is not in dispute. I repeat, however, that it is not absolutely necessary to bring all of them into the Chamber. The hon. Gentleman placed the top sheet of his petition in the Bag, which is proper parliamentary procedure.

Mr. Neil Hamilton (Tatton): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. As you know, today's business is a motion on an important topic, set down in my name. I thank you for the protection that you have attempted to give me—and, through me, all Back Benchers whose day for debate this is—against what is evidently an organised attempt by Opposition Members to frustrate the order of business.

It is extraordinary that Opposition Members should apparently be far more interested in debating whether a few dozen cardboard boxes should be brought into the Chamber than in debating the future of Socialism. [Interruption.]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have not yet called the hon. Member for Tatton (Mr. Hamilton) to make his opening speech, but I hope to do so shortly. What is his point of order?

Mr. Hamilton: I merely wished to thank you for protecting me, and for protecting other hon. Members on both sides of the House.

Several Hon. Members rose—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think that it would be wise, and would protect the procedures of the House, if this whole matter of petitions were drawn to the attention of the Procedure Committee. I am very willing to be guided by the Committee, which is already considering the number of petitions that may reasonably be presented on any one day. I think that its scope should be widened to enable it also to consider the number of boxes that may be brought into the Chamber on any one day.

Mr. Paul Boateng (Brent, South): On a separate point of order, Mr. Speaker. Would it be in order for me to draw to the House's attention the death last night of my predecessor, Laurie Pavitt? He first came to the House in 1959 as Member for Willesden, West and subsequently served as Member for Brent, South until the last general election. He was a doughty champion of the National Health Service, and will be remembered with warm affection by hon. Members on both sides of the House. His life represented all that is best in Socialism—peace, justice and joy. He was a warm and kind man, and I know that the House will wish to pass on its condolences to his widow Rose and his two children.

Mr. Speaker: The whole House will subscribe to what the hon. Gentleman has said about his predecessor. whose friendships spanned the Chamber, and who was greatly respected here.

Mr. Harry Barnes (Derbyshire, North East): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Is it on a different matter?

Mr. Barnes: It is on the matter mentioned earlier.

Mr. Speaker: No, I shall not take any more points of order on that.

Future of Socialism

9.57 am

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I beg to move,

That this House takes note of the incalculable cost in human lives and poverty imposed upon the world by communist regimes and socialism in all its forms; welcomes the collapse of communism in Eastern Europe and the withering away of socialism in Western democracies; and recognises the important role played in these processes by Her Majesty's Government, firstly through its determination to maintain strong defences, thereby creating the conditions for political change in Eastern Europe, and, secondly, through the success of its free market policies in inspiring socialist parties in the East and West to abandon much of their ideology in order to secure peace and prosperity.

I think that there will still be time for me to finish my speech, despite the attempt at organised disruption with which our proceeding began this morning.

Mr. Frank Cook (Stockton, North): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. As a conscientious Member of the House, I resent hearing efforts by my hon. Friends and myself to protect the rights of the electorate described by a Conservative Member as "organised disruption."

Mr. Speaker: Order. Who said that? [HON. MEMBERS: "He did".] Order. Today is Friday, and it is a private Members' day. I am not disposed to allow organised disruption of any kind. I should tell the House that I have not selected the amendment in the name of the right hon. Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn).

Mr. Tony Baldry (Banbury): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I am taking no more points of order.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for protecting me also from my hon. Friends.

I begin my speech on a sombre note, introduced by the hon. Member for Brent, South (Mr. Boateng), but the gentleman whose memory I should like to salute today is that of Dr. Andrei Sakharov, whose death was announced on the radio this morning. Dr. Sakharov represented the indomitable spirit of individual liberty. He survived decades of attempts by a monstrous tyranny to crush him and the principles of freedom, democracy and liberty for which he stood. In that, if in nothing else that I shall say, I hope that I carry the whole House with me in saluting his memory and sending our best wishes and condolences to his widow and to all those for whom Dr. Sakharov, in the Soviet Union and throughout the world, was an inspiration.

Sixty-six years ago, another Back-Bench Member drew first place in the ballot for private Member's Bills—Mr. Philip Snowden, the first Labour Chancellor of the Exchequer. He introduced rather a different kind of motion on Socialism from mine. It drew attention to what he called the failure of capitalism. I have decided to introduce the debate to exorcise the notion that Mr. Snowden introduced all those years ago. His biography gives some of the background to that debate.

Most interestingly, it shows that in the days before television there was considerable interest in the proceedings of this House. Mr. Snowden said:

"The interest in the debate I was to raise was . . . intense, both in Parliament and in the country. For a week before it took place the newspapers had paragraphs and articles every day, and members of Parliament were inundated with requests from their constituents for tickets for the Strangers' Gallery. Socialists from all parts of the country were ready to come to London for this historic occasion".

I regret to say that there seem to be very few Socialists, particularly Labour Members, who have been prepared to come to London today to participate in this important debate. There are only five here today—admittedly, five distinguished Labour Members. It is a matter of particular regret that only such a small number seem to be interested in the future of the grand political philosophy in which they believe.

Mr. Snowden then said:

"On the day the debate was to take place the Outer Lobbies were crowded with men and women who had come down in the vain expectation that by some fortunate accident they might be able to get admission to the House."

In consequence of the intense interest in the debate, Mr. Bonar Law, who was then Prime Minister, was asked if he would give further time for the debate to be continued and properly discussed. I am happy to say that in those more enlightened days, he gave a whole day of Government time to debate the future of Socialism in this country.

Mr. Tim Boswell (Daventry): I was disappointed by something that my hon. Friend said at the beginning of his remarks before the first interruption and by the general tenor of his argument so far. Surely, this message should not take very long to get over. Why does my hon. Friend need additional time to debate what is already on the way out?

Mr. Hamilton: I have to admit that it is difficult to get the message across, although not to my hon. Friends. Despite decades of experience of Socialism and its failure in this country, it does not yet seem to have got through to Opposition Members that what they believe in has been a disaster for the people of this country and for people throughout the world. I hope that the way in which I wish to rationalise the experience of the last 50 or 60 years will at last convince them that their true path lies in crossing the Floor of the House and joining us.

Mr. Edward Leigh (Gainsborough and Horncastle): Before my hon. Friend leaves the subject of Philip Snowden, does he recollect that he betrayed Socialism by joining the national Government in 1931, and that he died a convinced capitalist?

Mr. Hamilton: I am sure that that point will appeal to at least two hon. Gentlemen and one hon. Lady on the Opposition Benches. The hon. Member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson), who is sitting on the Opposition Front Bench, may take a different view, because I imagine that he intends to tread a rather different path

I wondered who might answer the debate from the Treasury Bench. Which Minister, I asked myself, is responsible in our Government for the future of Socialism? There is, of course, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, whose Department is responsible for endangered species. Would it be my hon. Friend the Member for Grantham (Mr. Hogg) whose responsibility within the Department of Trade and Industry is for matters concerning intellectual property? However, I did not think that that would be quite apposite in this instance. Then there is my hon. Friend the Member for Wokingham (Mr. Redwood), another Minister in the Department of Trade and Industry, whose responsibility is for bankruptcy. If we had conflated those two responsibilities, one of them could have come here today with responsibility for intellectual bankruptcy and adequately answered this debate.

However, I am delighted to see that my right hon. Friend the Member for Mole Valley (Mr. Baker) is on the Treasury Bench—the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, the county of the red rose. I am certain that that is the reason why he has been selected, in addition to his formidable debating abilities, to be with us today.

I am sure that you will agree with me, Madam Deputy Speaker, that a crisis exists in the Communist world and, I contend, in the Socialist world more widely. A few redoubts of the old regime still exist. Romania comes instantly to mind. Unfortunately, I no longer have quite enough time to emulate President Ceausescu's great six-hour oration before the latest party congress. However, I may be able to say as much as he did, if my hon. Friends will control themselves and not give me the 67 standing ovations that President Ceausescu won on that occasion.

In addition to Romania, there are Chesterfield, Bolsover, Liverpool, Walton and a few other redoubts of Socialism left in this country. I think it is fair to say that the international Socialist movement has suffered a stroke and that the left side of its body is completely paralysed.

The hon. Member for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Heffer) recognises that that has happened in the Labour party. In the edition of Militant which was published on 1 December —a newspaper that is still widely read in Birkenhead and other parts of the country—the hon. Gentleman is quoted as saying that the Labour party has swung to the Right. He complains of > "the abandonment of genuine socialist concepts, a trend which has developed throughout the European socialist movement".

I am delighted to have confirmation of the first part of my motion.

Mr. Eric S. Heffer (Liverpool, Walton): I have been saying that for years.

Mr. Hamilton: The hon. Gentleman says that he has been saying that for years. The hon. Gentleman has been instrumental in teaching me that, in truth, the Socialist movement has collapsed and is in terminal decline. I have the greatest possible respect for the hon. Gentleman. I am sure that, in this also, I carry all my hon. Friends with me when I say that he is a valued Member of the House. I was very sorry to hear that he has decided to retire at the next general election. In the terminology of Marxism, the hon. Gentleman is a worker and an intellectual. He is certainly not, in my opinion, a peasant. There are those on that side of the House to whom that description might apply, although happily none of them has thought fit to be with us today.

As for the extent to which the change in the Labour party to which the hon. Member for Walton referred has taken place, I began by musing on which Minister would be on the Treasury Bench to answer the debate. A more interesting question was who would be sitting on the Opposition Front Bench to speak for Socialism. We might have chosen many candidates for that august position. The hon. Member for Hamilton, who no doubt wandered in out of curiosity to see what would happen today, found himself unwittingly in the position of having to give us the Labour party's views on the future of Socialism.

Perhaps it is only a coincidence, although it may not be, that he is the Member of Parliament for the Hamilton constituency. [Interruption.] My hon. Friend the Member for Watford (Mr. Garel-Jones), who is rarely heard in this House so I am delighted to refer to his remark and get it on record, says that that is a tribute to me. I am delighted that there is now a shadow spokesman for Hamilton. I hope that we shall see the hon. Gentleman very much more frequently in that position.

Not everyone accepts that Socialism is collapsing. I refer to the debate in the House on eastern Europe on 1 December in which a number of distinguished speeches were made by Opposition Members, including the hon. Member for Walton. The hon. Gentleman does not believe that Socialism is in a state of collapse, as he believes that all the countries in eastern Europe that are now in crisis are not Socialist countries. He said:

> "Many of us who are, I hope, genuine Socialists, have never believed that what has existed in the Soviet Union is a Socialist society."—[Official Report, 1 December 1989; Vol. 162, c. 978.]

He considers that neither the countries behind the Iron Curtain—East Germany, Poland, Bulgaria, Hungary, Romania, the Soviet Union—nor those countries where moderate Socialist Governments have abandoned their theories, such as New Zealand, Australia, Spain or West Germany—I could list a catalogue of them around the world—are Socialist countries.

So it appears that the countries that we have accepted as Socialist or Communist are not Communist because they have never been Communist, and those countries which have never had Communist Governments are not Socialist because they are capitalist. So the hon. Member for Walton imagines that there has never been a true democratic Socialist country. I believe that there are good reasons for accepting that view, because wherever voters are given the opportunity to reject Socialism, they do so, and that is now happening throughout eastern Europe.

The pursuit of abstractions such as those that no doubt will be voiced today by Opposition Members has produced all the tyrannies that are now throwing off their shackles. It was said of Robespierre that mankind was everything to him and men were nothing. Despite the humane and tolerant attitudes of individual Opposition Members, those ideals have produced some of the more bestial tyrannies in the world in the past 200 years.

It is an inconstestable fact that there are no refugees from liberal capitalist countries such as ours or any of the other countries that have followed our example. All refugees come from countries that in some shape or form are in thrall to some variety of Communism or Socialism. I hope that Opposition Members now reproach themselves for the line that they took in the 1960s and 1970s when, however inadequately and efficiently, we were attempting to create some form of democratic or liberal capitalist system in Vietnam, which was ultimately overthrown by invasion from the north, and now a Socialist, Communist tyranny has been imposed upon its people from which the only escape is to get into small boats and sail across the ocean.

Mr. George Robertson (Hamilton): On the very day that the Chilean republic has elected its first democratic president following a despotic Right-wing military regime, will the hon. Gentleman now face the fact that large numbers of refugees from that capitalist free market model litter all the countries of the free world willing to give them asylum?

Mr. Hamilton: President Pinochet has accepted the result of the plebiscite in Chile, and I am sure that we all approve of that. I am delighted that today we have heard the results of a free election. President Pinochet, whom I have not come here to defend, took over the Government of Chile in the midst of much turmoil and confusion. I am delighted that his undemocratic regime has now been translated into a democratic one, and, in the process, over the past 15 years through the application of Thatcherite nostrums, the economy of Chile has transformed from one of the most shambolic countries in south America into one of the most advanced.

Mr. Jacques Arnold (Gravesham): Will my hon. Friend note that it is significant that the Opposition in Chile did not field a Socialist candidate? Does he consider that that is particularly relevant to the situation there?

Mr. Hamilton: I certainly do. My hon. Friend has a very deep knowledge of South America and speaks from personal experience.

Mr. Harry Barnes (Derbyshire, North-East): I am grateful to the hon. Gentleman for giving way, but I have forgotten the point I was about to raise.

Mr. Hamilton: In the debate on eastern Europe, on 1 December, the hon. Member for Liverpool, Broadgreen (Mr. Fields) made a very distinguished speech. In some respects he joined the hon. Member for Walton in his analysis of the political changes in eastern Europe, but, unlike almost all other commentators, who say that it is undoubtedly a crisis of Communism and Socialism, the hon. Member for Broadgreen reached the conclusion that the turmoil in the Soviet Union and eastern Europe shows > "that there is an international crisis of capitalism".

Conservative Members may find it difficult to follow the logic of that.

Mr. Harry Barnes rose——

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim (Amber Valley): Is my hon. Friend aware that the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes) has just remembered his point? Will my hon. Friend therefore give way to him immediately?

Mr. Hamilton: My hon. Friend obviously believes that it will add force to my remarks, so I certainly shall give way to the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East.

Mr. Harry Barnes: I refer to the hon. Gentleman's point about Thatcherism in connection with Chile. He claimed that, because of correct monetarist policies, as the hon. Gentleman sees them, under the Pinochet regime the economy of Chile has improved, making it possible for democracy to be introduced. Is it not interesting that the major impact of Thatcherism, which claims to be associated with individualism, seems to have worked most effectively in a dictatorial system? Is that not relevant to the notion of Thatcherism in Britain?

Mr. Hamilton: No, that is not correct, because the best examples of the workings of Thatcherism are in the country that gave rise to it. We have led the way in the economic policy which has transformed Britain—and many other Socialist countries which were on the verge of collapse—from the shambles of 1979 into mainstream economic success.

The hon. Member for Broadgreen believes that there is an international crisis of capitalism. He said:

> "The crisis in eastern Europe has nothing to do with Socialism or Communism".

He referred to the Soviet Union, saying:

> "All went well under the plan until about 10 years ago."—[Official Report, 1 December 1989; Vol. 162, c. 988.]

Presumably, for the hon. Member for Broadgreen, the disaster was the death of President Brezhnev. That is a somewhat unusual view, but we should devote a small amount of time to it, as it is evidently a view which is of some importance in the Labour party.

The hon. Gentleman has tabled an early-day motion calling for the true spirit of the October revolution of 1917 to be restored in the Soviet Union. I do not know what the hon. Member for Hamilton will have to say about that. No doubt, appealing to his own Back Benchers, he will devote a certain amount of time to it. The truth is that, for 70-odd years, until very recently the Soviet Union was a prison which enslaved millions of its people and caused millions of deaths under the Leninist and Stalinist dictatorships and what succeeded them, including the deaths of many distinguished men such as Dr. Sakharov. Chronic incompetence in economic affairs turned a country which was a major exporter of grain under the Tsars into a major importer that cannot feed its own people, where the staples of ordinary everyday life are unavailable to ordinary workers and citizens. It has been a militarist totalitarian dictatorship. Although we all welcome its imminent demise, I am sure that hon. Members on both sides of the House recognise that the October revolution, in so far as it gave rise to that, was an unmitigated disaster for the entire human race.

Mrs. Alice Mahon (Halifax): Thousands, if not millions, of peasants starved under the Tsars while they were exporting grain. What does the hon. Gentleman have to say about that?

Mr. Hamilton: I am not supporting feudalism: the chairman of the Feudal party stood against me at the last general election. However, the rate of economic advance in Russia in the early years of the century was considerable. Had liberal capitalist economic and political structures been allowed to develop, instead of being nipped in the bud by the October revolution in 1917, Russia would today be one of the richest countries in the world, enjoying one of the highest standards of living.

The political effects of the October revolution gave rise to a monstrous tyranny. The hon. Member for Broadgreen admires the late Leon Trotsky. An analysis of Trotsky's works shows why the October revolution inevitably gave rise to a political tyranny on the back of an incompetent economic tyranny. Trotsky said:

> "In a country where the sole employer is the State, opposition means death by slow starvation. The old principle —who does not work shall not eat has been replaced by a new one: who does not obey shall not eat."

That is the history of the past 70 years in the Soviet Union.

It is the suppression of markets in Russia that has produced the poverty and the tyranny.

Mr. William Cash (Stafford): Does my hon. Friend recall that John Bright, whose centenary was celebrated this year—the advocate of free trade and democracy—was Karl Marx's greatest opponent in the 1840s and 1850s, when Marx was developing his notions of Communism which lie at the root of the demise of the Soviet Union today?

Mr. Hamilton: I accept entirely what my hon. Friend says.

It is the suppression of markets that has produced the political conditions in the Soviet Union. I forget who said that, if the Soviet Union successfully invaded the Sahara desert, nothing would happen for 10 years and then there would be a shortage of sand. That is the story of the Soviet Union. It is richly endowed with natural resources but has been constitutionally incapable of exploiting them successfully.

The human face of Socialism, which is authentically represented by the hon. Member for Walton is an impossibility because of the nature of mankind. When we centralise power, we encourage the worst instincts of humankind and produce the kind of state that we now see withering away.

There is no example of a state with a centralised or command economy that has managed to preserve political liberties. E. H. Carr—no Right-wing Conservative—said:

> "It is significant that the nationalisation of thought has proceeded everywhere pari passu with the nationalisation of industry."

The philosophy espoused by the hon. Member for Walton is a fantasy that can never be translated into a reality. As we know well, power corrupts—or tends to—and absolute power corrupts absolutely.

The scale of corruption in eastern Europe is now being revealed. I am sure that all hon. Members have read with interest the recent reports from East Germany about the standard of living which was enjoyed by the top dogs of the political system—a system supposedly based on equality—which contrasts markedly with the miserable living conditions of the people groaning under their yoke. I am sure that we have all seen television photographs of Mr. Honecker's magnificent country estate at Wandlitz outside Berlin. It has now been turned into a 400-bed hospital for the handicapped.

The top Communist party officials in East Germany had 6,745 miles of territory in New Brandenberg designated as their hunting reserves. Some £2 million is said to have been diverted from a special state fund in 1988 for the upkeep of those estates for the privileged. The veteran trade union leader Mr. Harry Tisch had a sprawling hunting estate which required 35 full-time gamekeepers to look after the lodge.

The Berliner Zeitung newspaper reported that a luxury home was being built for Gerhard Nemmstiel, the leader of the country's metalworkers' union. The paper also revealed that DM 250,000 were held illegally in foreign bank accounts by another trade union leader. Mr. Alexander Schalck-Golodkowski, who ran the foreign trade agency of East Germany, who has also achieved some celebrity because of the kickbacks that he was being paid by countries in Latin America, the middle east and Africa, which were then paid into Swiss bank accounts. He announced that he is willing to return to East Germany up to £22 million which had been siphoned off, to partly repay his depredations. However, he is not keen to return to answer the charges now that the country is no longer controlled by the Communist party.

I know that some Opposition Members are true Socialists who do not seek personal enrichment but there are many cases of personal enrichment among those who espouse even a very Left-wing brand of Socialism. Mr. Clive Jenkins has now taken his millions off to Australia.

Mr. Ian Gow (Eastbourne): His minions?

Mr. Hamilton: Millions, not minions—my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne may be referring to his mistress.

We can find many similar examples. The decentralisation of economic decision-taking reduces corruption and political power and hence the chance of tyranny. The great John Keynes, although no Right-wing Conservative, said in "The General Theory of Employment, Interest and Money":

> "There are valuable human activities which require the motive of money-making and the environment of private wealth-ownership for their full fruition . . . Dangerous human proclivities can be canalized, into comparatively harmless channels by the existence of opportunities for money-making and private wealth, which, if they cannot be satisfied in this way, may find their outlet in cruelty, the reckless pursuit of personal power and authority, and other forms of self-aggrandisement.
> It is better that a man should tyrannize over his bank balance than over his fellow citizens."

That is a true analysis of the circumstances we are debating.

The collapse in eastern Europe owes much to the unity and firmness of western countries, particularly over the past 10 years.

Through our strong defence policies, as my motion says, and through our successful economies, we have shown that the Soviet bloc is incapable of keeping up with us because it does not have the same rate of economic advance as us. It cannot compete with weapons modernisation and the quantity of armaments required to oppress its own people and to extend that repression around the world.

We owe a debt to my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister and to President Reagan. Had it not been for them, I do not believe that the NATO Alliance would have been so successful in the past 10 years in the defence of freedom against the real threat of Communist tyranny from the East.

The Labour party showed no firmness of resolve on defence in the 1973 or 1987 general elections. No doubt the Soviet Union was looking carefully at the 1987 election because if we had a Labour Government now who were not committed to a strong defence policy, one part of the incentive for change in eastern Europe would not have existed. After all it was my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister who first recognised the leadership qualities of President Gorbachev when he was a member of the Politburo. She said that she could do business with him.

President Reagan, like the Leader of the Opposition, was not a man for detail but he was able to grasp the simplicities of freedom. We owe him a great debt of gratitude. The strategic defence initiative and the modernisation programme of nuclear weapons ultimately showed the Soviet bloc that it could not win. The bankruptcy of Communism is now recognised worldwide.

That leads me to the second part of my motion, referring to the "withering away" of Socialism outside the Communist bloc. I believe that 1975-76 saw the beginning of this great movement. The election of my right hon. Friend the Member for Finchley (Mrs. Thatcher) as the leader of the Conservative party in 1972 brought about a significant change in the political ethos of the United Kingdom. Since 1979, we have introduced many permanent changes. it has been the sort of irreversible shift, although in a different direction, to which the right hon. Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn) frequently refers. In 1976, my hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced that she was undertaking a crusade not merely to put a temporary block on Socialism but to stop its onward march once and for all. I believe that that is what we are achieving.

Socialist parties throughout the world are now in headlong retreat. In Australia, there is a Labour Government under the leadership of Mr. Hawke. They have decided to float the dollar. They have reduced taxes and they have a budget surplus of A$5·5 billion. They have cut tariffs and they have targeted welfare spending.

The same is true in New Zealand. The hon. Member for Dagenham (Mr. Gould) is a distinguished export from New Zealand. No doubt anticipating the death of Socialism in his country, he decided that his only future was in the Labour party in Britain, which is one of the few Socialist parties in the world in which a significant number of members remain wedded to outmoded and exploded class-war concepts.

In New Zealand, an even more radical Thatcherite programme has been pushed through in the past four years. The Government have abolished exchange controls, subsidies for industry and agriculture, an incomes policy and rent controls and energy price controls. There has been a mammoth programme of privatisation. There have been massive tax reductions, and the top income tax rate is now 33p in the pound.

Spain, too, has a Socialist Government. My hon. Friend the Treasurer of Her Majesty's Household, who sits in his place on the Government Front Bench, has no doubt had an important part to play in the conversion of the Socialist party in Spain into a Thatcherite party. The Spanish Government are engaged in a mammoth privatisation programme that includes the coal and electricity industries.

Mr. Gow: Is it not part of the complaint of the right hon. Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn) and of the hon. Member for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Heffer) that the occupants of the Opposition Front Bench have been partly converted to Thatcherism?

Mr. Hamilton: My hon. Friend, with his usual perspicacity, has anticipated the next part of my speech. I intend to devote some attention to the somewhat embarrassing position in which the hon. Member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson) finds himself as he languishes on the Opposition Front Bench.

Germany abandoned any pretence of Socialism long ago. Even France, recoiling from the disaster of the early years of the leadership of President Mitterrand, is now engaged in the demolition of the Socialist state.

In Latin America, apart from some revolutionary paradises of the sort represented by Nicaragua, Socialism is in headlong retreat throughout the continent. I have a great expert on Latin America sitting behind me in the form of my hon. Friend the Member for Gravesham (Mr. Arnold). In Honduras, a free-market, United States-trained economist has been elected President. In Uruguay, a privatisation advocate has been elected in the first free elections since 1971. In Peru, Mario Vargos Llosa leads in the election campaign, despite the worst excesses of Marxist guerrillas there. Chile has already been mentioned this morning.

In Mexico, President Portillo—no relation, I am sure, of my hon. Friend the Member for Enfield, Southgate (Mr. Portillo), the Minister for Public Transport—nationalised the banks in 1982. He having been succeeded by a more free-market leader, Mexico has been denationalising on a large scale. Opposition Members may have read in The Economist not so long ago that Aeromexico had a strike as a result of a protest about the cancellation of uneconomic routes and the sale of 13 airliners. The Mexican Government responded by declaring the company bankrupt, sacking all the employees and putting all the aeroplanes up for sale. I believe that that is symptomatic of changes that are taking place in Socialist movements throughout the world.

In Britain, the Labour party has spent the last 10 years in implacable opposition to all the changes, of whatever sort, that the Government have introduced, on the basis of which a transformation has taken place. If matters were left to them, we would still be stuck in the world of the 1970s of corporatism, failure and decline. In answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne (Mr. Gow), there has been some superficial change in the leadership of the Labour party. It is now only the Bourbons of Bexley and Sidcup who support unreconstructed and arbitrary interventionism without apology. The leader of the Labour party deserves some credit for dragging the Labour party into the 20th century, just in time for the rest of us to enter the 21st century.

Mr. Gow: Is it not a complaint of the right hon. Member for Chesterfield that the Leader of the Opposition will abandon any principle and change any policy in pursuit of his overriding objective, which is to secure power at any price? Is that not also the complaint of the hon. Member for Walton?

Mr. Hamilton: I believe that there is much common ground between the hon. Member for Walton, the right hon. Member for Chesterfield and my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne. I believe that we shall hear a considerable amount of agreement expressed across the Floor of the House during this debate. Although the hon. Member for Hamilton is being subjected to a barrage of criticism from my hon. Friends and me, he is about to be subjected to an even greater barrage from those who sit behind him. He will be ground between the upper and the nether millstones of the Government and the leader of the opposition to the Leader of the Opposition.

The Labour party has been engaged in a policy review for some time. This has resulted in the dropping of many of its policies, and they have not been replaced by new policies. I am beginning to think that the policy review was about whether the Labour party should have any policy at all. Some Labour Members do not like the results of the review. The hon. Member for Walton said not so long ago:

> "There are . . . suggestions that policies on housing, defence, etc., must be further changed to make them more > palatable to the Establishment and the USA. I trust that the party will reject such false advice . . . and that our policies will not be further watered down."

The right hon. Member for Chesterfield said:

> "There is a real risk that . . . we could come to be seen as a purely opportunistic party that is prepared to say anything to get into office and is ready to sacrifice good policies when the opinion polls swing against us."

The Government Front Bench and the Conservative party represent the principle of equality of opportunity. Those who occupy the Opposition Front Bench represent nothing but the equality of opportunism; I agree with the right hon. Member for Chesterfield about that.

The hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) made this announcement on 16 June:

> "There is not a single policy issue or a cause, no matter how worth while, which . . . is more important to us than winning the next general election."

Therein lies the key to what is going on in the Labour party. There are some men of principle on the Opposition Benches who cannot stomach this. The hon. Member for Dunfermline, West (Mr. Douglas), who I am sorry not to see in his place, said recently:

> "I sadly fundamentally find myself at odds with the current Labour credo that power and the desire to win is more important than principle."

As a result, the hon. Gentleman has decided that he will not seek re-election to the House at the next general election.

We have been seeing a sort of Boston tea party, with the Labour party jettisoning electoral liabilities wherever they are discovered. The Labour party is attempting to convince the British people that it has changed. The reality is that, if it were ever to form a Government, the same old Labour party would once again be revealed.

Nowhere do we see this trickery more blatantly than with the Labour party's defence policy. It has decided, supposedly, to drop its unilateral nuclear disarmament policy, but the Leader of the Opposition remains a member of the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament. Either he believes in the policy of the CND or he believes in what is supposed to be the policy of his party. He cannot believe in both; he has to make the choice.

The Labour party has said that there should be no something-for-nothing disarmament, but the Leader of the Opposition has said:

> "There are no circumstances in which I would order or permit the firing of a nuclear weapon."

If we have a Prime Minister who supports that view, we shall effectively have disarmed, although we may still have nuclear weapons. If they are not to be used, they will be useless. By retaining nuclear weapons on that basis, the Labour party is retaining a worthless extravagance. In so far as it has changed its defence policy, it has done so not to improve the defensive capabilities of this country but to improve its chances of defending itself against the British electorate at the next election.

Mr. Bruce Kent, who is now a member of the Labour party——

Mr. Gow: Monsignor.

Mr. Hamilton: I think that he is an ex-monsignor. Just before the Labour party conference, he put an advertisement in a newspaper, in which he offered £50 for information leading to the discovery of any Labour party national executive committee members willing to defend in open public debate their defence policy review before the party conference. There were no takers; it may be that £50 is no longer an attraction to Labour Members, and that, because of Thatcherite prosperity their expectations are far higher. However, it was significant that no one was prepared to debate that with Bruce Kent, the great guru of CND.

In a dramatic outbreak of fraternity, the hon. Member for Brent, East (Mr. Livingstone), who regrettably is not present today—in that, at least, he is consistent—recently said of the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton (Mr. Kaufman):

> "You do not seek Kaufman any more. He has crawled so far up the backside of NATO you can't see the soles of his feet."

In his usual elegant manner of speech, the hon. Member exposed the dilemma in which the Labour party finds itself today: it dare not speak the language of Socialism, although it still harbours thoughts of it.

As with its defence policy—it has remained the same while attempting to appear different—with its economic policy the Labour party has changed its tune, although the same song is still hummed in private. No longer does it talk of privatisation—now, it is social ownership. We know that it got itself into some difficulties recently over the highly successful flotation of the water companies.

Conservative Members need no reminding that the hon. Member for Dagenham let the cat out of the bag. He hinted that, if Labour were to win the next election, dividend controls would be placed on the water companies, which might result in no dividends being paid. That would rob millions of ordinary people and pension funds, on which many more ordinary people will depend in years to come for the fruits of their investments and, as a result, water shares would fall rapidly in price.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett (Pembroke): Does not the fact that, in spite of those threats, millions of people were prepared to buy water shares show just how far away they think a Labour Government may be?

Mr. Hamilton: That is true. I attempted to buy water shares to express my confidence in that view. Unfortunately, as I forgot to sign the form, I shall not benefit from my investment perspicuity.

Mr. Oppenheim: Is my hon. Friend aware that he is in extremely good company in that respect? The chief whip and one of the leading lights of the Labour group on Derbyshire county council not only acquired shares when British Telecom was privatised but has acquired further shares in it since? That shows that it is not too late to learn, even for Labour Members.

Mr. Hamilton: I should not be at all suprised if, in the secrecy of the ballot box, he votes for my hon. Friend the Member for Amber Valley (Mr. Oppenheim).

The Leader of the Opposition swiftly rebuked the hon. Member for Dagenham for his honesty in revealing the truth about the Labour party's policy on nationalisation. But is that the same right hon. Gentleman who only a few years ago said that there was > "No need to be apologetic about the extension of public ownership or the establishment of workers' control"?

Of course, that was before he joined the ambitious tendency. Now that he smells office he thinks that he can no longer afford the price of his former principles.

Not every change in the Labour party policy review is a fudge, because the union paymasters will still claim their post-dated cheques. The hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher), who was and may still be for all I know, its employment spokesman, finds it difficult to adjust to the new regime of the voter-friendly Labour leadership. He said:

> "There can be no justification for limiting the freedom of workers to seek external assistance" in industrial disputes.

Speaking on behalf of the Labour party on employment matters, he has committed it, in effect, to the repeal of all the trade union legislation that we have introduced over the past 10 years to enfranchise the ordinary trade union member against the tyranny of the trade union bosses, to the immeasurable advantage of British industry. That has been a major ingredient in the transformation of a failing and demoralised industrial sector into one of the leading industrial sectors in the world.

The hon. Member for Oldham, West has said that the Labour party will scrap the limit of six pickets in disputes. We shall return to the mass intimidation that we saw during the miners' strike, which was not opposed but supported by the Labour party at the time. We shall return to things such as the Saltley coke works picket, to riots and to the Grunwick picket lines. The Labour party has made it clear that, if it wins the next election, it will undo all the good work that we have done over the past few years.

The hon. Member for Oldham, West was even more unequivocal about judges, on whom he is not very keen. He thinks that they are class-based and anti-trade union. In Tribune on 1 September, he proposed regular assessments of judges to ensure that they conformed to the Socialist norms that he wishes to introduce.

I shall not go on for much longer, because I am anxious to allow Labour Members to add to the telling points that I have been making, but I cannot resist examining, for just a few minutes, the economic policy of the Labour party, as adumbrated by the right hon. and learned Member for Monklands, East (Mr. Smith).

The Labour party believes that a number of cardinal principles must be applied to economic policy. Taxes and spending are always too low, and interest rates are always too high. It is always opposed to sensible economic policies and believes in high spending. It went before the British electorate in 1987 with a £34 billion programme, on the basis of which it was resoundingly rejected. It has not resiled from that high spending, although it is being rather more canny about its commitments.

The right hon. and learned Member for Monklands, East—the Shadow Chancellor of the Exchequer—was recently asked about his policies on credit controls. He found it difficult to say what he would do if, when the Labour party took office, it was faced with rampaging inflation. His idea was that he would appeal to the international banks for their co-operation in restricting lending. Japanese bankers were to be approached, no doubt over a jolly good lunch of beer and sandwiches at No. 10——

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Over sake and sandwiches.

Mr. Hamilton: —over sake and sandwiches at No. 10—and asked to co-operate with a Labour Government to reduce inflation. Past Labour Governments have had close relationships with banks. I am sure that older hon. Members will recall the gnomes of Zurich during the first period of office of Lord Wilson of Rievaulx. The leaders of the last Labour Government had close relations with the international banks.

The right hon. and learned Member for Monklands, East misunderstands the nature of the relationship between the Labour party and the banks. It is not the Labour party that persuades the banks to do its bidding, but the Labour party that is ordered by the international banks to return to sensible economic policies. Mr. Johannes Witteveen, who I believe is well known to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastbourne, was obliged to rescue the British people from the depredations of the right hon. Member for Leeds, East (Mr. Healey), who I am sorry to say will leave the House at the next election. [Interruption.]

Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hamilton: We welcome the hon. Member for Brent, East (Mr. Livingstone) to the Chamber.

I should like to imagine the circumstances in which this appeal would be made to the international bankers. There would be the Leader of the Opposition, who presumably would be the Prime Minister if the Labour party won the next election, and who, in the 1970s, referred in a speech to the City of London as an army of brokers and jobbers and other quaintly named parasites. Imagine the letter that would go out to the international bankers in order to rescue the Labour Government. It would read: "I am inviting you to a luncheon at No. 10 Downing street so that you can rescue our Government from the disastrous economic policies that we have been implementing since the last general election." I do not believe that the international bankers would do anything but laugh in a false, hollow way at any appeal by a Labour Government. They would be obliged to come to the rescue once again, like the seventh cavalry.

The Labour party's economic policy is as threadbare and shot full of holes as the rest of its policies. At a time when the Labour party was execrating the Government for inadequate credit controls, it was launching its own credit card and marketing it widely. The truth has been revealed by another Labour Member, the right hon. Member for Llanelli (Mr. Davies), who regrettably is not here today, who said:

> "The Labour Party idea that you should have credit controls is rubbish. There is no way you can control credit except by controlling the price of credit, and the price of credit is the Bank Rate."

There are some sensible Labour Members, but they no longer seem to find favour on the Opposition Front Bench. The right hon. Member for Llanelli was obliged to resign his defence portfolio because the Leader of the Opposition would not talk to him or listen to his advice. That is the story of the Labour party all over.

The Labour party's industrial policy is merely a resuscitation of the National Enterprise Board. We as taxpayers will be obliged to pour our money into other wizard investments like De Lorean, the Meriden motor cycle co-operative and Court Line. The history of the last Labour Governments show their fatal weaknesses. Referring to the right hon. Members for Chesterfield and for Bethnal Green and Stepney (Mr. Shore), Richard Crossman described them in his diaries as > "young men who, with carefree arrogance, think they can enter the business world and make it more efficient. It is the amateurishness of Harold and his young men that gets me down."

[Mr. Hamilton]

I hope that they will not get us down in the future, because I do not believe that they have any chance of forming a Government.

The Labour party's policy is to dump its policies as soon as they are noticed by the electorate. Hence the policy to introduce a two-tax system for local government and to introduce mortgage restrictions. The truth has again been revealed by the hon. Member for Oldham, West in an article in Tribune on 1 December when, referring to the future of the Labour party's policy, he said:

> "We can expect it to be slimmed down if we are going to have a campaign document next year, and slimmed down even further if we are to have a costed manifesto."

That was the most blatant portrayal of the cynicism with which the Labour party treats the people.

On that basis, I propose to end my speech, in the time-honoured manner of a Labour party conference, by singing "The Red Flag"—although an updated version to take account of changes introduced by the policy review. I am not sure whether the words of "The Red Flag" were part of the policy review for reconsideration.

As I believe that it would not be in order to sing, despite the fact that the hon. Member for Bolsover burst into song when the cardboard boxes of petitions were brought in, I shall read the words of this new Labour party song which adequately sets out its change of policy:

"The people's flag is palest pink
We're not as red as you might think
So we can triumph at the polls

Ban the bomb? Not on your life!
We'll outlaw strikes in place of strife
We'll keep your taxes well controlled
Free enterprise will be extolled.

In office we'll reveal the trick
We'll tax and spend and live on tick.
We'll nationalise by smash and grab
And City slickers we'll kebab.

Through Labour's platform's total fudge
We're Lefties still and will not budge.
We're hoping you'll be taken in
By Mandelson's PR machine."

10.54 am

Mr. Tony Benn (Chesterfield): The first time I attended the House was in 1937 when, as a little boy of 12, I sat in the Strangers Gallery. Neville Chamberlain was Prime Minister. He was a strong supporter of Hitler and sent Lord Halifax to see him, and the captured German Foreign Office documents reveal that he congratulated Hitler on behalf of the British Government for destroying Communism in Germany and being a bulwark against Communism in the Soviet Union. I heard the then discredited Churchill speak. He warned against the dangers of Fascism. At that time, Clem Attlee, the Labour leader, sat with 150 Labour Members—a small minority, which had been reduced to 50 by the 1931 election and had increased by only 100 in 1935. Two and a half years later, Chamberlain was gone and Churchill had been created Prime Minister by the Labour Government, who would not serve under anyone else.

In 1945, I campaigned in Westminster against Churchill. He was a popular figure—after all, he had won the war with his cigar and his siren suit. We did not have pollsters to mislead us or "Newsnight" to tell us what the public wanted. We absolutely destroyed the Tory party. With the defeat of Hitler and Fascism, people in Britain turned their back on appeasement, the means test and unemployment and decided to build a better Britain.

It is appropriate that today, when we are told to celebrate the death of Socialism, 4·5 million names were recorded on a petition to the House expressing their commitment to the National Health Service—the greatest Socialist monument of that post-war Government. I was proud to sit at the end of that Government as a Back Bencher under Mr. Attlee as Prime Minister and Aneurin Bevan as Minister of Health. Today we have witnessed one of the regular funerals of Socialism. So many coffins for Socialism go through Fleet street every day that one wonders why the newspapers have to keep having these funerals. They have to do so because Socialism is not dead.

Today Mr. Speaker had to rule—I think that he was unwise to do so—that because so many people supported the ambulance drivers the lists of their names could not all be brought to the House. I watched the Government Front Bench as box after box of petitions were brought in, showing the popular rejection of the Government's attitude towards the NHS.

This is the first time that we have discussed Socialism in the nearly 40 years during which I have been here, and I strongly welcome it. I am not surprised that there were no buses coming from all over the country, as when Snowden moved his resolution, because the hon. Member for Tatton (Mr. Hamilton) had tabled such a rotten motion. However, the motion has allowed this debate to take place.

I have already ordered the entire debate from the sound archives of the House of Commons, because I have often said that if capitalism depended on the intellectual quality of the Conservative party it would end about lunchtime tomorrow. When the long speech of the hon. Member for Tatton is made available in Chesterfield and elsewhere, it will confirm my view that the ideas of capitalism are not well espoused and do not truthfully rest on the intellectual capacities of Conservative Members.

This is the first time that we have been able to debate Socialism without having to wear makeup, without having to depend upon the courtesy of a BBC producer and without having Robin Day trying to help us to bring out what we are really trying to say, and our speeches are reported in Hansard, which is my favourite newspaper because it is not owned by Murdoch, Maxwell or Stevens. The video will be available, although I doubt that the debate will feature on the television news bulletins today, because the television companies will be off trying to find people in Leipzig and Warsaw who are critical of their Governments so as not to publicise the ambulance drivers' petition.

I shall not devote a lot of time to the speech of the hon. Member for Tatton. However, it is an absurd theory to suggest that events in eastern Europe are because people there have been studying capitalism from the time of Selsdon park through to the present Government's new philosophy. Does the hon. Member for Tatton honestly believe that what happened in Warsaw was because Poles were longing for a poll tax, that people in Uzbekistan are yearning to sell of their water supply, that there is an almost irresistible demand for the YTS in Romania, or that they need more homeless people in East Berlin to prove the wisdom of market forces or that they are longing to have the Tsar back.

Mr. Michael Brown (Brigg and Cleethorpes) rose——

Mr. Benn: I shall not give way because I do not want to take up too much time, although I shall be surprised if I take as long as the hon. Member for Tatton.

If Gorbachev announced that his son was to succeed him, as the system that we have in Britain, would that be a democratic gain? If the supreme Soviet divided itself into two, half by patronage and half by heredity, as in Britain, would that be a great gain? Do Conservative Members really believe the arguments put forward in the hon. Gentleman's speech? Does the hon. Gentleman honestly believe that the people in Warsaw, East Germany and Hungary have demanded their human rights only because we had a cruise missile on hire purchase from Washington? Does he believe that those living in Hungary would not want the vote except for the knowledge that the British Prime Minister, with the permission of the United States president, is allowed to press a button to sink them all into oblivion? What nonsense the Conservative party has been propagating!

I put forward an amendment. I was told that I could do so, but that it would not be called. That is the fate of most people in the House with something useful to say. I am, however, allowed to refer to the amendment although it will not be tested in the Lobbies—we shall have to wait until the next general election for that. The amendment welcomes the development of democracy in eastern Europe and states something which any serious person is bound to say—that throughout the whole of human history there has been a consistent repression of human rights by every known system of government.

When William the Conqueror arrived here in 1066 and went to Westminster Abbey on Christmas day, he announced how he would govern the country. Nobody ever spoke of democracy in the name of monarchy. Feudalism in Britain included slavery. In 19th century Britain there was no democracy in the sense in which we mean it. In 1832, only 2 per cent. of men—all rich—had the vote. When I was born in 1925 the whole of India was governed from this country. Nobody in this House, least of all the Tories, talked about the democratic rights of Indians. The British arrested Gandhi and Nehru. It was interesting that at a recent dinner organised by the Indian High Commission, the Prince of Wales and the deputy Prime Minister turned up to celebrate the life and work of Pandit Nehru, who was a Socialist and was regularly arrested. When Gandhi began negotiating in Dehli, Churchill used his immortal phrase about the "half-naked fakir loping up the steps of the vice-regal lodge to parley on equal terms with the representatives of the King Emperor." So much for the British attitude to democracy in the empire.

Mr. Dennis Skinner (Bolsover): We still have to sort out democracy here. There are 1,000 unelected people in the House of Lords.

Mr. Benn: I referred to the House of Lords. If we privatised the House of Lords and sold seats in that Chamber, many people would pay half a crown for the right to go there. That might be the way to deal with the second Chamber. I would not rule out the Tories selling off anything—they would sell off the Royal Family if they thought that they could make a quick buck out of it.

Democracy is the struggle for political rights. Power can be abused under any system of government. To purport to say, in a serious motion in this Chamber, that the only repression of human rights that there has ever been has been in the name of Stalinism is wholly false. The hon. Member for Tatton gave me one good thing—his warm approval of Trotsky and Trotsky's critique of Stalinism, which will affect the interest of the national executive committee of the Labour party, from whom the hon. Gentleman may hear in due course. Trotsky was one of the first critics of Stalinism. The Conservative party, which from day one has never understood Socialism, is beginning to realise that there has always been an interesting debate about Socialism within the Labour party.

Under this Government many democratic rights have been taken away. For example, in Britain trade unions now have fewer rights to organise than they do in eastern Europe. The destruction of the Greater London council and the Inner London education authority was one of the greatest attacks of the rights of people in the capital city. Ours is the only country in the western world which does not allow its citizens to elect their local authority.

We have 30,000 American troops in Britain. They were brought in under various Governments. I say that because, as must be obvious, I am not making a party political speech. There are 30,000 American troops here, which is three times as many as we had in India when we occupied that country. We are also controlled by Brussels. Some Conservative Members are beginning to realise that Jacques Delors was not elected. That is an interesting thought, but the IMF was not elected either—nor did we elect President Bush or Vice-President Quayle who command those forces. Only one heartbeat lies between Quayle and his command of the American troops in Britain, which causes me some concern.

I do not believe that the Russians will shift from the dictatorship of the proletariat to the Dow Jones industrial average as their guidance, or from the Gosplan to the Bundesbank because democratic arguments are going on everywhere. I listen—as everyone does, because we cannot do anything about it—to the BBC "Financial World Tonight" with Dominic Harrod saying what has happened to the pound sterling, to three points of decimals, against a basket of European currencies. I have never seen a basket of European currencies, but I shall take one on holiday next time I go. Yet on the basis of the fluctuations of the pound sterling, we are told that we must close a hospital or try to repress the ambulance drivers' pay claim. It is nonsense to say that we live in a democracy, particularly when we have just voted £21 billion for weapons—£371 per man, woman and child—when no one in Britain now believes that there is a military threat.

I shall say a word or two about the roots of Socialism. One strange idea emanating from Conservative central office is that Socialism was invented in Russia in 1917. The roots of Socialism go back a little further than that. Those who were brought up on the book of Genesis, as I was, will remember that when Cain killed Abel and the Lord had a quiet word with him about it, Cain asked whether he was "his brother's keeper." The answer to the question whether a person is his brother's or sister's keeper lies at the root of modern British Socialism. It can be presented in various other ways—for instance, "an injury to one is an injury to all," "united we stand, divided we fall" and "you do not cross a picket line"—and that directive came not from

[Mr. Benn]

Brezhnev, but from the book of Genesis. Anyone who thinks that solidarity does not have an ancient religious root had better study history a bit more.

The Church has sometimes got around the question of equality by saying, "Don't worry—if the rich are kind and the poor are patient, it will be all right when we are dead and the angels bring us a cup of tea in the morning." The difference between Socialism and such episcopal fudges is that the Socialists would like the cup of tea before they die. That was how Socialism became a political force.

What about economic democracy? The Conservative party has often criticised nationalisation and I have criticised it strongly myself. I never believed that the Alf Robens version of nationalisation was democratic. But what are people in the City of London doing all the time? They are the bureaucrats of international capitalism, moving money about and closing factories to make more money. If a factory is closed for a week by a strike, that is disruption. If it is closed for ever by multinationals, that is market forces at work.

The Glasgow media group did a brilliant piece of work on the language of the media. They pointed out that in the media employers "offer and plead" whereas workers "demand and threaten". Let us turn it the other way round and consider the ambulance dispute in that light. The ambulance workers are "offering" to provide an emergency service and "pleading" with the Government not to cut their wages. The Government are "demanding" that they do what they are told and "threatening" to deny them income if they do not. There is a lot more to the argument than we are normally told.

Take economic power. What democracy is there in market forces? The Prime Minister is supposed not to like Jacques Delors because he is not elected, and that is true, but who elects the bankers? I am sorry to say that I was a member of the Cabinet that gave way to the bankers in 1976. We should have told them where to get off. The oil was bubbling ashore, and in my opinion we would have won the 1979 election if we had not imposed an unfair incomes policy on our people to satisfy the IMF. But we learn from our experience. Of course economic democracy, workers' control and industrial democracy are the future, just as political democracy was the great revolution of the 19th century. Whoever believed, before the middle of the 19th century, that the poor had a right to the vote? The country had been run by the rich—the landowners and wealthy gentry in this place. The old political demands of the chartists are now to be replaced by economic chartism.

Socialism is international in character——

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Will the right hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Benn: Perhaps I may finish my point before giving way to the great-grandson of Tom Mann, who is about to intervene to remind us of the terrible family transformation that has occurred since his great-grandfather gave inspiration to the trade union movement. Socialism is international, but that is not surprising, because capitalism is international, too. Business men in Britain have no loyalty to the future of this country. If they could make more money by moving their cash abroad, they would have no hesitation in doing so, even though the profits were created here. Similarly, although the solidarity of labour may be a bit imperfect, there is much more in common between miners worldwide than between miners and their Governments, whether Russian, British or Polish. I give way to the hon. Member for Pembroke.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: I wonder whether the right hon. Gentleman can answer two questions. He has told us that the last Labour Government should have told the IMF to get lost. Why does he say, at page 589 of the second volume of his diaries:

> "I told the meeting that my paper emphasised that the survival of the Government depended on the maintenance of a relationship of confidence both with the TUC and the IMF"?

What confidence could the IMF have had if the right hon. Gentleman's policy had been followed? Secondly, why in 11 years of Labour Government did the right hon. Gentleman never resign?

Mr. Benn: I am flattered that the hon. Gentleman should read the diaries. I hope that he will read them all, and not just the passages drawn to his attention by Tory central office. I recall that passage very well; it was an abstract of about 2 million words. I said that we should have told the IMF that, with the oil coming ashore, our economy was fundamentally strong and that if it threatened us, we would take the necessary remedial action. I shall not pursue that, because that would be an abuse, but perhaps the hon. Gentleman and I could continue the discussion in the Library of the House or, better still, in the bookshop, where he will no doubt be buying further copies to give to his constituents.

Socialism is indestructible because it is based on the belief that people have inherent rights. Whether they are rich or poor, black or white, disabled or healthy, they have the right to useful work and a living income. They have a right to a good home and to a life-long education. I am all for raising the school leaving age to 95. That is an inch or two ahead of the policy review, so I hope that no one will tell my leader that that is my view. Health care should be available free at the point of need. After all, how many people could afford to meet the cost of ill health without the Health Service? People also have the right to dignity when they are old.

They used to say to me on the BBC, "Where is this Socialism, Mr. Benn?" One need only go to a hospital where people are treated according to their needs; there one finds Socialism. One need only go to a school, where children have access to the full range of knowledge without paying fees; there one finds Socialism. The ambulance drivers look after people; that is Socialism and no amount of private Member's motions will kill it. It is amusing to hear the hon. Member for Tatton try, but I somehow do not think that he will succeed.

In the 20th century, technology has completely transformed the world, with enormous new powers. We have nuclear weapons and nuclear energy and our communications and transport systems have improved enormously. We live in a very small world, any part of which could be destroyed by the use of power by any other part. There are new threats to the environment. The environmental argument is not just about banning diesel smoke in central London. It is about whether the planet is to be used by us as stewards or parcelled up and sold off for profit. The whole environmental argument is about that.

We need new institutions in the world. I am a strong believer in making two changes in the United Nations. First, we should abolish the veto in the Security Council for matters concerning planetary protection, such as nuclear and chemical weapons, nuclear power and the environment. I should be content to be governed by a Security Council which safeguarded the planet. Secondly, we should elect the United Nations General Assembly, with perhaps one representative per 5 million people. That would represent a popular United Nations General Assembly.

Certain things should also be decided at continental level. I do not believe that the Commission in Brussels should decide whether we may or may not return to full employment. It should, however, consider environmental and energy questions. Then there are national functions. Local government, too, should be given a full discretion to do whatever is necessary. I have introduced a Bill, the Local Authorities (General Powers) Bill, which would abolish the district auditor. Why should local authorities which have the support of their communities not be allowed to perform their functions? If they are corrupt, take them to the police station; if they are unpopular, take them to the polling station; but there should not be one between the polling station and the police station able to prevent local authorities from providing the services that they need to provide.

As must be obvious, we are not having a debate about the policies of the two major parties. We are talking about Socialism, and that is not necessarily the same thing. Nevertheless, I believe that the incoming Labour Government will face formidable problems which have been concealed from us in the past few years. The oil revenues are running out. Investment in manufacturing industry on which we depend has been stagnant since 1979. We have a balance of payments deficit so massive that some direct action will have to be taken. If one uses interest rates, one destroys industry and makes people homeless. Some people say that we could try credit control, but that would mean that the poor could not afford to buy what the rich could buy. We shall have to take direct action, and that will mean import planning. To use the Prime Minister's corner shop parallel, "You can't buy what you can't afford." We cannot afford the mass of imports. We do not have the means to pay for them. And we shall have to have exchange controls because we cannot allow wealth created in Britain to be exported to Korea or South Africa to make a bigger profit for the owners at the expense of the national interest. We shall also have to have very big defence cuts because we cannot afford £21 billion —£371 per man, woman and child in Britain—to pay to fight off a threat that does not exist.

All progress comes from below. I cannot think of a single gain in human history that was first promoted in the Chamber of the House of Commons. We all got here up a ladder labelled "status quo" and the status quo is quite attractive when one has arrived by virtue of it. Some of my colleagues who became Ministers thought that Socialism had arrived when they arrived, and it was an understandable error. When the Permanent Secretary said, "Yes Minister, No Minister" they thought that Socialism had arrived. Herbert Morrison once said that Socialism is what a Labour Government does, which was rather candid. Let us take some examples to show that change comes from below. The war widows cause was fought for and the Government changed their policy. On Sunday shopping, a combination of the churches, the trade unions and the women's movement defeated the Government's campaign. The same is true for the environment—the Prime Minister was never a Green until it looked as though the Greens were going to win.

The demand for social change goes through certain stages. First, it is ignored. Then it is mad—the loony Left. Then it is dangerous—Militant. Then there is a pause. And then it is impossible to find anyone who was not in favour of it in the first place. That is how all social change occurs. This Parliament is a mirror of the state of play in 1987. It is completely out of date.

I believe that in the 1990s we will see the renewal of Socialism in this country. What is happening in eastern Europe with the democratisation of Socialism is as important as the parliamentary changes which had some impact on Victorian capitalism.

We live in a period of history when for the first time there is enough for everyone in the world. There is enough to eat and enough to give people clean water and proper clinics. There is enough to give them at least elementary education. There is enough, but the distribution of wealth cannot be achieved if it is based on market forces and a jungle philosophy. It can be achieved only by planning, consent, Socialism, democracy and internationalism, all of which Conservative Members loath and hate to the essence of their beings.

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim (Amber Valley): I have seen the glories of Socialism. Just over a year ago I was being driven in my rather plebian Toyota on a small, dusty road just outside Pyongyang, the capital of North Korea, when, all of a sudden my car was forced off the road by a large black Mercedes driven at very high speed. When my taxi driver had recovered sufficiently and had dusted himself off, he told me that in North Korea the centre lane of all major roads was reserved not just for members of the North Korean Communist party, but for the close family of the North Korean leader, Kim Il Sung, whose name translates roughly as Kim the leader or Kim the sun.

The leader of another neo-Stalinist type regime, the leader of Derbyshire county council, David Bookbinder, is apparently a great admirer of North Korea. I am pleased to see that there has been a very good turnout of Derbyshire Socialists in the Chamber today.

Mr. Harry Barnes rose——

Mr. Oppenheim: I will give way to the hon. Gentleman in a moment.

The leader of Derbyshire council council sent a delegation to North Korea at the taxpayers' expense. He has also been very closely involved with the North Korean friendship society, which promotes the interests of North Korea and Kim Il Sung's regime.

Mr Barnes rose——

Mr. Oppenheim: I will gladly give way to the hon. Gentleman, but I hope that he has remembered what point he wants to make.

Mr. Barnes: If previously I forgot what point I wanted to make, at least I had the grace to resume my seat. As the hon. Member for Amber Valley (Mr. Oppenheim) has nothing to say, I hope that he will do the same.

[Mr. Barnes]

However, I want to make a point about North Korea. People went to North Korea thanks to Derbyshire county council to attend a youth and student festival. It was a great experience and they did not come back with any illusions. I discussed what happened with those people at a meeting and I was told that the experience widened their education and understanding and that they met people from many other countries, many of whom were critical of centralised regimes.

Mr. Oppenheim: Some of the people whom the visitors to North Korea would have met would have been a delegation from Sinn Fein. I wonder how that meeting would have enlarged or broadened their minds. The festival in North Korea was not a broad liberal festival in the sense that it included all shades of opinion. It was set up to promote the interests of a vicious and repressive Stalinist regime.

Although the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East and the leader of Derbyshire county council do not appear to be dissillusioned with North Korea, I had the good fortune to meet recently in a pub in my constituency a former Communist who was once the head of the North Korean friendship society to which I have referred. He told me that he was in a state of total despair about Socialism and Communism. He had visited North Korea on several occasions, and realised what a complete mess Communism was making of things. He confided in me that he would probably vote Conservative at the next general election.

Mr. Barnes rose——

Mr. Oppenheim: I have given way to the hon. Gentleman already. I am sure that he will have an opportunity to make his point later. With respect, I will make progress because other hon. Members want to speak.

What has gone wrong with Socialism? I believe that there is much in the well-known saying, "The road to hell is paved with good intentions." Most Conservative Members accept that most genuine Socialists are well meaning and well intentioned although somewhat misguided individuals. That is why Socialism always leads to disaster. That is why the well-intentioned hon. Member for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Heffer) tied himself in knots earlier trying to claim that Socialism has never been tried.

Socialism has been tried in a variety of forms in both democratic and totalitarian countries, and it has failed. It is the ultimate in hiding one's head in the sand not to accept that there have been many experiments with Socialism. It is nonsense to consider the rubble of regimes in the east or the complete failure of Socialism to deliver in western democracies and then claim that Socialism has not been tried.

The well-known American writer, Mencken, wrote:

> "For every complex problem, there is a solution which is neat, plausible and wrong."

Socialism is such a solution. It is neat, superficially attractive, plausible and it appeals to idealists, but it is completely and utterly wrong and misguided.

The problem with which Marx could not come to terms was that of surplus labour value. He could not accept the fact that someone might make a profit from someone else's labour. He forgot that the capitalist might make a profit from someone else's labour, but he also provides capital to make that labour more productive, so everyone benefits as a result.

Marx claimed that he was a scientific Socialist. In fact, he was a hopeless 19th century romantic, struggling to find a simple solution to the imperfectibility of mankind. That is why the result of Socialism in the many countries in which it has been tried is that effort is not put into wealth creation as it is in capitalist countries to the benefit of everyone. Efforts in Socialist countries are expended in climbing the party ladder. Keen, intelligent young people in Communist regimes often expend huge amounts of energy trying to grease their way up the party machine in an unproductive way while the same people in capitalist countries are creating wealth—for themselves of course, but much of it goes to the economy at large to benefit everyone.

In Socialist countries there is not less privilege but more. Similarly, there is more inequality and less wealth than in the west. That is the great irony. That supposedly egalitarian system creates more privilege and inequality and less wealth than capitalist systems. The crowning irony of Socialism is that if we really want to go somewhere where the dollar is king, we should go to a Socialist or Communist country. If we have a few dollares in our pockets in Poland, the Soviet Union or China, we are kings and can buy almost anything. That is the crowning irony and crowning failure of Socialism.

In the early 20th century, the Soviet Union was the growing economy in Europe. However, it now produces less food per head of the population than it did in 1915 when Russia was embroiled in the great war. Eastern Europe has sunk into a degraded state of poverty and pollution. China is an environmental disaster in which forests are devasted and rare and endangered animals are killed cruelly and needlessly.

I have seen pandas—the Chinese national animal—in China, kept in tiny concrete cages while Socialist youths threw cigarette butts at them. We hear much from Opposition Members about the fate of blacks in South Africa. That may be a worthy cause, but we rarely hear from Opposition Members about the vicious oppression of minorities in Communist countries such as China. Some Opposition Members need their eyes opening. If they spent less time going on about South Africa—no matter how worthy a cause it might be—and saw what happened to the Tibetans or perhaps went to Xin Jiang and saw what happened to the indigenous Turkish people there, their eyes might be opened and their views might be a little more balanced.

Hon. Members may have gathered that this is a tough time for aficionados of the old school of Socialism. Those who like old-style Stalinist Socialism are finding the scope of their travels greatly reduced. We have heard a little about North Korea. I refer also to Albania, Romania, and China, but there are not many more. Not many regimes now cling to the old certainties. Regimes in the West attempted to impose Socialism through social democratic means, but New Zealand, Australia, Sweden, Spain and France have almost wholly rejected that philosophy and are turning to policies not so different from the policies which Opposition Members criticised as Thatcherism.

If hon. Members conclude from my comments and from those of my hon. Friend the Member for Tatton (Mr. Hamilton) that Socialism is dead, they are wrong.

Socialism is alive and well, and in some of the oddest places. I shall enlarge on that seemingly unprofitable theme.

There is a large Ministry called Gosplan in the Soviet Union, nobody knows how many bureaucrats Gosplan has, but the number is probably well in excess of 100,000. Gosplan was set up by Leon Trotsky, who said that markets cannot deliver what the people need in a sophisticated modern economy. Gosplan was designed to control an economy centrally, to ensure that it delivered what people wanted. The great irony is that, as Gosplan is slowly being dismantled in the Soviet Union, we are hearing American capitalists echo Leon Trotsky's words. They are now telling us that markets cannot be allowed to determine the fate of strategic industries in which they have a financial interest. They are telling the United States Government that they need state support and protection from the Japanese, who have committed the ultimate sin of out-competing them in the marketplace. If the Americans listen to the siren voices of industrial special pleading, and move to more state control, they will ultimately realise that they are making the same mistakes as have been made in Socialist countries over the past few decades.

Disguised Socialism is not limited to the United States. The European Community spends vast sums on subsidising industry. Day by day, the Community sets up trade barriers against Japanese goods on the spurious ground that the Japanese have unfairly competed. That is a form of Socialism. Bureaucrats in the EEC are saying, "We must protect our industrial interests. We must control the economy. We must not allow consumers and markets to decide whether we will buy Japanese goods." That is why at this very moment there is a European Commission proposal that the Community, rather than the consumer and the marketplace, should control the price and flow of Japanese microchips into Europe. That is nothing more nor less than Socialism in disguise. I sincerely hope that my comments will be taken on board and that such pernicious policies will be rejected by the Government in the Council of Europe.

Having listened to the highly amusing speech of my fellow Derbyshire Member, the right hon. Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn), I can well understand the view that was expressed by two of his former colleagues. One of them, Hugh Gaitskell, referred to the right hon. Gentleman as a clever fool. The former Prime Minister, Lord Wilson of Rievaulx, opined that he had immatured with age. I shall enlarge on why those comments are particularly apposite.

The right hon. Member for Chesterfield, a doughty defender of Derbyshire county council and all its Socialist pretensions, claimed that people in Poland and Estonia do not want privatisation and free markets. What nonsense. It is exactly what they want. That is why people in Poland and Hungary are just beginning to embark on a massive round of privatisation. They realise that state ownership, central control and nationalisation do not work. That is exactly why they are taking measures to free their markets and to introduce market mechanisms. The right hon. Gentleman smiles, but he should go to those countries and listen to what the people say. They will tell him that Socialism has failed them. The right hon. Gentleman looks rather well-fed and well-dressed. He has benefited from capitalism all his life. Those people have not benefited from capitalism. They have suffered from Socialism. It is a shame that the right hon. Gentleman begrudges their chance to benefit from a freer market.

The right hon. Member for Chesterfield bitterly criticised the policies of the former Labour Government in which he served. He said that they should not have run to the International Monetary Fund in 1976. He said that, on several other counts, he disagreed with their policies. If he disagreed with such major policies, why did he not have the guts to resign and stick up for Socialism as he saw it?

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Exactly.

Mr. Oppenheim: I thank my hon. Friend for his support.

The right hon. Member for Chesterfield criticises the Government's handling of the ambulance men's dispute. I shall gladly give way to any Opposition Member who wishes to tell me when the Labour Government paid ambulance men better than this Government have and whether the Labour Government provided arbitration for any group of National Health Service workers. The deafening silence is the judge and jury.

The right hon. Member for Chesterfield bitterly criticised the Government's arms spending and spending on nuclear weapons. Again, when he was in power, he did not resign because the Labour Government spent a vast sum on nuclear weapons and wanted to update the old Polaris system in an expensive way to produce the Chevaline system. Once again, we see the right hon. Gentleman's double standards.

The right hon. Gentleman may sit securely on the Opposition Benches and criticise the Government for their arms spending. No one likes spending money on arms. We all know that, in an ideal world, we could spend that money on other things. However, in an insecure world, it is essential to spend money on arms. Thankfully, the world is more secure and there may be opportunities in the future to spend less money on weapons. If we had not spent that money on defence in earlier ages, we would probably not be in the happy position of looking forward to the growth of democracy, freedom and markets in the East. People in the GDR, Hungary, Poland and the Soviet Union are extremely glad that previous Governments, both Labour and Conservative, took difficult decisions to spend money on weapons to ensure that the West, democracy, liberalism and the free market were kept alive during the difficult days after the war so that people in the East can now benefit from the things from which we have benefited for so long.

11.37 am

Mr. Eric S. Heffer (Liverpool, Walton): Some speeches have not dealt seriously with the issue that has been raised by the hon. Member for Tatton (Mr. Hamilton). The issue is the future of Socialism. I have been attacked because, on many occasions, I have said that Socialism has never been tried in the Soviet Union or in Western Europe. Of course Socialist Governments have brought in welfare systems and changed matters slightly to the direction in which they should go, but they have not tried Socialism. Except perhaps for a short period in the early days, Socialism has never been introduced in the Soviet Union. I do not apologise for making that statement again.

I think of Communism as being the same, ultimately, as Socialism. That was clearly expressed by Keir Hardie in an excellent pamphlet many years ago. The idea of Socialism and Communism is by no means dead, for the simple reason that, as long as the capitalist system exists, as long as there is class power and privilege, as long as there are establishments that use oppressive measures against the people they control, as long as there is international struggle for markets, as long as there is war, and as long as people live in poverty, there will always be the demand and the fight for Socialism.

In the same way, there will always be the fight for Christianity. People may say that Socialism is dead, but many of my friends believe that Christianity is dead. Christianity has to renew itself from time to time. That is why many people go back to their roots and establish religious orders on the basis of common ownership of everything in that order. They believe in the old ideas of Christ and want to change society and make it a better place in which to live.

Socialism has to renew itself from time to time. I do not for a moment suggest that everything has been wonderful; my whole point is that it has not. We went wrong at certain stages. There are two basic concepts in the Socialist movement. The first is that Socialism is established from above with matters being determined from above; the second is that Socialism is created from below. It took me a long time to grasp the concepts of the Fabians and the Webbs. When I was a young boy I read a book called "Soviet Communism" written by the Webbs. They had been there, they returned and I thought that it must be pretty good in the Soviet Union because they said that it was wonderful. They were two Right-wing, moderate members of the Labour party. They were not revolutionaries and did not want to overthrow society, yet they argued for Soviet Communism. They began with a question mark, but then that was eliminated. I was much influenced by the book.

It took me a long time to work things out. The Webbs actually believed that ideas should be imposed from an elitist position on the working class, whether or not the working class liked it. I am reminded of the old story about the Socialist orator at Hyde park who said, "When we get Socialism you will all have motor cars." The little chap at the back said, "But I don't want a motor car." "You will have a motor car whether you like it or not", said the orator. In essence, that is what the Webbs were saying. The Bolsheviks, or at least the Stalinists, were very much attracted by that. It was the sort of society that they wanted.

It took me a long time to work it out—right through my period in the Communist party. I learned by bitter experience and I was expelled because finally I did not accept that view. I then began to study what was really happening in the Socialist movement, and it was a great thing at last to understand. Following the October Bolshevik revolution, Socialists throughout the world adhered to it. Other than the Paris commune, which was the first workers' revolution and was successful for a short time, the October revolution was the first time that the workers established a state of their own, where they would come into their own, and get the fruits of their labours, where oppression would be eliminated, where there would be freedom and democracy, and so on.

However, although Socialist workers throughout the world adhered to the October revolution, there were voices, equally Socialist, which were beginning to say that the concept of the Bolshevik leaders would lead to the reverse of democratic Socialism. As I said in our debate two weeks ago, one of the greatest voices was that of a wonderful woman, who was ultimately murdered by Right-wing military forces with the blessing of some of the Right-wing Socialists of the time. I am referring to Rosa Luxembourg. It is worth quoting a little of what she said because it expresses what Socialism is all about:

> "Freedom only for the supporters of the Government, only for the members of one party—however numerous they may be—is no freedom at all. Freedom is always and exclusively freedom for the one who thinks differently. Not because of any fanatical concept of justice but because all that is instructive, wholesome and purifying in political freedom depends on that essential characteristic; and its effectiveness vanishes when freedom becomes a special privilege."

That is the essence of what democratic Socialism is all about.

Why have I, from the day that I entered this House, been a critic not just of the Tory party but very often of my own party—some say, far too often? It is because I believe in the concept of democratic Socialism. If something is wrong, or if we simply think that something is wrong—and it may be we who are wrong—we must stand up, be counted and fight for what we believe in. If we do not do that, we are not worthy to be tribunes of the people who put us here. They put us here precisely to do that.

Over the years, my people in Walton have finally—although it was probably from the word go—come to like the idea of having a Member of Parliament who is prepared to do that. They believe in the concept of democratic Socialism, and they have proved it time and again with their votes. What was installed in the Soviet Union was not democratic Socialism, but bureaucratic authoritarian rule by people who, unfortunately, usurped the Socialist idea to a large extent.

I turned to the Concise Oxford Dictionary for a definition of Socialism. Its definition is wrong, so I understand why people misunderstand the true meaning of Socialism. That dictionary states that it is a > "political and economic theory of social organization" which advocates state ownership and control of

> "the means of production, distribution and exchange."

We never said that Socialism is a matter of state ownership. Public ownership is one thing but state ownership is another. There can be state ownership without Socialism. In Europe and in many other parts of the world where Socialists are not in power, there are many state-owned industries. Nationalisation in itself is a way of running industry that could, in certain circumstances, make the conditions of the workers worse. We have explained that so many times, but unfortunately Conservative Members never listen.

We agree that some industries may need to be nationalised as a form of public ownership. My own view is that nationalisation should be kept to a minimum, that there should be varying forms of public ownership instead, and that white collar and blue collar workers should control those industries through real forms of democratic management.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: Why?

Mr. Heffer: I shall not go into detail now, because many right hon. and hon. Members wish to speak. If the hon. Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett) will read his grandfather's works, he will find the answer. It is a pity that he has not done so.

Varying forms of public ownership are needed. Why should industry be taken out of the hands of individual private owners or groups of private owners, or away from the institutions? That must be done because we want to transform society. If we want to rid ourselves of class rule, of advantages for the minority at the expense of the majority, and of poverty, and if we want to ensure that everyone has a decent home, good educational opportunities and access to a free National Health Service, industry must be brought under a form of public ownership.

Why do public schools exist?

Mr. Bennett: Because people want them.

Mr. Heffer: Public schools exist only because there is class rule in this country. I am not against public schools. I want to see every educational institution offering a high standard of education.

Mr. Bennett: The right hon. Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn) is an ex-public school boy.

Mr. Heffer: Let us try to keep the debate at a serious level. I am trying to argue a serious case for Socialism, and I refuse to respond to silly jokes and statements. The debate is far too important for that.

I refer to the words of James Connolly—who was shot by the British because of his participation in the 1916 uprising.

Mr. Bennett: He was a Trotskyist.

Mr. Heffer: The hon. Member for Pembroke knows nothing about the Socialist movement. Connolly was killed before Trotsky was even heard of. In James Connolly's booklet, "Socialism Made Easy", he wrote:

> "The local and national Government, or rather, administrative bodies, of Socialism will approach every question with impartial minds, armed with the fullest expert knowledge born of experience; the governing bodies of capitalist society have to call in an expensive professional expert to instruct them on every technical question, and know that the impartiality of such an expert varies with, and depends upon, the size of his fee."

Connolly went on to say:

> "It will be seen that this conception of Socialism destroys at one blow all the fears of a bureaucratic State, ruling and ordering the lives of every individual from above".

We do not want a state apparatus controlling the whole of society like a vast octopus.

The hon. Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett) is not even listening. He equates state ownership and state control with Socialism; let me tell him that in Fascist Italy there was a great deal of state control, but there was no Socialism. There was capitalism, though. What was in operation was a method of supporting and maintaining the capitalist system. Similarly, there was no Socialism in Nazi Germany——

Mr. Bennett: There was National Socialism.

Mr. Heffer: They called themselves National Socialists, but they were not Socialists. They were protecting capitalism.

There was no Socialism in Franco's Spain. Instead, there was dictatorship, centralisation and administration from above. [Hon. Members: "That is Socialism."] It is not Socialism, but an extreme form of capitalism, which uses oppression to maintain private ownership. That is what it was then, and what it is now. If Conservative Members do not understand that, they really do not know the ABC of politics. It is about time that they began to learn that dictatorship can be established under forms of capitalism, as it was unfortunately established on a socialised industrial basis in the Soviet Union.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: The hon. Gentleman is making a most interesting and thoughtful speech: I am glad that he has raised the level of the debate from that which I introduced.

I am interested in the question of the allocation of capital resources under the kind of economic system that he describes. When public ownership operates without state control, how can capital be allocated to one enterprise rather than another, and how can investment priorities be decided? I cannot for the life of me see how an economic system can operate at all under such a system, as there seems to be no one to make the decisions.

Mr. Heffer: At present no such societies exist, although Sweden has gone part of the way towards establishing one. We need not have a Gosplan—a five-year plan that is worked out in detail but is never put into practice, so that the plan itself becomes everything. The people must be involved in democratic decisions: democracy is the answer to the hon. Gentleman's question.

Mr. Hamilton: How do we work it out?

Mr. Heffer: How do we work out democracy? Democracy, provided that it is genuine, will in time work itself out in its own way. We are here today only because of a fight for democracy that took place in this country. Had there been no such struggle—had the workers not created the Chartist movement and fought for the vote—I would certainly not be here today, and nor would the hon. Member for Tatton.

No doubt the monarch had objected very strongly; no doubt the reaction was, "We cannot have this business of democracy—everything must be left to me." That is the whole point: Socialism is the democratic process, and our criticism is that there has been no democratic process in the countries of eastern Europe.

I am sorry that I have been going on a bit, Madam Deputy Speaker. I had better bring my remarks to a conclusion—with some regret, because I had quite a lot to say. Let me make one more point, however. My right hon. Friend the Member for Chesterfield has said that the idea of Socialism was not created by the Russians, and of course it was not. It was created long before that. Moreover, it was not created by Marx. He picked up ideas from other people. He was a highly intelligent person and wrote brilliant material in the British museum. Keir Hardie came later. He said:

> "Socialism implies the inherent equality of human beings. It does not assume that all are alike, but only that all are equal. Holding this to be true of individuals, the Socialist applies it also to races."

In some countries where Socialist Governments have been elected, advances have been made. Let us consider what happened in this country between 1945 and 1950. Conservative Members say that this country gained nothing from Socialist Governments, but a Socialist Government introduced the National Health Service. When I came out of the forces after the war, that was one of the first things I wanted, so we set up the NHS. [Interruption.] Of course there were White Papers beforehand. Conservative Members must be stupid. A Socialist Government established the NHS, but the Tory party voted against the Bill on Second Reading. Some of us know what went on.

A Socialist Government also introduced the welfare state. Working people, such as my mother, were always terrified that when they reached old age they would have to go into the workhouse. My mother said to me, "Don't let me go into the workhouse, lad. Whatever happens, try and save me from it." Many people could not save their parents from going into the workhouse; they were so poor that they could do nothing about it. However, a Labour Government introduced a welfare system that meant that people did not have to go into workhouses. They transformed the whole scene by building a massive number of houses. Large numbers of houses had been destroyed during the war, so there was a great housing need. A Labour Government met that need.

That was not Socialism, of course. The Labour Government left the class system and power and privilege in the hands of the capitalist class. If they had destroyed that, it would have been the first stage towards real Socialism. Despite their failure, they introduced many beneficial measures—Socialist oases in a capitalist surrounding.

The Government are reversing all the positive measures that Labour Governments introduced. People are again fearful. The old are very worried; unemployment creates fear. People are again finding that they are homeless. They sleep in cardboard boxes at night. Thousands of other people do not sleep in cardboard boxes at night; instead they are crowded into their parents' homes. They live in conditions that create problems and interminable rows. I know; I lived in rooms for nearly 12 years at the end of the second world war because we were unable to get a place of our own.

Labour Governments have made a great contribution to the welfare of people in Britain. My criticism of the leadership of my party is that we do not need to give up our Socialist aspirations and accept the mores of the Conservative Government in order to win power. We can win power on the basis of our Socialist concepts. That is the only point where I part company with those on the Opposition Front Bench, although it is a pretty important difference of opinion. I do not deny the fundamental difference of our approach to these matters.

> "To the Socialist, the community represents a huge family organisation in which the strong should employ their gifts in promoting the wealth of all, instead of using their strength for their own personal aggrandisement."

Unfortunately, nowadays in Britain, the strong are using their power against the weak, particularly in the anti-trade union legislation. I want to see a Socialist society which, as I said before, I equate with my Christian upbringing and Christian concepts. I do not see any great difference between the two; to me they represent the same transformation of society and the building of something entirely new. That is why I welcome what is happening now in the Soviet Union. Perhaps now at last they can get back to creating what some of them really wanted in the first place, having exposed the nature of Stalinism.

We in Britain, particularly as Socialists, have to learn that we must not follow that path ever and we must always stand up against such degeneration. But neither must we follow the path we are being offered today by the Conservative Government. That is no answer to the problems of Britain or the world. We have to go out there and fight for God's kingdom here, which I believe is a Socialist one.

The Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (Mr. Kenneth Baker): The hon. Member for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Heffer) has won the respect of the House, not only today but often before, because he represents the tradition of Christian Socialism, about which he has just spoken very movingly.

Before making my own contribution to the debate, I shall start by commenting upon the death of Dr. Sakharov. I am sure I speak for all the House in saying that Dr. Sakharov stood out against the tyranny, the cruelty and the repression of the old regime in Russia. He made a very brave personal stand against that for human rights, knowing full well what the penalties would be—arrest, exile, imprisonment and the victimisation of his family. He carried with him all the hopes of oppressed people in Soviet Russia and throughout eastern Europe. We should pay tribute to his bravery and his personal courage, because he showed the unbreakable spirit of man. He was a symbol of liberty; he was the conscience of his country. Ultimately he found his allies, and reform is his legacy. He is truly a hero of the Soviet Union.

I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Tatton (Mr. Hamilton) first on his luck in the ballot and secondly on having the inspiration to introduce the motion. It is very rare that we have a chance to debate foreign and domestic policy together, and almost unknown that we discuss the philosophy of politics. The right hon. Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn) made that point, having been in the House for nearly 40 years now. Is it really as long as that?

Mr. Benn indicated assent.

Mr. Baker: That is a long time. He said he has never actually debated Socialism before. I too welcome the debate.

I have always believed that Socialist thought was distinguished by two very clear concepts—first, the conviction that Socialists had that they had possession of the truth, and, secondly, their belief that history was on their side. Listening to today's debate and reading the debate on 1 December, I have discovered another element of Socialism—that Socialism has never been tried anywhere in the world. It has not been tried in Russia since 1917 or in eastern Europe since 1945. No country has ever tried it. Everyone is trying to walk away and dissociate themselves at a rate of knots from what has happened in the past 70 or 80 years in the Socialist republic of Russia. It reminds me of the old music hall song about the drunk and the pig lying in the gutter. The refrain is:

> "You can tell a man who boozes by the company he chooses;
> At which the pig got up and walked away."

That seems to characterise the views of those who are trying to get up and walk away. Reference has already been made to Karl Marx and Marxism but in 1848, in the opening sentence of the "Communist Manifesto" Marx said:

> "A spectre is haunting Europe—the spectre of Communism."

His philosophy developed the belief that revolution would bring the end of capitalism, just as capitalism had brought the end of feudalism. In England at the turn of the century —as the hon. Member for Walton mentioned—that idea was given a new twist by Sidney and Beatrice Webb who invented the phrase, "the inevitability of gradualness." That was the essence of Fabian Socialism. It was believed that it was only a question of time before collectivism and the corporate state took over.

Also in the 1930s, the Webbs wrote a book to which the hon. Member for Walton referred. It was published in 1935 and called "Soviet Communism—A New Civilisation?". However, when that book came to its second edition in 1937, the question mark after the subtitle had been dropped. It was just an assertion—they had seen the future, it was working and it was marvellous. They had seen the promised land and thought that it was wonderful. At that time, the Labour party was not trying to dissociate itself from that—it had seen it and liked it.

After the creation of the welfare state in the 1940s, and after the Attlee Government took into possession vast numbers of industrial companies, Socialists confidently predicted that the ratchet effect was working and that it was inevitable that the corporate power of the state would increase, because more and more of economic and social life would come under the sway of the state.

The Conservative party has always known that truth is not to be found on the side of Socialism. We have never believed that either the success or the defeat of Socialism was inevitable. On the whole,. Tories do not believe in historical inevitability. We still remember vividly those instances—in this country and abroad—where Socialism has "triumphed".

I am aware that there are differences between the Socialism advocated on the Opposition Front Bench and that practised in eastern Europe. There are considerable differences between eastern Europe Socialists and many —although not all—in the Labour party. Undoubtedly Egon Krenz cuts a more decisive and convincing figure as the leader of East Germany's Communists than the right hon. Member for Islwyn (Mr. Kinnock) does as leader of the British Labour party.

In eastern Europe, only a selected few can join the official party, whereas in Britain any old Trotskyist can join the Labour party. In eastern Europe, only a small minority of party hacks can elect the leadership, whereas in the Labour party all members can vote in elections, which are rendered meaningless by the trade union block vote. [Interruption.] We believe in the principle of one man, one vote, which we have recently exercised.

Mr. Charles Kennedy (Ross Cromarty and Skye): I apologise for missing the first few minutes of the right hon. Gentleman's speech. Far be it from me to defend Socialism or whatever brand or variety of it within the Labour party the right hon. Gentleman is talking about. However, I noticed that Big Ben has stopped. Does that mean that just as time has run out for Socialism, the clock has stopped on the conservatism of the Government?

Mr. Baker: That is an interesting fact. However, I thought that the hon. Gentleman would use his intervention to explain his political philosophy. Where will he stand in the great divide? When the great divide comes, he may not have a seat left in which to stand. I thought that the hon. Gentleman was on the Left in British politics, but now he is moving further and further——

Mr. Kennedy: Centre Left.

Mr. Baker: Is it still centre Left? The hon. Gentleman is obviously looking for a home, and I do not know whether he will find one in his party.

I want to be fair to the Labour party. It is not fair to say that it is automatically the same as the Socialist parties of eastern Europe. The hon. Member for Walton made that clear.

Mr. Giles Radice (Durham): That is decent of you.

Mr. Baker: It might be decent for the hon. Gentleman, but there are other members of his party who stand well to the Left of him, and they are better represented in the Chamber today than those who favour his brand of Socialism.

European Communism has never been mixed, unlike English Liberalism, and it has never given minimum respect for human freedom and human individuality. At the same time, there is no tradition of compromise or settlement of dispute by debate in eastern Europe. Instead, there is diktat. There is, however, a common denominator. All members of the Labour party, from whichever wing, share a basic assumption. Indeed, it is one that is common to all Socialists. They all believe that the state knows best.

Mr. Benn indicated dissent.

Mr. Baker: When the state is run by the right hon. Gentleman, he believes that it is right.

All Socialists believe that it is not enough for the Government to set the rules of the game and to let other parties and society generally observe those rules. They all believe—the career of the right hon. Member for Chesterfield is testament to this—that the state and the Government should take a leading role in the game and in the economic life of a civil society.

Mr. Benn: I appreciate that the right hon. Gentleman is being serious for a moment, but if he reads history he will find that the use of state power by the forces of capitalism in Britain has been ruthless. He will find, to take more recent examples, that all campaigns for trade union rights and local government rights and the fight for a referendum on whether the United Kingdom should be in the Common Market came from the Left. It was the Conservative party which took us into Europe without consulting anyone. That which the right hon. Gentleman suggests has never been my view. I have tried throughout my life to push decisions down the line. I have never sought to centralise decision-making. I hope that he will not want to leave an injustice on the record.

Mr. Baker: The right hon. Gentleman may have had that personal desire, but it was not reflected in his performance as a Minister and a member of the Labour Cabinet. He spoke most eloquently of planning as a member of a Cabinet that believed in planning. That Cabinet planned this country into bankruptcy, high inflation and huge cuts in public expenditure. The right hon. Gentleman cannot shake off his past. He cannot disregard it.

[Mr. Baker]

The common thread that binds all Socialists is their belief that the state and the Government have a crucial role in determining policies and economics in society. Like it or not, that is the presupposition of all Socialist programmes, whether they be Communist or Fabian, British or Romanian. The core of Socialist thought—the right hon. Member for Chesterfield made this clear—is that market forces do not work.

Mr. Benn indicated assent.

Mr. Baker: I note that the right hon. Gentleman is nodding. Socialists believe that it is not possible to rely on the individual choice and that the state or the Government, whichever body one likes, has to introduce corrections to the inefficiencies and inequalities that emerge. They do not trust the market and they do not trust market forces. Instead, they believe in a command economy.

I do not think that there is anything inevitable about the defeat of Socialism. As I have said, Conservatives do not believe in historical inevitability. There has been nothing inevitable about the retreat of Socialism in the 1980s. In my view, there was nothing inevitable about the collapse of Stalinism in eastern Europe. Equally, there was nothing inevitable about the accession of Mikhail Gorbachev in the Soviet Union. In 1985, the ruling group in the Kremlin had a choice between the reform-minded Mikhail Gorbachev and the old-style hardliner, Grigoriy Romanov. It chose Mikhail Gorbachev because he represented a break with the policies that had failed, and had failed badly. Those policies had led to a bloody and humiliating stalemate in Afghanistan, to the deployment of cruise missiles in the West and to the stagnation and collapse of the Soviet economy.

Mr. Gorbachev came to power because Socialism had failed in the Soviet Union. It failed because we in the West showed that we had the will to match it and because we out-performed it economically. As my hon. Friend the Member for Tatton said, thanks largely to the courage of my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, we deployed cruise missiles in 1981, 1982 and 1983 against a massive and unprecedented Soviet propaganda offensive, in which Labour Members and their CND allies were the shock troops. Once the Soviet Union knew that it could not break NATO or the will of its peoples, it knew that it could never win the battle of military spending and that its economy would break under the strain before the economies of the West. Mikhail Gorbachev walked through the door of realisation that opened at that moment.

Never let it be fogotten—this is the point that my hon. Friend the Member for Tatton made—that, if Labour had had its way in 1983, there would have been no cruise deployment, no intermediate nuclear forces deal, no recognition that the old regime had failed, no recognition that a reform movement was needed in Russia, and probably no Mr. Gorbachev.

The events of the past few weeks have marked the end of an age. Future generations will look back and regard 1989 as one of the most remarkable years since the war. It will stand alongside the other great years of European history—1815, 1848, the year of the revolutions, 1918 and 1945. In each of those years, the physical shape of Europe was changed, just as it will be changed by the events of this year.

History does not divide itself neatly into centuries. Historically, the 19th century did not end in 1900 but died in the trenches of the first world war. The 21st century has not waited until the year 2000. We certainly live in most historic times.

In eastern Europe, we are seeing the collapse and end of 40 years of oppression, as the remnants of the Communist leadership try to cling to office. Like all revolutions, this one began with intellectuals—Solzhenitsyn, Sakharov and the woman poet Irina Ratushinskaya. They were brave people because they spoke against arbitrary arrest, labour camps and psychiatric hospitals, and they got their message out to the world and to the Soviet Union itself. There were also political heroes, such as Imre Nagy, Dubcek and Lech Walesa. I remember hearing, when I was a student at Oxford in 1956, that most tragic and moving radio broadcast by Imre Nagy, saying that the tanks were moving to Budapest and begging for help from anyone in the world.

Help did not come, so, in effect, Hungary lost 30 years, just as Czechoslovakia lost 20 years when the tanks moved into Prague. [Interruption.] The West was not prepared to move because at that time the Soviet military might seemed supreme. There were times in recent history when Socialism seemed to be triumphant and when the values that the West respected and lived by seemed in the descendent.

Mr. Tony Banks rose——

Mr. Baker: I shall give way to the hon. Gentleman in a moment, but I want to finish this piece about the developments in recent years.

Mr. Gorbachev's unique contribution is that, instead of crushing dissent with the Red army, he has allowed the forces in Eastern Europe to break through and do their own thing. He has rejected the Brezhnev doctrine, which was to use military might to bring the satellites to heel. The Kremlin's chief spokesman, Mr. Gennady Gerasimov, said recently that eastern countries were free to conduct their own affairs, which he called the "Sinatra doctrine" —"You can do it your way." Incidentally, that is about the best joke to come out of the Soviet Union since Mr. Khrushchev published his grain forecasts.

Any Communist leader who wants to reform today faces an inexplicable and inescapable dilemma: how does one implement crucial economic reforms in the eastern bloc without opening a Pandora's box and without unleashing political reforms that will take away the Communist party? That is the Gorbachev dilemma. As developments unfold in Poland, Czechoslovakia, East Germany and Bulgaria, it is clear that nowhere in eastern Europe has anybody found th solution to that dilemma: how to bring about economic reform without escalating a further phase of political reform.

People have lost patience. Moscow stands by as the old guard crumbles. The West must watch closely and listen carefully, for in eastern Europe today the cloth of history is being cut.

Mr. Tony Banks: I should like to take the right hon. Gentleman back to what happened in 1956. Perhaps he would like to inform the House where the well-scrubbed young Baker stood then. We know what he thought about the invasion of Hungary, but what did he think in 1956 about British aggression in the Suez canal area in conjuction with the Israelis?

Mr. Baker: We had vigorous debates in the Oxford university Conservative association. I was an official of that association, and we supported the Government of the day and their actions. That is all on record. The hon. Gentleman cannot divert the attention of the House from the point that I was making. There has been consistent repression in Europe for 40 years. The hon Gentleman would be one of the first to object to that and would be on the side of the freedom fighters.

The national motto of Czechoslovakia is "Pravda Zvitezi"—"Truth will prevail". Would that it would always prevail. It certainly did not prevail in 1968, when the Soviet tanks crushed the Prague spring uprising. Among those who were arrested and imprisoned was the playwright Vaclav Havel. Six months ago, it would have been preposterously fanciful to think that he could be considered as President of his country. Only about two months ago, the then Prime Minister, Ladislav Adamec, dismissed Havel as absolute zero. Now Havel is waiting for his country's call. Havel is a man of ideas who, to use his own phrase, understands that words are capable of shaping the entire structure of government.

Of course, the words of the dissidents found a ready audience in societies that were rotten to the core with inefficiency and corruption after 40 years of central planning. The right hon. Member for Chesterfield waxed eloquent about planning, saying how it was an essential part of a Socialist society. They have had 40 years of it in the eastern bloc; now they do not want any more.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: My right hon. Friend's point about planning is important. Does he recall that the right hon. Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn) was part of the Government in 1964 who introduced a national plan? On the day that the national plan was published, Her Majesty's Stationery Office ran out of copies because it had not printed enough. The Labour Government could not even forecast how many copies of the plan they would need. It was not exactly a good augury. It underlines the fundamental failure of the planning process of that time.

Mr. Baker: My hon. Friend has a good memory. He is correct. Within about two years, the Labour Government abandoned the national plan. They created the Department of Economic Affairs to implement the plan. I think that it was invented during a taxi ride between this place and St. Ermin's hotel. It was not an effective plan.

No one can pretend that Socialism has been anything other than an unmitigated disaster for the countries of eastern Europe. In 1956, Khrushchev said, "We will bury you." He forecast that Soviet production by 1980 would be greater than American production. In fact, America's GDP in 1980 was three times that of the Soviet Union.

The Soviets failed in that part of the economy which is most dear to Socialists: the producing industries. Marx writes about production again and again, and Socialist thought has focused on production again and again. Why did Socialist policies fail? They failed because the Sociaists believed too much in the producer and put producer interests above consumer interests. That point was made by my hon. Friend the Member for Amber Valley (Mr. Oppenheim). They failed because they did not realise the dynamism of innovation which comes from the market place. Socialists wanted to eliminate the inefficiencies of private ownership, but they created new pinnacles of inefficiency.

My hon. Friend the Member for Tatton could well have told the story about the tractor factories in Russia. There are 3 million tractors in Russia of which the Russians are proud as a symbol of agricultural progress. However, of the 3 million tractors in Russia, at any one time 250,000 are being repaired, not because they have broken down but because, when planning the output of the tractor factory repair shops, a planner said that the shops should repair so many tractors each month. If the shops fall down on that target, the tractors have to be taken back off the land. As a result, at any one time in western Siberia, half of the tractors being repaired have not broken down. That is the consequence of Socialist planning.

Not only has Socialism failed economically, but it has dramatically failed environmentally, as my hon. Friend the Member for Amber Valley said. When the planners decided to increase cotton output in——

Dr. Jeremy Bray (Motherwell, South) rose——

Mr. Baker: No, I certainly shall not give way. The hon. Gentleman has just strolled in and, like the Ancient Mariner, he "stoppeth one of three". I shall not give way to the hon. Gentleman; he can stroll out again and go and have a cup of coffee.

When the planners decided to increase cotton production in the southern republics, they diverted for irrigation purposes, two main rivers which supplied the Aral sea. As a result, the level of the Aral sea in southern Russia has fallen by a third since 1960, and if nothing is done it will not exist by the year 2010.

Mr. Jeremy Corbyn (Islington, North): What about the North sea?

Mr. Baker: The hon. Gentleman should pay attention. He is interested in environmental matters and should see just how badly Socialism has treated the environment in this case. In the areas from which the sea has now receded, poisonous salt dust blows over the surrounding districts, many of the flora and fauna have been killed, there is a high rate of typhoid, cholera, hepatitis and throat cancer and there is one of the highest infant mortality rates anywhere in Asia.

Large multinational western companies are frequently attacked by Socialists like the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) because of their environmental policies. I can think of no clearer indication of the law of unintended consequences and no clearer indictment of central planning than the laying waste of the Aral sea by the Socialist planners of the Soviet Union.

Mr. Corbyn: The right hon. Gentleman should be aware that, two weeks ago, I had an interesting meeting with an environmental campaigning group from the Soviet Union who openly admitted that the industrial policies followed in the past by the Soviet Union and many countries in central and eastern Europe had done a great deal of environmental damage. The difference is that those people felt that they had the power to change the policies to stop the destruction of their own environment. The policies of free-market economies which the right hon. Gentleman propounds have led to the pollution of the North sea and the Irish sea, the destruction of the rain forests in Brazil and Malaysia and long-term serious environmental damage by multinational companies all over the southern countries of this planet.

Mr. Baker: I am glad to say that some people in Russia now recognise the environmental damage. When I was there a year ago, I was shown computer models of the lakes and seas in Russia. It is a disgrace, and as far as I know, nothing has been done about it. The difference between Britain and the Soviet Union is that we are getting on with solving the problem of environmental pollution.

The lesson to be drawn from the analogies that I have used is clear: the more Socialist medicine is forced down a country's throat, the weaker that country becomes. In eastern Europe, undiluted Socialism has been forced down many countries' throats. In Great Britain at the next election, the Labour party will peddle its own brand of Socialism, and that, too, would make our country weaker. At heart, the Labour party is still a Socialist party. For all the repackaging, and for all the duplicity of the policy review, the party is the same underneath. It does not matter what one calls it—market Socialism, designer Socialism, filofax Socialism or even cordless telephone Socialism—it is still Socialism.

The hon. Member for Dagenham (Mr. Gould) has written a book entitled "The Future of Socialism". Where is he today? I thought that he would at least have the decency to come and answer this debate. He has thought about the future of Socialism and is trying to plan Socialism out of the Labour party. We are not to have a reply from one of the Labour party ideologues today; instead we have heard the Back-Bench ideologues. I believe that the book written by the hon. Member for Dagenham, "The Future of Socialism" is about to be remaindered, along with Socialism itself.

When Labour Members talk about fair taxes, they mean crushing taxes. When they talk of a charter of employees' rights, they mean giving more power to the trade union bosses. When they talk of public interest companies—their latest phrase—they mean renationalised private industry. Let there be no mistake about it: the Labour party still believes that a Labour Government should have a leading role to play in the economy. That belief runs through the whole of the policy review. The analysis of the policy review is simple: market forces and individual choice have failed and all that Thatcherism has done in the past 10 years has failed, and the answer is to bring back all the planning mechanisms—regional investment banks, directed investment, controls on business. How old and quaint all that now sounds.

The Labour party's policies are in sharp contradistinction to everything that the leaders of the eastern European countries now want. When I met Lech Walesa a fortnight ago, he said, "We want British, German and French companies to tell us how to run our industries." He actually used the word "capitalists", because he realises that Socialism has failed. Those countries want the advantages of a market economy and all the advantages that capitalism can bring, such as property rights that are properly protected, shareholders, freedom to invest, dividends and freedom to make money and keep it. They have realised that state subsidy is not the way to prosperity. They also want an end to the system that has been described in the following terms: "We pretend to work and they pretend to pay us." That is what eastern European leaders want.

It is ironic, is it not, that, at a time when eastern European leaders want shareholders, the Labour Front Bench team threatens dividends? They do not believe in shareholders. They want to abolish dividends and would like to reduce the role of the shareholder to no role at all.

Mr. Skinner: Will the right hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Baker: No. Is it not ironic——

Hon. Members: Give way.

Mr. Michael Brown: Go on. One chairman to another.

Mr. Baker: Of course I shall give way to the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Skinner: As chairman of the Labour party, I was elected, unlike the right hon. Gentleman, who got the job on the nod from the Prime Minister, and I am unpaid, unlike the right hon. Gentleman, who is on a big fat Cabinet salary. In that capacity, let me ask him this. Is he now going to tell us that those in eastern Europe want the poll tax, the cardboard boxes, the drugs and all the rest associated with the capitalist society that he is so happy to defend? Are they requesting them, too?

Mr. Baker: If the hon. Gentleman is making the absurd proposition that there are no down-and-outs in Russia, and that Russia does not have a drug problem, he has no understanding of what is happening in the world. I am glad that I gave way to him. I suppose that, as chairman of the Labour party, he is my shadow, and he speaks with the authentic voice of the Left wing, which is very much larger than the Labour party would like to think.

Is it not ironic that, while Poland is to open its first private school this year, the Labour party wants to strangle private schools? Is it not extradordinary that, while Hungary and Poland are talking about privatising state industries, all we hear from the Labour party are threats of nationalisation? I hope the hon. Member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson) will tell us his list of industries to be nationalised. Will it be British Water, British Gas or British Telecom? Let him publish his list because everyone else has published one. He should add his twopenn'orth as well, because we want to know.

How can the Opposition want to shackle the market now, when eastern Europe wants to free the markets? When will the Labour party realise that Socialism does not work and that no example of a successful Socialist country exists? What creed posseses the Labour party to make it decide that we in Britain should now start imitating eastern Europe when eastern Europe wants to imitate us? Where has the Labour party been sleeping for the past 10 years?

The world is on the move again, and it is moving our way. In the dark years, this Government kept the torch of liberty burning bright. Now millions upon millions of fellow Europeans are emerging from that twilight. They are coming to embrace us and to live in a common European home governed by values and principles which this Government have held dear for decades. My colleagues and I are proud to belong to a party, a Government and a country which have been so steadfast in the defence of freedom.

Mr. George Robertson (Hamilton): During my political career—in 1986—I attended the congress of the Communist party of the Soviet Union in Moscow and the congress of the Socialist Unity Party of Germany in the German Democratic Republic. I then had the pleasure —if that is the right word—of listening to Mr. Gorbachev speak to his congress for six hours and listening to Mr. Honecker speak for four hours to his congress. Having heard the 57-minute speech with which the hon. Member for Tatton (Mr. Hamilton) opened the debate, I must tell him that his speech was certainly east European in its length, but it lacked the spontaneity and the standing ovations which mark such speeches in eastern bloc countries. Having listened to marathon speeches, I reflected on the fact that the House of Commons teaches us how to make speeches of gargantuan length but not how to listen to or absorb them.

The hon. Member for Tatton, whose good fortune has led to this historic debate, asked a question which is worthy of a reply. He asked why I had been called upon to speak from the Opposition Front Bench in this debate. That question deserves some consideration. The hon. Member for Tatton is conceited if he believes that I am complementing him in this debate because I am the hon Member for Hamilton. Perhaps I am a more appropriate choice as the Opposition Front Bench spokesman because Kier Hardie, to whom my hon. Friend the Member for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Heffer) referred several times in his contribution, worked in my constituency. Indeed, Kier Hardie lost his job in the coal mining industry in my constituency and was forced to open a tobacconist and confectioner's shop to make ends meet before he went on to greater things. Perhaps I am an appropriate choice because part of my constituency formed the Mid-Lanark seat. In that historic by-election in 1888 Kier Hardie stood as the first Labour candidate, and started a process which led to the foundation of the Scottish and then the British Labour parties. Perhaps I am an appropriate choice as Opposition Front Bench spokesman because Alexander MacDonald, a Member of Parliament in the middle of last century and president of the miners' union, was born and brought up and finally died in my constituency.

Perhaps a better explanation, however, lies with the election of my first predecessor in the constituency of Hamilton. The first hon. Member of Parliament for Hamilton, Mr. Duncan Graham, was elected in 1918, in what was called the coupon election. The coalition swept the country, but Mr. Duncan Graham won the Hamilton seat because the Conservative Whips issued two coupons to two candidates who split their vote equally and thus allowed Mr. Duncan Graham, the Labour candidate, to be elected. Labour won Hamilton in 1918 because of a foul-up in the Whips Office, and that tradition goes on to this day.

The debate has inevitably been sparked off by events in eastern Europe. I associate myself with the sentiments expressed by the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster and by the hon. Member for Tatton about Dr. Andrei Sakharov. I met Dr. Sakharov in July this year when he spoke at the Royal Institute of International Affairs. His death today is an event of considerable significance. He blazed a trail in the Soviet Union, and his bravery is without comparison. He not only survived persecution, imprisonment and banishment, but went on to serve as a distinguished member of what is increasingly becoming a free and open Parliament in the Soviet Union. Credit is due to Mr. Gorbachev for his recognition of that courage and the return of Andrei Sakharov from exile in Gorky.

When I was in Leningrad in September, in the official shop I purchased a poster published by the Communist party of the Soviet Union illustrating the work of the Congress of People's Deputies and the Supreme Soviet. Among all the usual photographs of the hierarchy, there was a photograph of Dr. Sakharov, with other members of the Opposition in that Parliament, arguing with the President of the Supreme Soviet, Mikhail Gorbachev. If the Conservative party published such posters featuring its former leaders, one would regard it as more open.

We should note the dignified, peaceful and orderly way in which the people of eastern Europe have taken back their lives. We must admire the lack of vengeance, violence and retribution against those who gaoled, tortured, persecuted and oppressed their people for so many years and who, it is now revealed in graphic detail, robbed them at the same time. What all the missiles, tanks, troops and ships that we deployed against those countries for 40 years failed to do, the people did for themselves simply by saying, "Enough." They politely but emphatically told the Stasi in East Germany and the secret police or party militia which existed in so many other countries the local equivalent of, "Get stuffed". The architects of repression, oppression, internal security and control immediately bowed before the earthquake of popular support, gales of liberated laughter and the derision of people from whom, after four decades, the yoke had finally been lifted.

I regret to say that the opening speech in this debate, though witty in part, was in stark contrast with the brave and inspiring example that we have seen in eastern Europe in the last year of this decade. It is sad that the traumatic and reviving events among the brave people of eastern Europe are being used as a ramp in a trivial and superficial attack on the British Labour party and on democratic Socialism. In no way does it diminish those who have fought for their freedom and are continuing to do so even on this very day. The hon. Member for Tatton was in the witness box in the High Court in 1986. In his defence he said that he and other hon. Members on the trip about which accusations had been made, for which he received handsome damages from the BBC, were winding down during the parliamentary recess and that there was a little larking about. His contribution today fell into that category, rather than representing a sensible contribution to a major subject before the House, the nation and the world.

It is appropriate that the chairman of the Conservative party should have been singled out by the Government to give their view in this debate. As my hon. Friend the Member for Bolsover (Mr. Skinner) said, the right hon. Gentleman has even less credibility than Mr. Egon Krenz, about whom he spoke earlier. At least Mr. Krenz, for the brief period he was in power, was elected by the party that he represented, and removed pretty quickly——

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Oh yes?

Mr. Robertson: Yes, Mr. Krenz was elected by the party, undemocratic though that may be. The Conservative party does not go through any form of election. Its chairman, picked by Mrs. Honecker at No 10 Downing street, was the architect of the abolition of the

[Mr. Robertson]

Greater London council. He disagreed with the people, thought that the people were not capable of making a decision about local government, and swept away the GLC. Who could be more appropriate than the unelected abolitionist to represent the voice of free enterprise?

Mr. Kenneth Baker: No one has regretted the demise of the Greater London council—with the exception of its former chairman, the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks), who actually has the regalia of his former office tucked away in a trunk awaiting the opportunity to don it once again. As the hon. Member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson) has been waxing eloquent about the Greater London council, can he say whether it is Labour party policy to restore it?

Mr. Robertson: There is a commitment to restore proper government to London. Proper elections are the hallmark of the Labour party, whereas the unelected chairman of the Conservative party sits here as the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, the hallmark of the Conservative view being to abolish elections when the election result is likely to be inconvenient to the party.

Mr. Tony Banks: Perhaps I can help my hon. Friend. Our policy documents are copious and perhaps not read all the way through by everyone. At a meeting of the London group of Labour Members, of which I am the chair, our hon. Friend the Member for Dagenham (Mr. Gould)—the Shadow Secretary of State for the Environment—made it clear that when a Labour Government are elected, city-wide government in London will also be restored.

Mr. Robertson: I am grateful for my hon. Friend's clarification. We shall also restore government to Scotland in a Scottish assembly. The Government prattle on about freedom and champion the cause of self-determination in the Baltic republics, but cannot even fulfil the Standing Orders of the House and establish a Select Committee on Scottish Affairs. A little hollowness can be detected in all their protestations about freedom.

There is one favour that the right hon. Gentleman can do for the people of Czechoslovakia. I shall be visiting Prague next week, and I understand that the Czechoslovak Communist party is, in its reorganisation, looking for a new name. It might be worth suggesting "Conservative and Unionist party" as being admirably suitable. It will not have escaped the notice of Conservative Members and people in the country that almost universally those who are losing their positions in the great revolution of the people throughout eastern Europe—all those who have propped up the dreary, drab regimes over the years—are called conservatives, and they are not conservatives for nothing. The regimes that they have propped up have all the usual characteristics.

My hon. Friend the Member for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Heffer) looked in the "Concise Oxford Dictionary" for a definition of Socialism, which was a worthy objective. I looked for a definition of Conservatism in a book written by the hon. Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle (Mr. Leigh) called "Right Thinking"—something of a contradiction in terms. It was published some time ago.

Mr. Tony Banks: It is now being remaindered by W. H. Smith.

Mr. Robertson: It was remaindered a long time ago. I bought my copy in a second-hand book shop. Its antiquity is amply evidenced by the fact that it has two equally lyrical prefaces—one by Margaret Thatcher and the other by Sir Ian Gilmour, who at that time were apparently even speaking to each other. I read through the book for inspiration and found a definition of Conservatism taken from an address given by Abraham Lincoln in 1860:

> "What is Conservatism? Is it not adherence to the old and tried against the new and untried?"

There is the epitaph for all the collapsing Conservatives in eastern Europe and those who are about to go out of fashion in the West.

Mr. Michael Brown: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Robertson: No, not just now.

Mr. Brown: But the hon. Gentleman misquoted Abraham Lincoln.

Mr. Robertson: No, I have not.

Mr. Brown: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): Order. The hon. Member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson) can decide whether or not he wants to give way.

Mr. Michael Brown: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. The hon. Member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertston) misquoted Abraham Lincoln. He used the words, "Is it not" whereas the quote states, "It is not".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Member for Brigg and Cleethorpes (Mr. Brown) must not try to intervene in the debate.

Mr. Robertson: As one witnesses the inspiring scenes shown on our television sets in the past few weeks, one has detected an instinctive sympathy at No. 10 Downing street with the beleaguered leaderships and establishments of eastern Europe, rather than with the noisy, ordinary, impudent, protesting rabble in the streets demanding the resignation of those leaders.

One may consider, for example, the fate of Erich Honecker, currently under popular house arrest as there appears to be no existing law permitting him to be charged. He is accused of amassing huge personal wealth and of owning a number of dachas—private houses in the country. I understand that Mr. Willi Stoph, the former Prime Minister, has also been accused of keeping 100 different brands of whisky in his cellar. In our part of the world, that would be regarded as trade advertising. In any event, it is not difficult to make a comparison with the British Prime Minister and her own private wealth, with her dacha in Dulwich and at Chequers, as well as a very fashionable flat in the most expensive part of Westminster. At this very moment it is being fortified and having railings put around it—which must make the members of the East German politburo green with envy.

The peoples of eastern Europe are turning their backs on Communism but not on Socialism. Certainly they are rejecting the one-party, bureaucratic, centralised state, with its tyranny, oppression, economic failure and crushing censorship. But the people are not turning their back on social welfare and on justice. The people are demanding something new. They want more freedom, more choice and greater democracy, but they are not demanding Thatcherism. They foresee not the blueprint of the unregulated market system, with all its inequalities and injustices, but rather the example of what they know to be democratic Socialism. They do not want to exchange one form of tyranny for another. That is why Alexander Dubcek, whom the Chancellor of the Duchy mentioned, spoke in 1968 of

That is what is required now. It means dismantling the dead weight of the state apparatus, introducing multi-party democracy and decentralising power in those countries; it does not mean embracing cut-throat laissez-faire, with no provision for the wellbeing of the community and no support for the weak and needy.

In the streets of Leipzig and in Wenceslas square the crowds shouted, "Gorby, Gorby, Gorby." No one shouted, "Maggie, Maggie, Maggie." Even Lech Walesa does not think like the Prime Minister, although she admires him, and he admires her in some ways. In September I visited the Soviet Republic of Georgia and met the former deputy Speaker of the Georgian Parliament, a man of great distinction who reached the age of 80 last month and has clearly been a power in the land for many of those 80 years. He said to me, "Mr. Robertson, I have to tell you that Mrs. Thatcher is very popular in this area." I told him that I was not a bit surprised to learn that Mrs. Thatcher had struck a chord in the land which gave birth to Joseph Stalin and to Beria.

Lech Walesa, however, sees another side of the Prime Minister's image. He described her, in the presence of my right hon. Friend the Member for Manchester, Gorton (Mr. Kaufman), as "Mrs. Hyde", and explained, "We cannot transfer your system to Poland, because we do not like human and legal aspects of it." Walesa, a democratic Socialist himself, prefers the positive ideals of western Socialism. Only a few weeks ago he was in this country as a guest of the TUC, speaking out for the values of free trade unionism—values that our Prime Minister certainly does not share, and indeed has undermined considerably by banning trade union membership at GCHQ.

What those brave and visionary people in eastern Europe are demanding is far more akin to western democratic Socialism than to any concept of free-market Thatcherism. Not surprisingly, they have little time for the fruits of Thatcherism that are enjoyed in this country—unemployment, social strife and water shares. True, they want to privatise, but on a wholly different basis from ours. Their aim is to unlock a locked and rusty system of total state ownership, rather than simply selling off the family silver. Let members of the Adam Smith institute go to Poland, Hungary, Czechoslovakia or Bulgaria and try to peddle the idea of selling the nuclear power stations and the water in the taps.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: They have been there.

Mr. Robertson: Of course they have, but I bet that they did not try to sell such crazy ideas. If they did, they would have got short shrift.

Mr. John Maples (Lewisham, West): The hon. Gentleman has taken us on an interesting tour of east European cities that he has visited recently and people whom he has met. I have been wondering whether he will ever return to the subject of Socialism in the United Kingdom.

Conservative Members are faced with a genuine dilemma, with which the hon. Gentleman may be able to help us. We do not know whether to take Labour's policy review seriously. Are we to believe what the review says, or are we to suspect that nothing has changed underneath? If I asked the right hon. Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn) whether, in the light of the review, the Leader of the Opposition is still a Socialist, what does the hon. Gentleman think that his right hon. Friend would say?

Mr. Robertson: I advise the hon. Gentleman to go on listening to my speech, which will give him the answer to his question. I also recommend that he read the policy review, from which he will discover why we are consistently ahead in the opinion polls, and why our victory at the next election is guaranteed.

The real divide in eastern Europe is still between the reformers and conservatives—between those with vision, like Mikhail Gorbachev, and reactionaries like President Ceaucescu. Thatcherism, with its Little England rhetoric and its worn-out cold war attitudes, sometimes has more in common with the rigidities of Ceaucescu than with the trail-blazing radicalism of Gorbachev. The socialist parties are the parties of modernisation and reform. We alone want to encourage dialogue and new systems to cope with the sweeping changes that are transforming Europe. That is why democratic socialism is in the vanguard of the new Europe.

The motion refers to the withering away of Socialism in the Western world. I remind the House that there are Socialist parties in Government, either on their own or in coalition, in the following European countries: Spain, France, Sweden, Austria, Italy, Luxembourg, Belgium, Holland, Greece, Iceland and Finland. Since the people of those democratic countries of western Europe have all chosen Socialist parties to govern them, the preposterous idea that Socialism is withering away underlines the negative and empty basis of the motion.

Thatcherism has been consistently lacking in its ability to encourage British exports. We need only to consider the largest trade deficit in British history to see that all too clearly. Nowhere, however, has Thatcherism failed so conspicuously as in its failure to export itself. Thatcherism has been well and truly rejected, even by our closest European Community partners who regularly and universally isolate and marginalise our Prime Minister at their gatherings. Britain has become the outpost, the last bastion of an outdated and backward-looking creed. The European social charter is defined by the British Prime Minister, and only by her, as "Marxist." For the Prime Minister, anything that attempts to replace the economic free-for-all with social rights and responsibilities is to be labelled in that sloganistic way.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: A moment ago, the hon. Gentleman referred to France as a Socialist country. I believe that it was at the top of his list. France has a very successful economy. Does he accept that in France income tax is very low, that it has a very high proportion of nuclear power and that it has an independent nuclear deterrent? Does he regard those as characteristics of Socialism?

Mr. Robertson: Socialism has different manifestations, but its common characteristic is that it believes in a proper place for the market and in a social infrastructure which provides help those who need it. Socialist Governments throughout the world do not accept the narrow ideology that the Conservative party seems to believe is worth exporting to other countries. Socialist Governments believe in people being free to make their own choice within the Socialist system. Although there are points of difference between each of the Governments that I have mentioned, they are all Socialist in their title, in their ethos and philosophy, and in the message that they put forward. The idea that Socialism is withering away is completely and utterly silly.

Mr. Benn: My hon. Friend may wish to point out that Dr. Sakharov, warmly praised by the chairman of the Conservative party, was totally opposed to nuclear weapons. To quote Dr. Sakharov as an example of the model that we should follow is thus to confirm the Labour party's view that nuclear weapons should neither be possessed nor used.

Mr. Robertson: The mighty Dr. Sakharov was a Socialist and held a number of views that I am sure the right hon. Member for Mole Valley (Mr. Baker), if he took more time, would find profoundly embarrassing.

Even with the European Community there are those who disagree with the Prime Minister—the great new ideologue who stomps the world stage labelling people Marxist even if, like Chancellor Kohl, Prime Minister De Mita of Italy or Prime Minister Silva of Portugal, they are as Right wing as she is.

Mr. Jacques Arnold (Gravesham): Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Robertson: No. I have given way more than adequately and I should like other hon. Members to be able to contribute to the debate.

The ideas being put forward in Europe are the ideas of tomorrow and are relevant to the future. We are Socialists because we know that things could be much better. On its own, the market delivers fear and uncertainty. I return to a quotation from the book compiled by the hon. Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle from Mr. Ian MacLeod, a former Conservative Minister, who said in 1969:

> "On the general point that everything has its price, I am a keen believer in market forces, but I do not go as far as this. Indeed I think that basically over the years, this is a Whig rather than a Tory doctrine. Everything has its price. Yes, but that would mean no regional policy. It would mean a disastrous future for the regions. It is an excellent policy for the strong, but we are also concerned with the weak."

Those words should haunt Conservative Members and they should consider how far away from that ideal they have drifted.

We live in a society where preventable—I stress that word—poverty and injustice are allowed to go unchecked. We live in a society which is able to shorten hideously long hospital waiting lists, house its increasing numbers of homeless, educate and train its wasted and forgotten young people, but does not do so because it naively and foolishly believes that the all-powerful market will deliver the goods. The market, however, has not delivered and the number of homeless young people living in cardboard boxes on the streets of London has reached a record and shameful level, our old people live on a pension which is the lowest among all our European partners and too many of our sick go untreated due to lack of resources.

In his opening remarks, the hon. Member for Tatton described as organised disruption the largest petition that has ever been presented to Parliament containing 4·5 million signatures in support of the nation's ambulance crews.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: I certainly did not describe the petition as organised disruption. I have no objection whatever to the presentation of that petition to the House, or to the explanation by the hon. Gentleman who presented the petition pointing out the number of people who had signed it. I resented the number of Opposition Members who, under the guise of points of order, tried to have a debate about how many cardboard boxes should be placed on the Floor of the House.

Mr. Robertson: When the hon. Gentleman reads his own words, he will realise that the protests about the boxes occurred because only one third of the 4·5 million signatures were able to be presented because of a ruling from the Chair. The hon. Gentleman described the protests against that ruling as organised disruption, and I think that what he said will be interpreted in that way.

Far too many children in Britain still go uneducated due to lack of staff and books. With top-up loans, our higher education system will soon become the province only of the wealthy.

Modern Toryism—Thatcherism—is based on a narrow and false assumption that human nature is unalterably selfish, acquisitive and competitive, and that we are all driven only by the desire to maximise our wealth and income and that the next man can go hang—the "me-now" society that my right hon. Friend the Leader of the Opposition described. We believe, as do the newly liberated peoples of eastern Europe that human beings are civilised, that they have a sense of individuality but also of community and of the greater good. They want to banish uncertainty, dishonesty and injustice and create a better world in place of fear, as Bevan said. They believe in essential human equality, justice and self-respect. They do not want a society based on antagonism; they want more sharing, and more co-operation, which is what democratic Socialism will bring. It stands for democracy, decentralisation and real power for ordinary people to control their lives, whether they live here or in the newly liberated countries. Of course it means redistribution of wealth so that all the people can fulfil themselves.

Socialism, despite what many of its opponents caricature it to be, is truly about the individual. It is about individual personal choice, personal growth and universal betterment and it is an idea that is currently sweeping Europe, both East and West. Thatcherism—a concept unique to this country—is unexportable with its values of antagonism and selfish acquisitiveness and has become a thing of the past. The language of conflict and narrow prejudice both at home and abroad is not appropriate for the brave new world which we see developing in this last year of the 1980s where co-operation and understanding will be central tenets.

Even though 10 years of Thatcherism will leave scars, in the fulness of time it will be seen merely as a blip in British history.

Several Hon. Members rose——

Mr. Deputy Speaker (Sir Paul Dean): Order. Time is getting short and I have the impression that many fiery speeches are waiting to be delivered.

1.15 pm

Mr. Edward Leigh (Gainsborough and Horncastle): I was honoured that the hon. Member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson) referred to the modest little tome that I wrote when I had the honour to serve on the Greater London council with the hon. Member for Brent, East (Mr. Livingstone), who I am delighted to see in his place today. As a real author is sitting on the Government Front Bench, I feel as Queen Victoria must have felt when Disraeli said "We authors, Ma'am". All my book tried to do was to reveal the nature of Conservative politics through what people had said. I am delighted to have heard good speeches from two notable Left-wing Labour Members—the right hon. Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn) and the hon. Member for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Heffer).

Richard Crossman wrote in his diary in 1959 that

> "The definition of the Left is of a group of people who will never be happy unless they convince themselves that they are about to be betrayed by their leaders."

When he wrote that, he was intending to be facetious. However, those words ring true today. They are not about to be betrayed by their leaders but are being betrayed by their leaders.

I was also interested in what the hon. Member for Walton said about nationalisation. Apparently, the Labour party no longer believes in it. We have not read that degree of historical revisionism since George Orwell's "1984". In 1957 Richard Crossman wrote:

> "The two most important emotions of the Labour party are a doctrinaire faith in nationalisation, without knowing what it means, and a doctrinaire faith in pacifism without facing its consequences."

Those wise words could be listened to with good effect by the hon. Member for Walton.

In the Labour party and Socialism generally we are seeing the belief that, if one sticks up for one's principles and fights elections on what one believes, one will not become the governing party. That is a dose of realism but it is sad for hon. Members such as the hon. Member for Walton. That was not always so. In his younger days the leader of the Labour party wrote in the "Broad Left Alliance Journal" of October 1982:

> "I must emphasise . . . that there is nothing in the Labour Party constitution that could, or should, prevent people from holding opinions which favour Leninist-Trotskyism . . . Certainly Marxism has and will continue to have an important function in the Labour Party."

He believed that then, but does he believe it now?

We know that the Labour party fought an election on a truly Socialist manifesto in 1983. In March 1983, the right hon. Member for Birmingham, Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley) wrote in the New Socialist:

> "The Labour Party can go into the next election united behind the most radical manifesto on which we have ever campaigned."

The result of that campaign was the greatest defeat that the Labour party had suffered in 50 years. The Leader of the Opposition has become a "desiccated calculating machine". Those are not my words but those of Aneurin Bevan who said in 1954 that that is what every successful leader of the Labour party had to become.

I am sure that the hon. Member for Walton is right. If one fights an election without believing in what one is saying, one will come a cropper and have to change policies overnight. That is what we have seen with previous Labour Governments and it will happen again.

There are some wonderful quotations on this subject, but I shall give only one or two. Lord Wilson said:

> "I myself have always deprecated . . . in crisis after crisis, appeals to the Dunkirk spirit as an answer to our problem."—[Official Report, 26 July 1961; Vol. 645, c. 451.]

On 12 December 1964, he said:

> "I believe that the spirit of Dunkirk will once again carry us through to success."

It would be a disaster if, just as eastern Europe is emerging from Socialism, we were to become an inward-looking community too much wedded to bureaucratic mechanisms, whether they be central banks or a common currency. It would be a disaster if we were to turn our backs on what is happening in eastern Europe. This is the opportunity to help it become a member of an outward-looking Europe, a Europe of concentric circles, a Europe of borders but not barriers. There should be a Europe of free trade, in which goods and services, labour and people can circulate freely.

So much of what my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has said in recent years has been vindicated by recent events. Events in eastern Europe provide her with an historic opportunity to lead opinion in Europe. The Government and Conservative Members generally—I fear that we shall not receive any support from the Opposition—must lead that opinion. I referred earlier to the necessity of creating intellectual consensus so that it is possible successfully to implement domestic policies. It is necessary also for us to create that consensus in Europe, and I believe that we can do it. The plans that we have advanced for competing currencies and freely floating currencies in a Europe that is moving towards free trade are part of a value system that can take Europe from the dark ages of Socialism to a much brighter future.

There has been what I would describe as a chocolate economy in eastern Europe. An article headed "Bitterness on Chocolate Express" states:

> "The 'Chocolate Express', the Berlin-Warsaw-Moscow train favoured by Soviet-bloc smugglers, was the scene of fierce argument and fisticuffs yesterday as East Germany tried to shield itself from the Solidarity virus."

That was before East Germany started to reform itself. The article continues:

> "The Chocolate Express—so called because returning Polish workers bring out large satchels of East German chocolate and sell it en bloc, so to speak, to black-market leaders on the Polish side of the frontier—is being delayed for two to four hours every night."

That was the economy of Socialist eastern Europe before we started to see the changes that are now taking place.

The changes are resulting in the former leadership having to change its entire life style. Another article states:

> "Mr. Edward Gierek, who lives in a sprawling villa in Katowice, complains that he can make ends meet thanks only to a small hard currency pension he receives for when he worked as a coal miner in France and Belgium."

One's heart bleeds for him. The article continues:

> "At 7 am at the hopelessly understocked food shop on First Polish Army Avenue in Warsaw, the usual queue includes three former Ministers, (sent by their wives to buy fresh bread), an ex-Council of State member and a number of senior Solidarity activists who inherited their apartments from Communist parents."

Eastern Europe is emerging from the chocolate economy, but countries such as Poland and

[Mr. Edward Leigh]

Czechoslovakia are struggling with enormous inherited problems, with which only we in the European Community can help.

The new Czechoslovak Finance Minister, Vaclav Klaus, who until a few weeks ago was a barely tolerated dissident, was recently asked whether he would like to institute a heavy dose of monetarism. He replied, "I would like to". This is the new Czechoslovak Minister for Finance. But he said that he doubted that he had the resources to do so. Fears are being expressed in Poland about whether it has the institutions and mechanisms, whatever the will for change may be, to enable it to move forward. All that proves that the collapse of Socialism which we are now witnessing must be our stimulus and opportunity.

I have talked about the history of Socialism in this country and events in eastern Europe, but the collapse of Socialism—the collapse of the international consensus that has sustained it over the years—is our opportunity to begin to move the debate from our point of view. Conservatism is nothing if it is not about caring for those who hitherto have not had many of the privileges that some of us have enjoyed. A hundred years ago, it would have been inconceivable for an ordinary working man to have owned his home, but now 68 per cent. of our population do so. We must take the debate forward, at a time when erstwhile Socialists seem to be adopting the tenets of Thatcherism.

We cannot afford to stand still or to consolidate; we must move forward, and I believe that the way to do so is to open opportunities that previously did not exist. The Conservative party has been most successful when it has provided a gangway, such as into home ownership, which is now enjoyed by 68 per cent. of our population. We can talk now about people enjoying the opportunities of private health care, which they never did before, and of private education. We should be putting forward such ideas. The collapse of Socialism gives us the opportunity to do so, and we must take it.

Mr. Giles Radice (Durham, North): I shall not follow the hon. Gentleman the Member for Gainsborough and Horncastle (Mr. Leigh) along the gangplank of Conservatism, because it my come to a worrying end.

I agree with my hon. Friend the Member for Hamilton (Mr. Robertson), who made a most eloquent speech, that we are witnessing a historic series of events in eastern Europe. We are witnessing a successful 1848. a successful democratic revolution has toppled Communist regimes in Poland, Hungary and Czechoslovakia, and I believe that it will lead to democratic Governments in East Germany and Bulgaria. Clearly, we have witnessed historic events.

I enjoyed the amusing speech of the hon. Member for Tatton (Mr. Hamilton), although perhaps it was somewhat long. Occasionally, I felt that he was not living up to the level of events, particularly when he suggested that everything that was happening in eastern Europe was a consequence of the example of the right hon. Member for Finchley (Mrs. Thatcher). That astonishing claim was made by the right hon. Lady herself in her rather extraordinary speech to her party conference, when she claimed to have lit the torch of freedom in eastern Europe—this was just after we had all the laser beams and Nuremberg rally stuff that now goes on in the modern Conservative party.

Watching on television, I noted the keen support of the chairman of the Tory party. No doubt he was still then in his St. Crispin's day mood. The right hon. and learned Member for Surrey, East (Sir G. Howe) was somewhat less enthusiastic. His hands went through the clapping motion, but the body language told us something different. It is always useful to watch the right hon. and learned Gentleman's body language. I noticed it recently on television, when the Prime Minister was speaking. His body language and the distance that he keeps between himself and the Prime Minister on the Government Front Bench are always revealing. It told us that in this case the right hon. and learned Gentleman felt that she had made a boast too many.

I am glad to say that the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster did not claim this time that everything that was happening in eastern Europe was happening because of the Prime Minister. He knows, as all of us do if we are honest, that the real architect of what has happened in eastern Europe is Mr. Gorbachev. Mr. Gorbachev has made it clear to all the leaders of the Communist regimes in eastern Europe that the Soviet Union is no longer prepared to support Communist regimes with Russian troops.

In effect, Mr. Gorbachev has told the Communist leaders that they are on their own. The withdrawal of this threat has encouraged the peoples of Poland, Hungary, Czechoslovakia and East Germany to insist on a democratic revolution in their countries. They want free elections, a pluralistic system and legal democratic rights—the kind of things that one wants in a civilised democratic society. They want an end, too, to the arthritic command economies which have kept back their living standards. As my hon. Friend the Member for Hamilton said, that does not mean that they want a totally free market. They may not want a command economy, but they want to keep the welfare system that exists in their countries. They do not want the unemployment that we have in ours.

We are wise to conclude that their revolution is very much their own. Many views are held and there will be many political parties. If they have a model of society that they seek to emulate, it is certainly not Thatcherite Britain. It is probably the welfare democracy of West Germany, which has been greatly criticised by the Conservative Government in recent years, especially by the right hon. Member for Blaby (Mr. Lawson), who claimed that it was arthritic and had many features that stopped the market working properly. I am glad that it has. That is why the people of West Germany are able to enjoy a decent standard of living and get something out of the growth of their economy. We are seeing a democratic revolution in eastern Europe. It is not what the hon. Member for Tatton said it was: it is not so much the death of Socialism as the birth of democracy in eastern Europe.

It is true that our western European democracies are imperfect. Certainly the system in this country is imperfect: I agree with my right hon. Friend the Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn) that tiers of local government have been abolished under the rule of this Conservative Government. Other countries in western Europe do not understand how one can get rid of a tier of government and get rid of the government of London. We have seen rights diminished in many features of life in this country.

In western Europe we have one crucial advantage—or have had—over the peoples of eastern Europe: we can replace our Governments at general elections by putting a cross on the ballot paper and putting it in the ballot box. The ballot box shows that there is a clear trend against the Right in European political opinion. As my hon. Friend the Member for Hamilton said, in France the Right has been decisively rejected and the French Socialists are in power. In Spain, the Right has been defeated in three successive general elections and the Socialists are in power. In Sweden and Austria, Socialists and Social Democrats are in power. Even in West Germany, a centre-Right Government are in power who are different in character from the British Government. We should hear what the Prime Minister has to say about Mr. Genscher or Mr. Kohl. The West German Government are different in character from Britain's Conservative Government.

The European elections showed that, far from a tide of Thatcherism sweeping across Europe, as one might have thought after listening to the hon. Member for Tatton, the Right is being decisively rejected in other European countries. That is why the biggest single group in the European Paliament is the Socialist group, not a group from the Right.

Part of the Prime Minister's problem at successive European summits has been her ideological isolation. The other countries of the European Community want a social Europe and a social charter to secure the social rights of the people of Europe. That is precisely what the Prime Minister rejects. No wonder that she feels so alone when her views are so decisively rejected by the rest of Europe.

Despite three Conservative election victories in Britain, the polls show that the values of Thatcherism are still not supported by the British people. The polls show that people believe in fairness and social justice, want to see a strong National Health Service, a state education system, and selective Government intervention. They do not believe in letting the free market go totally unregulated and untrammelled. The Government's increasing unpopularity, the big Labour lead in the public opinion polls and the changing political agenda all suggest that, far from seeing the end of Socialism, we are beginning to see the end of Thatcherism in this country.

The fact that Socialists have changed their policies and agendas in West Germany, France, Spain, Scandinavia and this country is nothing to be ashamed of. On the contrary, the ability to renew itself is Socialism's abiding strength. A new political agenda is emerging in west Europe, and also in east Europe, based on more active government, good public services, a proper benefit system for those who are less well off, proper environmental protection and enhanced citizens' rights.

That is what is being asked for in eastern Europe, and that is what we need in western Europe. Europeans are also asking for greater political co-ordination and co-operation across national frontiers, which is why Europe is now much more popular than it has ever been and the Conservatives are so isolated on this issue, not just in western Europe, but in this country.

The agenda which is emerging is rejected by Thatcherites and most Conservative Members, but it is gaining support, not only in this country but across Europe. It is not Socialism which is on the defensive, but Right-wing Conservatism. The coming decade will be not Thatcherite but Socialist—one in which Socialist ideas will dominate the policital agenda and political debate, and Socialists will be in power across Europe.

1.40 pm

Mr. Jacques Arnold (Gravesham): We owe a debt of gratitude to my hon. Friend the Member for Tatton (Mr. Hamilton) for introducing this debate, which records the end of an era. Throughout the 20th century, Socialism has flowed through the politics, history and economics of the world. The Socialists have obtained power but now the Socialist states have withered. What has Socialism left in its wake? Millions of dead, economies in ruin, and failure and disillusionment in much of the Third world. Opposition Members have celebrated the departures of various Socialist Governments in eastern Europe, but we in the House must judge Socialism by its achievements. The proof of the pudding is in the eating.

Let us look as some of the brand names. In the Soviet Union, we had Marxism, then Leninism and then Stalinism, and all of them were identified as sub-branches of Socialism. Socialism led to widespread oppression and to the slaughter of millions of Kulaks, peasants, intellectuals and religious leaders in the Soviet Union. It also led to the cynical deal that the Soviet Union put together with those other Socialists—the National Socialists in Germany.

The economy of Russia was growing fast before the Russian revolution, but since then there has been stagnation and decline. A recent study in The Economist tried to find reasons for the decline of the economy of the Soviet Union, where production is running 2·5 per cent. lower than last year. Coal production, for instance, is 5·5 per cent. down. The Economist study says:

> "The steel ministry has been refusing to supply steel to the railway industry, because the railway ministry failed to supply enough trains to the steel ministry. The coal ministry is complaining about the same thing. The steel and railway ministries in turn say it is all the fault of the coal ministry, because it did not send them enough coal, thanks to this summer's strikes. And so on—and, for once in Soviet official history, they are all probably telling something like the truth."

Why has all this happened? The industries of the Soviet Union have been managed by political hacks who refer to their political party for their marching orders. They are not run by managers, and that it why they are in such a mess.

I shall give the House an example of Socialist state planning. Shortly before the era of glasnost began, reports came in of some confusion at the railway marshalling yard in Kiev. There were trains in the marshalling yard loaded with organic fertiliser—a delicate way of saying animal dung—and trains loaded with coffee. Thanks to Socialist management's incompetence the trains went to the wrong destinations. Glasnost or no glasnost, the collective farms which thought that they were getting the fertiliser complained that what they had received did not work. Because glasnost had not yet arrived, consumers of coffee knew that they should not complain and simply swallowed it.

Mr. Donald Anderson (Swansea, East): Are not railways rather a bad example? Compare the Socialist railways in France, which are delivering the goods with a substantial Government subsidy and contributing much to regional development in France, with what has happened to British Rail over the past decade.

Mr. Arnold: What happened to British Rail over the past decade was that it failed as a nationalised industry, as it failed in the decades before. It is incapable of keeping the freight off the roads and on the railways. It is incapable of providing a flexible service, which private road hauliers have been able to do.

The hon. Member for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Heffer) told us that what has happened in the Soviet Union, and in western Europe for that matter, is not Socialism. He told us that the French Socialism of which the hon. Member for Durham, North (Mr. Radice) spoke is not Socialism.

Where do we go to find examples of different kinds of Socialism and what they deliver? Do we go to China, where Socialism has delivered poverty, rebellion and finally Tiananmen square? Do we go to their Socialist surrogates and Pol Pot, the self-avowed Socialist, and his killing fields in Cambodia? Perhaps we should go to the Soviet Union's surrogates in Vietnam, where that brand of Socialism brought economic failure and caused the population to flee to capitalist Hong Kong. We are concerned about people fleeing from Vietnamese Socialism to capitalist Hong Kong where they create a problem for us.

Mr. Heffer: The hon. Gentleman knows damn well that I do not agree with what happened in Tiananmen square. I include all the countries to which the hon. Gentleman has referred in the same breath as I referred to the Soviet Union. The hon. Gentleman should apologise for trying to suggest otherwise.

Mr. Arnold: I will not apologise. I acknowledge that the hon. Member for Walton referred to the practice of Socialism in western Europe and the Soviet Union. However, for the sake of argument, he does not recognise that in China, Cambodia or Vietnam.

What about the brands of Socialism in the new world? For 30 years Cuba has been a Socialist country. But what has become of Cuba now that it no longer has the Soviet Union's subsidy which the Soviet Union can no longer afford? Cuba is a bankrupt backwater presided over by an aged prima donna. It cannot provide a decent standard of living for its people. But it seems that it does achieve exports. It exported revolution to the rest of Latin America. Was that successful? Not a bit of it. It saw the death of Che Guevara, but what has that achieved? Che Guevara has served only as a sartorial example for the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn).

If we reject Cubá as an example of Socialism, what about Nicaragua? Socialism in that country has led to economic failure and to political prisoners. Nicaragua needs help from the capitalist world outside and that is forcing it to the ballot box. At last there might be democratic elections in that Socialist state.

What effect has Socialism had on Africa? Let us consider what happened in the Portuguese terrorities that turned to Marxism. I travelled to Mozambique to find out what was happening there, and I found nothing in the market places except lettuce. However, there was a new breed of British Socialist there. They had gone to Marxist Mozambique to take part in the great Socialist future of that country. They were quaintly called co-operands. Even in the Ministries which they were assisting, those co-operands discovered that they were hungry. Their Meticais, the Mozambican currency in which they were paid, bought them no food. Before they knew it, they were dabbling in the foreign exchange black market. In the end, they were humiliated and had to make regular weekly expeditions to the supermarkets across the border in South Africa. What price Socialism there?

What about Angola, where Socialism is propped up by the bayonets of Cuban troops? What about the Marxist Government in Ethiopia? Earlier this week we debated the consequences of the policies of that Marxist Government. What price starvation there? Everywhere we look for examples of Socialism in action we find failure or worse.

What about Socialism in this country? The Opposition saw the light about Socialism along time ago. The right hon. Member for Islwyn (Mr. Kinnock), the Leader of the Opposition, in a debate on industry 15 years ago, said that the British people "know that at the end of the day the system which has failed will not bring us to a new prosperity. A new system must be tried".

He may have been right.

Mr. Heffer: He was right.

Mr. Arnold: Was he? How did he come to that conclusion? The answer is in the very same speech. He said:

"The simple assertion, therefore, is that we have tried the private enterprise system for a long time. It does not meet the needs of a modern civilisation".

He went on to state:

"Therefore, that system"— that is, the private enterprise system—

"must be moved aside, and it is best replaced by a Socialist system".—[Official Report, 4 November 1974; Vol. 880, c. 770-75.]

Everywhere we look we see examples of what happens with Socialist systems. The great Leader of the Opposition would have blundered with the best of the Kremlin by trying to impose Socialism on this country. He knows that his case is so untenable that he does not try to defend it today. It is significant that there is no Opposition Front Bench amendment, and not even a member of the shadow Cabinet present. It has been up to the tired old warhorses of the Left, like first world war generals, to move an amendment and carry on as though there is no experience of what Socialism means in practice.

At least we cannot accuse the right hon. Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn) of double standards. In his maiden speech on 7 February 1951, he said:

"We on this side are a Socialist party—we have been for some time. We have never made any secret of the fact. In 1945, when our election programme was published, we made no secret of it".—[Official Report, 7 February 1951; Vol. 483, c.1782.]

It seems that the right hon. Gentleman is consistent. Today, the right hon. Member for Chesterfield expanded on that statement when he said that some people think that Socialism is whatever a Labour Government are doing at the time. As an extension, it seems that Socialism is whatever is proposed by Labour Front Bench Members at the time. If the Labour party is to win the next election it must somehow convince the country that what it is peddling is Socialism and of value. But what is the likelihood that the Leader of the Opposition will be able to put that message across? What are his capabilities? I quote no less a person than the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon) who, at one of the marvellous Socialist conferences of the right hon. Member for Chesterfield, referred to her Leader as "a no-talent, weak man."

She scorned his parliamentary debating skill, and said:

"Mrs. Thatcher gobbles him up for breakfast."

That is her judgment. For once, I do not disagree with the hon. Lady. The people of this country do not disagree, either. This week, The Guardian told us that, with television cameras in this place weighing up the two Front Benches, the Prime Minister has scored heavily in the presentation of policies.

The debate is about the future of Socialism, but we have not heard what Socialism is about and what future the Labour party sees for it. The future is not one of "isms", it is one of freedom of the individual and the market place. That will be safeguarded by this House, which is a democratic House, not a Socialist House.

Mr. Tony Banks (Newham, North-West): I will try to practise a bit of Socialism by sharing the remaining time more equitably among hon. Members who still want to speak. I associate myself with the tribute that the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster paid to Andrei Sakharov. Andrei Sakharov was a great man who struggled for freedom in the Soviet Union. I remind the right hon. Gentleman that Sakharov died a Socialist, not a capitalist.

Certain events in eastern Europe are most exciting in political terms. They are probably the most important political events that have taken place in Europe for the past half century. Such events are worthy of regular debates in this House so that hon. Members' views can be expressed and heard.

I congratulate the hon. Member for Tatton (Mr. Hamilton) on being lucky in the ballot, but we could have been better served by another motion. Quite frankly, the wording of his motion is about as useful a contribution to the great events in eastern Europe as the Beano would be to a discussion about Aristotelian logic.

Comparing the speech of my right hon. Friend the Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn), who comes hurriedly to his place, with the speech of the hon. Member for Tatton is rather like comparing Demosthenes with Alf Garnett—[HON. MEMBERS: "Which is which?] I hasten to add that Demosthenes has come from Chesterfield, while Garnett has, presumably, returned to Tatton.

It is ridiculous to suggest in a motion that all the important events in eastern Europe have come about as a result of Thatcherism or because of the retention of nuclear weapons in Britain. It is ludicrous and pathetic, and I am surprised that the hon. Member for Tatton was prepared to suggest it. As my hon. Friend the Member for Durham, North (Mr. Radice) said, we know where the tribute belongs—it is with glasnost and with President Gorbachev. The people in Prague, Budapest and East Berlin are not reacting to Britain's nuclear deterrent. They are not envious of our poll tax, our homelessness, our lousy transport system or our hospital waiting queues. They are not inspired by the petty nationalism of the bigot from Grantham.

It is noticeable that the Prime Minister has realised that. The iron lady phase has now been replaced by the soft cuddly toy phase, as can be seen when she comes to the Dispatch Box at Prime Minister's Question Time. She has lost two important things during the past 12 months—first, her friend Ronald Reagan, who was probably the only western European leader who admired her intellect; secondly and more importantly, she has lost her enemies in the Soviet Union and eastern Europe. There is a great deal that will no doubt bind empathetically the Prime Minister to the Conservatives and the Stalinists in the Soviet Union in actually regretting what is happening in that country and throughout eastern Europe. There is a great deal of similarity between the authoritarians of the East and the authoritarians of the West—in this case, the Prime Minister.

The peoples of eastern Europe are directly reacting to Lord Acton's old dictum that all power corrupts and absolute power corrupts absolutely. That is what they are rejecting. They do not want Thatcherism and they certainly do not want capitalism. They are aspiring to accountable Socialism. When Vaclav Havel, to whom the Chancellor of the Duchy referred, becomes President of Czechoslovakia, it will be a victory for Socialism, not for Thatcherism and capitalism. I should like to see the day when the people of this country storm No. 10 Downing street, tear down the railings and put in Dennis Potter or Howard Brenton as Prime Minister in her place.

Although we all admit that events in the East are politically exciting, they are also dangerous. Because events are moving so quickly, we do not really know what will happen. I went to a Christmas party at the GDR embassy the other night. We played various party games, such as spin the Honecker and guess the latest leader. It was all good fun. People were in a good mood because progress was being made. However, they also recognise the dangers. The resurgence of nationalism in Europe is a danger to us all.

There is excitement and a great deal of potential, but there is also a great deal of danger because of the instability. It is incumbent upon all in the West not to table triumphalist motions about the destruction of Socialism. We should extend the hand of friendship to those struggling to achieve a more accountable democracy in their countries.

There have been various interpretations, misinterpretations, caricatures and gross caricatures of what Socialism is all about. It comes in many different varieties. Many people claim to be Socialist without being so. My right hon. Friend the Member for Chesterfield and my hon. Friend the Member for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Heffer) spoke of Socialism having its roots in Christianity, and I agree.

To me, Socialism is about equality of opportunity and equality before laws that are accepted as being fair and just. Socialism is about freedom from poverty and homelessness, and about the right to a good education and to a job, as well as to a first-class Health Service. Socialism is about participation at the workplace and in the democratic process by people at all levels. Socialism is also about people having a say in the present and in their futures. Socialism is about uniting a country in its social values, so that it is caring towards the old and the sick. That is why my right hon. and hon. Friends and I espouse Socialism and why we shall continue to campaign for it right up to the next general election.

2 pm

Mr. David Amess (Basildon): I agree that this has been a significant debate and I congratulate my hon. Friend the Member for Tatton (Mr. Hamilton) on giving the House an opportunity to discuss such an important matter and to identify at first hand what are the policies of the Labour party. Over the past two and a half years, I for one have grown impatient at waiting to hear the details of what the Labour party is all about. Today, we have been given a flavour of what it is all about.

I regret that no member of the alliance parties saw fit to be present in the Chamber today. So far as I am concerned, the alliance parties are Socialist, and I hope that they are proud to be so. They always vote with the Labour party, and they propped up Labour between 1974 and 1979. I congratulate the right hon. Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn) and the hon. Member for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Heffer) on having the guts to speak passionately and sincerely about their Socialist beliefs. I do not criticise them for doing so. In fact, in 1979 the right hon. Member for Chesterfield criticised his own party for the highly personal campaign that it waged against my right hon. Friend the leader of the Conservative party. Unfortunately, over the past 10 years, instead of there being a sensible debate about Socialism versus capitalism, such as that which we have had today, the debate has all been about the personality of a particular individual. I deprecate that, and I hope that in future we can confine our debates to the beliefs of Britain's different political parties, rather than concern ourselves with any particular individual within them.

The Conservative party sets out its various policies in its manifesto. It decides what it believes is right for the country and then follows through those policies regardless of any short-term popularity. I am aghast at the actions of Opposition Members over the past two and a half years, which I call designer Socialism. Communism and Socialism have been rejected throughout the world. I shall describe briefly the policies on which Labour has changed its mind.

At first, Labour opposed home ownership word for word, line for line—but it changed its policy when it realised that that was a vote loser. However, when mortgage interest rates increased, Labour again spoke out against home ownership. Labour was also against share ownership, but then the hon. Member for Dagenham (Mr. Gould) suddenly decided that he favoured it—until the stock market crash, when Labour again changed its policy. On defence, I always understood that Labour stood for unilateral disarmament and that the Leader of the Opposition supported the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament. However, when Labour realised that the electorate did not like that policy, it was changed.

Labour was at its most hypocritical in respect of the Common Market. It fought against Britain's membership of the Common Market. When my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister had the guts and courage to fight for British interests within the EEC, the Opposition attacked her. That dishonesty will be clearly revealed at the next general election.

I conclude by commenting on the future of Socialism in local government. I represent a constituency with a Labour council which retains control by only one vote. That is an excellent example of the future of Socialism. For some reason, Opposition Front-Bench spokesmen now seem to be rushing to Basildon. They must see it as a good example of Socialism. Of course, the policy is always the same—raise rates and raise taxes—and the best example is in Basildon, where the rate increase of 57·2 per cent. was the biggest in the country last year. Hon. Members can imagine my disgust when the council's Labour leader had the gall to send a letter to every ratepayer in Basildon. The letter began:

> "I'm writing to warn you and your household that the Government's poll tax system could mean bills of more than £500 for each adult member of your family next April.
> I realise this figure will surprise and worry many people, because it certainly shocked me."

It went on:

> "It's because I know many of you are struggling to make ends meet that I'm writing to you now. Everyone needs to have as much warning as possible about the likely level of this tax."

It is not surprising people in Basildon will pay a high community charge, as they are unfortunate enough to have a local authority which spends money irresponsibly. So far, we are in debt to the tune of £125 million. A new civic centre has just been built in Basildon, and the shadow Leader of the House came to open it. Unfortunately, he had not been very well briefed: he should have been told that the new centre had cost £18 million—much of it borrowed from the Banque Paribas, because we had no money of our own to finance it. He should also have been told that the centre cannot house 350 members of the authority's existing staff. Above all, he should have been told that ours was the first local authority in the country to build a civic centre without a council chamber. That shows what the Labour party thinks democracy is worth. I am a great supporter of the arts, but is also strikes me as nonsensical to build a new theatre—at a cost of £11 million—with a foyer bigger than the auditorium. Sadly, that is losing us a great deal of money.

I have always upheld the position of independence adopted by local government officers. For whatever reason, a chief officer recently left the authority. Imagine my horror when his replacement proudly sent me a copy of the authority's magazine, "Waves", containing a piece about himself. Having been in local government for a number of years, he has > "seen enormous changes, especially the relationships with the public and central government. As the Council has moved to closer working with and involvement of the local communities that make up Basildon District, central government has increasingly tried to make local government toe a conformist line of what it thinks is best.

> The Governments I have known, of either political complexion, have never really trusted the ability of local Councils and their employees to do the job. This is despite the fact that in my personal experience Basildon has out-performed Westminster and Whitehall every time."

If local government officers wish to make such statements, they should stand for election as local councillors. I deprecate that kind of political involvement.

A local councillor has presented the Opposition housing spokesman with a petition concerning the transfer of housing in Basildon. It was our Government who gave people the opportunity to choose their future landlords; the man who presented that petition to the House stopped the then Labour Government taking over housing in 1977. That is an example of the crass hypocrisy with which we have to deal.

If the future of Socialism is to be articulated by the actions of the Labour party in Basildon, long may the policies inspired by our Prime Minister prevail.

2.9 pm

Mr. Harry Barnes (Derbyshire, North-East): Socialism has many elements. People such as A. J. Ayer have pointed out that Socialism has two elements. One is emotive and the other is descriptive. To the Government, Socialism is a boo word. To the Labour party, it is a hurrah word. People also try to use the word for good or ill-natured purposes. The Government have referred to bad regimes, bad systems and bad results. They have tried to build up the notion that Socialism is a boo word. To counter that attack, one could talk about capitalist nations where there has been exploitation—for example, in Chile and Brazil. However, that does not get us very far. We should analyse the great potential of Socialism.

I believe, with my righ hon. Friend the Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn), that Socialism and democracy are interlinked. Their values are universal and timeless. Socialism had to formulate its ideas about capitalism and clarify them. Capitalism clarified its ideas in response to feudalism. At that time it was a revolutionary notion. We are responding to the failure of capitalism. When we discuss the future of Socialism, therefore, we have to refer to capitalism.

The Conservative party's capitalist ideas are based on certain assumptions about human nature. The Conservatives build up theories which they believe have firm foundations, but which easily collapse. They believe in individual self-interest. To them, there is no such thing as society beyond the family and individuals must do what they want. Some of them want wealth, while others want power. Some want to exploit people, while others just want to laze around. According to Conservative philosophy, that leads to a self-regulating system in both the economic and the political market place. It leads to the return of the workhouse mentality of the 19th century which said that if people are unable to provide for themselves and their families that is bad, they are both lazy and inadequate and they must be prodded to reform their ways. As a result we hear a lot of the Conservative nonsense about social provision.

The Government have developed the principle of free competition between capitalist countries. They want capitalist Governments to keep control. However, Marx demonstrated that capitalism develops into monopolistic capitalism—that large units become successful and powerful, with influence throughout the world. Exploitation is frequently associated with monopolistic capitalism. The development of capitalism in Britain has been associated with a form of parliamentary democracy, and certainly with parliamentary activity. It was developed to take power from feudalism and to share the spoils among its own class because people could not trust each other. Initially, democracy in Britain consisted of a vote among the property-owning classes who had a stake in the nation—a vote among men who would share things out among themselves. Democracy grew out of the struggle of working people and their organisations. The Chartists' struggle in the 19th century produced three massive petitions, similar to the petition that we saw today but which was not allowed to be presented in full. Those petitions sought to extend the franchise to the people.

Petitioning rights are of great historical interest as, theoretically, they allow working people to express their views without duress. Today, not for the television cameras but so that right hon. and hon. Members could see what was taking place, the petition should have been presented to us in full.

Because the Chartists limited their protests to adult male suffrage, the Suffragettes continued the struggle to extend democracy. What does capitalism do when faced with democracy? It either seeks to kid, con and contain democracy, as the wets did when they controlled the Conservative party, or, as now, it engages in confrontation. It seeks to undermine such institutions as the National Health Service, which is based on the entirely different principle of a mass democracy deciding what it needs for its own benefit and welfare. If democracy becomes uncomfortable for capitalism, capitalists ditch it. That is what happened in Chile. A famous editorial in The Times said that democracy in Chile had to go because the economic base of capitalist competition had to remain so that tomorrow democracy could be rebuilt.

When it comes to the crunch, capitalists do not favour a democratic system. In Britain, the democratic system is fiddled and fixed. The poll tax is a deliberate device to limit the franchise. Already, in England alone, 90,000 people are missing from last year's electoral register, due to registration factors, according to the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys. Those registration factors must involve poll tax provisions.

People are terrified and worried about having to pay the poll tax, and in desperation many are refusing to register. The Government are seeking to squash them. At the same time, a Bill has been introduced to extend the franchise to 3 million expatriates on a voluntary basis. A voluntary franchise is an obnoxious notion as the franchise should be there for everyone. The people who have been squeezed off the electoral register are replaced by people who live overseas, who are not part of our society, who are not concerned about the services that should be provided, and are not worried about defending the Health Service. I prefer to talk about what people are supposed to get out of the system rather than what they contribute. In any case, that measure is inconsistent with the Government's arguments about accountability in support of the poll tax.

That is only part of what the Government are doing to attack freedom, civil liberties and the rights of the individual. Socialism is a doctrine concerned with the individual's self-fulfilment and benefit and development within a social context. If we believe in society and the need for mutual assistance and help, we should look to Socialist solutions. The values of Socialism are co-operation, mutual assistance, participation and social equality. A pre-Socialist—Rousseau—said that no person should be so weak as to have to sell himself and no one should be powerful enough to be able to purchase him. That is the equality that is needed if a democratic system is to operate properly. Socialists see in human beings the potential for co-operation and collective activity and recognise that those values must be put into practice if we are to tackle the vast problems to be seen throughout the world.

The case for Socialism and the extension of democracy has been expressed by my right hon. and hon. Friends when referring to the problem of homelessness, for example. A recent UNICEF report deals with starvation and death among the children of the world, with one child dying every two minutes. That is one of the many problems which need to be tackled, but it will not be tackled unless we act collectively. We must co-operate and act as moral beings. Individualism, self-help and the feathering of nests is abhorrent to Socialist values.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: Will the hon. Gentleman give way?

Mr. Barnes: I shall not give way because time is short.

The massive changes that are taking place in eastern Europe present opportunities and possibilities for advancing democracy and, therefore, advancing Socialism.

Mrs. Alice Mahon (Halifax): There are two Conservative Members in their places who participated with me in a recent weekend study trip to Berlin. I am sure that they will agree with Donald Burton, the political adviser who briefed us in Berlin on the political developments there, that the people of East Berlin do not want the Stalinism of Honecker but neither do they want the capitalism of the West. They seek a third way—a democratic way. Mr. Burton told us also that what had happened in East Berlin had little to do with Governments and the military and everything to do with people power.

Mr. Barnes: That is right.

Eastern Europe faces massive problems, including nationalism and the power of the Church. The Church can exercise hierachical influences and controls, and even clashes of a racist nature. There is, however, the possibility of a new democracy, which means that the people will have a say. In effect, they are saying, "We do not want to be exploited any longer and we shall act together."

We in the West are pleased that we have something to offer. Hungarians and others come to London to watch Parliament operating and to take the lessons that they have learnt back to Hungary. They want to know how we function. That being so, we must take the high ground. We must learn from the developments that are taking place in eastern Europe. We must not think that we have all the answers. We must build upon our tradition of democracy, involvement and participation, including petitions.

Fully-fledged Socialism is not problem-free when it is sought to advance it. There will be a long haul before we can establish Socialism in the United Kingdom or on a pan-European basis. There are problems to overcome here and throughout the western democracies. The values of Conservative Members, the mass media, history and tradition, and the powers that they have exercised have caused their values to be reflected in the views of the people instead of the people reflecting Socialist views. There is a great deal of work to be done and we must start doing it. The Labour and trade union movement must increase its campaigning activities.

There are lessons to be learnt from Keir Hardie, who was mentioned by my hon. Friend the Member for Liverpool, Walton (Mr. Heffer). Keir Hardie and his supporters used to work like mad. They published a journal entitled "Labour Leader" and carried bundle after bundle of copies of it to distribute. They walked miles and miles to meetings. They used to engage in massive activity with the trade union movement until things started to break in their direction. I see that happening among Democratic Socialists in small areas within Europe. The Workers party in Ireland is now emerging as a powerful force. It has its roots within the community and is growing in strength with every election. In Malta—a smaller area, but of significance recently—the Labour party had to fight the hierarchy of the Church for 16 years. The Maltese nation is Catholic and it was claimed that people would be excommunicated if they associated with the Labour party. The Maltese Labour party introduced a welfare state and transformed the heritage that Britain had left. Campaigning and mobilisation is easier as it is a small nation with different traditions and fine weather. We need to learn from some of those examples in the way we struggle and advance to Socialism.

Mr. Skinner: The Tories who started the debate today have a lot to learn. They came here to launch a massive attack on Socialism but after half an hour the balance of power had swung to the Opposition. Now they are in such a mess that the Whips have been running round the House trying to find more Tory Members to support them. They do not have 100 people in the House to stop the debate —that shows how frail and fragile they have become—and they do not have the guts to vote on the motion.

Mr. Barnes: I am pleased to hear that as I have more points to develop.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. The hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes) regularly regales the House with how much of a democrat he is. He knows, because he has spoken to his Whip, that there was an agreement between the two sides as to how the debate should go. Yet he is deliberately talking out the debate. Does that not show that he is no democrat, despite his mouthings to the contrary?

Mr. Barnes: A recent report in The Guardian showed that Mr. David Hart, an adviser to the Prime Minister, had been supporting a publication called "British Briefing" which maligns certain Labour Members as Communist stooges. Conservative Members have described Communism in such broad terms that people who write for Marxism Today and the Morning Star could be said to be the same people. Yet those organisations have considerable conflicts.

"British Briefing" described me as "an emerging, vigorous, Stalinist underminer of Parliamentary democracy".

No doubt that description appeals to the hon. Member for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett), but how can that be consistent with the analysis that I have just given about the need for democracy to be seen to be part of Socialism, and the things that I have done about democracy in the House? I was surprised on coming here to find that I had turned into a bourgeois democrat defending the system in the House. The defence of that system was one of the rights needed by working people. My Re-enfranchisement of the People Bill would extend the franchise and overcome the problem of the poll tax, and my Petitioners' Rights Bill is clearly needed in the light of what has taken place today.

Mr. Robertson: Perhaps Mr. David Hart, whether he works from Downing street or wherever, should know that the hon. Member for Tatton (Mr. Hamilton)—whose debate this is—visited Czechoslovakia in 1988 as a guest of the Government there. Perhaps "British Briefing" will identify the hon. Member for Tatton, along with my hon. Friends the Members for Dagenham (Mr. Gould) and for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes) as being a great danger to the state.

Mr. Barnes: The reason why information is given about me in "British Briefing" is that I opened a Morning Star bazaar in the constituency of my right hon. Friend the Member for Chesterfield (Mr. Benn). Some fine comrades work for that organisation, who before the May day organisations, which are massive in Chesterfield, were at the core of the work of the Chesterfield trades council.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: On a point of order, Mr. Deputy Speaker. A number of times in the House, the hon. Member for Derbyshire, North-East (Mr. Barnes) has advocated breaking the law by not paying the community charge. Is it in order for an hon. Member who persistently advocates breaking the law to continue to advocate democracy when he does not believe in it?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is a matter for the hon. Member.

It being half-past Two o'clock, the debate stood adjourned.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Ordered,

That, at the sitting on Wednesday 20th December, Standing Order No. 54 (Consolidated Fund Bills) shall have effect as if for the words 'nine o'clock in the morning', in line 15, there were substituted the words 'eight o'clock in the morning'.—[Mr. Dorrell.]

Ordered,

That, at the sitting on Tuesday 19th December—

(1) Standing Order No. 52 (Consideration of estimates) shall have effect with the insertion, in paragraph (3)(a), after the words "at seven o'clock", of the words "or three hours after the commencement of those proceedings, whichever is the later"; and at the conclusion of those proceedings, notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph (5) of Standing Order No. 52 (Consideration of estimates) and paragraph (1) of Standing Order No. 53 (Questions on voting of estimates, &c.) regarding the time at which the Question shall be put, Mr. Speaker shall then put successively the Questions necessary to dispose of those proceedings and any Questions necessary to dispose of proceedings on all other estimates appointed for consideration that day;

(2) If proceedings under paragraph (1) of this Order have not been completed before seven o'clock, the Private Business set down by direction of the Chairman of Ways and Means for consideration at that hour shall stand over until the conclusion of such proceedings; and

(3) The Private Business may be proceeded with, though opposed, for three hours after it has been entered upon.—[Mr. Dorrell.]

MEMBERS' INTERESTS

Ordered,

That Mr. Graham Allen be discharged from the Select Committee on Members' Interests and Mr. Harry Barnes be added to the Committee—[Mr. Dorrell.]

Violence and Pornography

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Dorrell.]

2.31 pm

Mr. David Alton (Liverpool, Mossley Hill): Violence and children in pornography is not a pleasant subject at any time. I hope that hon. Members will bear with me, because some of the matters that I want to relate are not easy to talk about.

Those issues trouble people deeply. As a scene-setter to the debate, I mention to the House a survey conducted over the past two weekends in my constituency by 20 Liverpool women. It underlines the seriousness with which people regard pornography and the degradation of those who are often involved in violent and repulsive acts.

Five hundred and two women aged between 14 and 60 were surveyed. They were asked their opinion on the sale of soft porn: 72 per cent. found the display of such magazines offensive; 86 per cent. thought that the magazines cheapened women generally; 76 per cent. saw a link between porn magazines and the sexual physical abuse of women; and 80 per cent. would prefer that local newsagents voluntarily stopped selling porn, but 75 per cent. were in favour of a legal ban on newsagents selling such material.

That information is a microcosm of general public opinion. The feeling is shared among hon. Members and many people outside that action is needed to tackle this deep problem. Above all, it is Parliament's duty to cultivate respect for individual human decency in our society.

This afternoon, I want to mention women and children who are portrayed in or who suffer as a result of pornography. All of us will have been sickened at various moments when we have read of some new atrocious crime committed against women or children. The Liverpool Echo has reported a number of cases, and perhaps the most graphic occurred in February, when a woman was raped and sexually assaulted by five men in a public house. The circumstances were similar to those in the film "The Accused". Unfortunately, as is often the case, the woman did not press charges, possibly through fear. It is hard to believe that the perpetrators of such offences are members of the same planet, let alone the same country. We must face the fact that there are men who fill their minds with a diet of pornography and then act upon such influences.

Let me give a few examples from the past 18 months. In October 1988, a woman and her 14-year-old daughter were attacked by a hooded man in their home in a Suffolk village. The mother had her clothes cut off with a knife before she was raped and the daughter was indecently assaulted. One may ask: how could a man do such a thing? The police believe that they found a clue to his behaviour when they discovered in his home a scrapbook of cuttings from pornographic magazines and > "sordid and sinister stories with a recurring theme of complete domination and defilement of woman and young girls."

In Leicester last December, a man who raped his stepdaughter and tried to have intercourse with her younger sister was sentenced to 14 years in gaol. The offences had continued for a six-year period. It is surely legitimate to ask: how did the stepfather influence his young victim? He did so by showing her illustrations from pornographic magazines.

In Lincoln last December, a man who sexually abused a four-year-old girl was put on probation only for a year because the girl was > "extraordinarily well versed in sexual knowledge".

Where did that four-year-old girl obtain such knowledge? She had been shown pornographic videos in her home.

In Putney in the summer of 1988, a rapist who had committed a series of attacks, involving gagging and threatening a woman with a knife, was sentenced to 18 years in prison. The police believe that he copied his ideas for his rapes from the bondage magazine "The Trap" which he had been reading.

These are not isolated examples. Researchers in the United States of America have identified the stages through which sex offenders go, leading up to their crimes, and the role that pornography can play in them. One of the leading researchers is Dr. Victor Cline, a clinical psychologist at the university of Utah, who has treated several hundred sex offenders over many years. Almost all his clients use pornography, and he describes four common factors that result in this condition.

The first is addiction. In Cline's words, "they got hooked." The pornographic material provided a sexual stimulant. One patient could not stay away from pornography even when he was offered $1,000 to do so for 90 days. The second stage is escalation. Cline's patients could not stop with soft pornography. As time went on, they required more explicit, rougher and more deviant kinds of sexual material. A dramatic example of escalation is the case of Ted Bundy, the serial killer and sex attacker who was executed in Florida in January. Some hon. Members will have seen a video of an interview that he gave the night before he died. Bundy candidly told how he started by buying girlie magazines in a local shop when he was 13 or 14, but by his early 20s he was buying the most shocking material.

The third stage is desensitisation, when shocking materials become commonplace and acceptable. Increasingly, Cline's clients felt, "Everybody does this, so it must be OK." The fourth stage is acting it out sexually. Cline says that eventually clients tended to act out what they had seen. That is what Ted Bundy did. He no longer got satisfaction from merely looking. He felt that he had to carry out those actions.

Addiction, escalation, desensitisation and then emulation. That is why we should be so worried about the growth in pornography. Society is allowing seeds to be sown through the sales of pornography. They are reaped in a harvest of sex crime, violence, sexual harassment and wrong attitudes towards women.

I understand why some feminists describe pornography as causing incitement to sexual hatred. I congratulate the hon. Member for Birmingham, Ladywood (Ms. Short) on highlighting this issue and in particular on her involvement in the Off the Shelf campaign to get pornography off the shelves of leading newsagents. Although little research has been conducted in the United Kingdom, I think that there would be widespread acceptance of Cline's model. For example, in February Ray Wyre, a former probation officer who has had wide experience of treating sex offenders, spoke at a seminar in the House of Lords, that had been organised by CARE—Christian Action Research Education—about what he called the "normalising" impact of pornography. Rapists, child molesters and others see pornographic magazine and videos available for sale on every high street, think that this is accepted by society and then believe that women want to be dominated by men.

In quoting Cline's research and Ray Wyre's comments I am not trying to suggest that all sex crime can be explained away by the influence of pornography. That would be a naive view which I do not hold. In addition, I do not believe that because a man is addicted to pornography that lessens his crime. Rape is rape and murder is murder. However, if Cline and Wyre are right, and many other researchers believe they are, if we tackle the prevalence and the acceptability of pornography in our society we can only do good and help to prevent further crime.

As the head of the obscene publications squad at Scotland yard until this February, chief superintendent Iain Donaldson, said,

> "The thought is father to the action."

The first step is to ensure that research similar to that of Cline, Zillerman, Malmuth and other American researchers is undertaken in this country.

Welcome though the Minister's announcement in answer to my parliamentary question was when he said yesterday that research is to be commissioned, I want to press him further about the nature of that research. I was also delighted that last week, in response to a written question from me, the Minister said that his Department would review the available evidence of the links between pornography and sex crime. As I have demonstrated today, there is a considerable amount of evidence, anecdotal and academic, that any review should consider.

I am concerned and would like to ask the Minister about the review's terms of reference. Why will it not be open to the public to submit evidence? This matter deeply involves the public and it would be absurd to exclude them from the review and the debate that should follow from it.

Who exactly will undertake the work? Why will it not include the commissioning of new research? How will the Government proceed once the review is completed? In particular, when the review is undertaken, will the Government examine the examples that I presented today? There has been no funding from the Home Office of such work up to now, so unless we look at the type of examples I mentioned and what has happened elsewhere, and accept evidence that can be submitted by outside interested organisations, it is doubtful whether any review of existing research will be sufficient. We could predict the outcome of such an inquiry today.

We need to conduct research into the factors involved in the imprisonment of sex offenders. I know that the right hon. Member for Selby (Mr. Alison) posed similar questions in a letter to the Home Secretary. We are both concerned that this should not be merely a paper exercise. Many Members are concerned about the issue. The Minister will know that 180 Members have now signed early-day motion 27 calling for a study of the issue. Those Members, like me, were interested in a public review of the matter, so I hope that the Minister will clarify the terms of what he has decided should happen.

Research and the proposed review is the first issue on which I want the Minister to speak today. The second is the present law on obscenity and its enforcement. We received some welcome news last week when the Home Office confirmed that it would like the current law to be tightened with a new definition of obscenity, describing it as something > "grossly offensive to a reasonable person".

However, it is one thing to announce the need for change and entirely another actually to make the change. I believe that the law needs immediate amendment.

I shall speak particularly about printed material, such as magazines and books. I wonder when the Minister last visited a newsagent and looked at the sort of magazines now being stocked. I hope that he might be too ashamed to do so. I am no prude, but I was deeply shocked when I discovered the sort of material that can be bought even within a mile of this House, without going to a licensed sex shop or specialised mail order firm or asking for material under the counter. Many shops now sell 10, 15 or 20 magazines catering for every whim and fetish.

Two trends particularly disturb me. The Minister has a copy of a magazine called "Razzle" which includes pictures of a woman dressed in leather with her hands in chains. Part of the myth of pornography is that women are portrayed as enjoying such degradation. This is far from the worst example that I could have chosen, but it is just a few steps away from the sort of magazine used by the Putney rapist. Is it acceptable within the terms of the Obscene Publications Act 1959? Would it be caught by the new, "grossly offensive" definition? I certainly find it grossly offensive.

The second matter of concern is the recent appearance of so-called "shaver" material in magazines. "Shaver" denotes the fact that women have had their pubic hair shaved off before posing for photographs. Why do such magazines sell? I can only presume that it is to satisfy the desire of some to fantasise about young girls. I agree with an article in The Independent in April that catalogued the kind of material available in a typical high street:

> "What is being represented are female children inviting sexual access and what is being engineered is the sexual arousal of adult males by their bodies."

Child pornography is illegal in this country and I must commend the police for all that they have done, and are doing, to try to stamp it out. But is not a new generation of paedophiles being succoured on this shaver material? How do such magazines measure up against the 1959 Act or the proposed new definition? Is the Minister happy that such material is available freely in newsagents next to school playgrounds where young innocent girls are playing?

What little confidence I had in the Obscene Publications Act 1959 was shattered when I heard of the case of "Under the Rooftops of Paris." This is a book written by Henry Miller which includes scenes of bestiality, sex with children, and a particularly foul scene when during a mass a priest urinates in the communion wine, dips a wafer in the wine, wipes it on the genitalia of a naked woman lying on the altar and then tosses it to the congregation. When the hon. Member for Lancashire, West (Mr. Hind) sent a summary of the book to the Solicitor-General and asked what action would be taken, he received the reply that the DPP had decided not to institute proceedings. I find the reasoning somewhat difficult. It was to the effect that > "the DPP has weighed the factors relevant to the discharge of the burden of proof by the prosecution and those bearing upon the public interest in cases of this type".

I presume that this legal gobbledegook means "We do not think we would win". If that is the case, I believe the Government should be ashamed that they have not yet tightened our laws to protect the weak and innocent, women and children who are damaged by those who buy and read such material.

A change in the law is urgently needed. I challenge the Minister to tell the House when he will introduce new legislation to give the police the backing that they need to tackle the rising tide of pornography. He should not rely on private Members' legislation to deal with such an important issue.

The Broadcasting Bill, which is to have its Second Reading on Monday, brings television and radio under the Obscene Publications Act yet the Government have admitted that the existing definition is inadequate. The Minister should use the opportunity presented by that Bill to tighten up the definition of obscenity. I shall listen with interest to the Minister's response.

2.48 pm

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department (Mr. Peter Lloyd): I congratulate the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) on calling our attention to a topic that unites all of us—the menace of child pornography and other objectionable material that glories and promotes sexual violence. He referred to a number of horrifying crimes and unpleasant publications from which he had drawn disturbing conclusions. In responding I shall range a little more widely to say something about our controls on obscene and indecent material in all its various forms. I shall also take the opportunity to respond to the calls for new research into links between pornography and sexual violence. Finally, I shall say something about the international aspects with an eye to the single market in 1992.

First, on child pornography itself, for obvious reasons we cannot say categorically how much child pornography is being supplied, or whether it is getting nastier.

The trade is covert and we can make our assessments only on the basis of material uncovered by police and customs officers. They tell us that they have discovered some very nasty material indeed. There is no argument about the need to stamp that trade out. There are no considerations of freedom of expression or artistic licence. We all join the hon. Member for Mossley Hill in wanting this vile trade ended.

However, when we consider pornography more generally, the arguments may be less clear cut. One man's pornography may be another man's art. It is sobering to think that "Lady Chatterley's Lover" has moved from being fit for a prosecution as obscene to be being fit for bedtime reading on BBC radio all in the space of a very few years. That illustrates the difficulty of balancing the sometimes competing claims of decency and freedom of expression.

The Obscene Publications Act 1959, to which the hon Gentleman referred, remains after 30 years the main instrument for dealing with pornography at its worst. It would be wrong to think that that Act is ineffective. However, the number of people prosecuted under it varies considerably from year to year, for no obvious reason. In 1987, 121 people were proceeded against while 583 were proceeded against in 1984. The number of convictions per year has ranged from 93 to 429. The Act does get results.

However, convictions are only part of the story. The Obscene Publications Act 1959 provides for obscene material to be seized and impounded. Last year, the Metropolitan police seized more than 650,000 items and more than 800,000 items were seized the year before that.

Although the 1959 Act is being used with effect, as the figures show, the Government view is that it could, with benefit, be strengthened. The test of what is obscene laid down in the 1959 Act is material which, taken as a whole, will tend to deprave and corrupt those exposed to it. That is very close indeed in intention to the view expressed by the hon. Gentleman so very eloquently. It can sometimes be difficult for the prosecution to convince a jury that the material in question will have a depraving and corrupting effect.

Legislation on obscenity is by tradition left to private Members and the Government are reluctant—rightly, I believe—to set that tradition aside. As the hon. Gentleman has said, the Government have indicated their support for attempts to strengthen the 1959 Act most recently in 1986-87 by my hon. Friend the Member for Cannock and Burntwood (Mr. Howarth). His Bill would have substituted a test of "grossly offensive to a reasonable person" for the "deprave and corrupt" test, but the House will recall that the attempt failed to make enough progress in the time available.

Whether or not there is any direct and provable link between what people see and what they do, we have acted in numerous ways to uphold standards of public decency. With our support, the Indecent Displays (Control) Act 1981 reached the statute book, prohibiting indecent displays in public places. If the provisions of that Act are used at the minimum people will no longer find themselves or their children confronted with objectionable material in shops and other places. The Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1982 provides, in section 2, for a local authority to take power to restrict sex shops and sex cinemas in its area.

One of the most important measures was the private Member's Bill introduced with Government support by my hon. Friend the Member for Luton, South (Mr. Bright) which became the Video Recordings Act 1984. Under the Act, videos which are to be supplied to the public must —unless they come within specified exemptions—have a classification certificate issued by the British Board of Film Classification. As a result the "video nasty" has become, for most people, a thing of the past and the classifications given by the board mean that parents have a good guide to the suitability of a video work for their children. The system has, in our judgment, worked outstandingly well.

We know, of course, that there is still some illicit, under-the-counter trade in such products. The police's resources for tackling that are inevitably limited. That is why, in the Criminal Justice Act 1988 the Government extended powers to enforce the Video Recordings Act 1984 to local authority trading standards officers. The effect has been dramatic, marked by an immediate upsurge in the number of requests from trading standards departments to the British Board of Film Classification for certificates of evidence that particular works were not classified, or were not classified suitably for the age group to which they were being supplied.

The Government are also committed to upholding standards in broadcasting. The new Broadcasting Standards Council has a special role to play. Hon. Members will know that it has been active. The Government's new Broadcasting Bill will remove from broadcasters their present exemption from the Obscene Publications Act 1959. We do not think that they are broadcasting obscene material in breach of their existing duties, but they should not be in a specially privileged position. The Broadcasting Bill will ensure also that proper standards are adopted as technologies develop from terrestrial broadcasting via cable to satellite.

The police and the Crown prosecution service are independent of Government, but they are alert to the possibility of bringing proceedings against publishers when there is evidence that the law has been broken, for instance, by sending indecent material through the post or by living on immoral earnings. Unfortunately, in the nature of things, those offences are not easy to prove.

The major legislation in addition to the Obscene Publications Act is the Protection of Children Act 1978, which creates offences of producing or supplying indecent photographs of children. The maximum penalty is a term of imprisonment of up to three years'. Some people—I regret that I cannot say how many—guilty of child pornography will have been prosecuted and convicted under the 1959 Act and will be included in the figures that I gave a few moments ago. In addition, there have been prosecutions under the 1978 Act. They have risen from 10 in 1986 to 32 last year.

It has been suggested that the maximum penalty of three years' imprisonment under the Protection of Children Act is inadequate. We are ready to reconsider this, although we are not yet convinced. To date, it has been rare for the courts to use anything approaching that maximum.

One of the difficulties which the police have found with the Protection of Children Act 1978 is that of proving that someone who has indecent photographs of children in his possession has them for the purpose of supply. It was to meet this weakness that we made provision in last year's Criminal Justice Act for a new offence of simple possession of an indecent photograph of a child. It does not matter whether the person is a commercial pornographer or a customer who has the photograph for his own use.

I think that the hon. Gentleman will agree that the powers to deal with child pornography directly, and in particular are strict and wide-ranging. Given the reorganisation which the Commissioner has made in the Metropolitan police's obscene publications branch, we have the necessary arrangements now to crack down heavily on this trade. The hon. Gentleman is interested in the wider effects of pornography. As my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary told him a few weeks ago, the Home Office is undertaking a further review of the available research on any possible link between pornography and sexual violence. We elaborated on this in the further answer that we gave him yesterday.

Over the years, research into the impact of pornography on people's behaviour has generally produced equivocal results. For many, not least the hon. Gentleman, as he has powerfully argued today, it is common sense that pornography must tend to cause those who see it to regard women or children as sex objects, making them more likely to commit offences against them. Others argue that pornography may have a role as a safety valve for anti-social feelings which might otherwise be expressed in criminal behaviour, and that those who commit such crimes are likely to be interested in pornography, although without the latter being the cause of that interest, but merely a symptom of it.

Although earlier research has generally been inconclusive, we think it only right that we should have the most reliable data available. We therefore intend to draw together reports of research in this country and overseas —not least the Cline report, which, as the hon. Gentleman mentioned, was conducted in the United States—to analyse them and to present any conclusions, with whatever weight of evidence we can find.

The review of research will look broadly at the effects of pornography, including any evidence of its effects on attitudes to women, which have been of particular concern to hon. Members, in addition to the hon. Gentleman. Our intention is that that review should be carried out quickly —within the first half of next year—and that the results should be published, as is our usual practice. We shall most certainly arrange for that work to be done by independent professionals, but we shall not decide whether to commission any original research until we have the findings and can see what gaps need filling.

Mr. Alton: May I press the Minister on interested outside organisations such as CARE, which I mentioned earlier, being allowed to submit evidence to the inquiry?

Mr. Lloyd: We certainly look to the public to supply us with any data which has some scientific basis and which we have can include in the study. However, at this stage we do not want anecdotal evidence and information. It is an exercise to study scientifically based research, and when we publish the results the House can discuss the best way to proceed.

I know that that matter has been exercising the hon. Gentleman's mind, because he has tabled many questions about it. I congratulate him on choosing this topic for discussion; the Home Office and I take it extremely seriously. I congratulate him on putting his case so well.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at Three o'clock.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Golden Shares

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will outline Government policy concerning golden shares held by his Department.

Mr. Redwood: Policy in respect of each special share is a matter for the Secretary of State holding that share, consulting colleagues as necessary.

In the case of the special shares held by my right hon. Friend, decisions on the rights attached to these shares will depend on the particular circumstances of each company.

Financial Services Act

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps have been taken to ensure that the Financial Services Act is being operated to the benefit of the investor.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps have been taken to ensure that the Financial Services Act is being operated to the benefit of the investor.

Mr. Redwood: I believe that the Financial Services Act has already brought benefits for investors, not least the SIB compensation scheme. However, investors also benefit financially when regulation of the firms with which they deal is least burdensome, and the amendments introduced in the new Companies Act should make the system of investor protection more flexible and cost-effective.

Regional Infrastructure Investment

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received about regional infrastructure investment.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend and I are well aware of the concern in the regions about the quality of regional infrastructure, particularly in relation to transport links with the single market and the Channel tunnel. These are matters on which we make our views known to my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Transport, and colleagues at the Department of Transport.

CBI

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next plans to meet representatives of the Confederation of British Industry to discuss the prospects for British business.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My Department maintains regular and frequent contacts with the Confederation of British Industry at all levels on a wide range of business matters.

Cheshire Business and Innovation Centre

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received about the funding of the Cheshire business and innovation centre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have received representations from my hon. Friend and others who have asked for money from the European regional development fund to be made available for the Cheshire business and innovation centre.

The eligibility of Cheshire business and innovation centre for support from the European regional development fund will be decided in the light of a Community support framework which will determine the level of overall funding for an area and the priorities for support. Discussions on this are currently taking place.

Uranium

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what quantity of uranium has been imported to Britain from Africa since 1979; and what were the national sources of these materials.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is confidential and cannot be published.

Coffins

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will ask the Director-General of Fair Trading to investigate the price of coffins.

Mr. Redwood: If the hon. Member has any evidence of monopoly abuse or anti-competitive or restrictive trade practices which may be affecting the price of such goods he should draw it to the attention of the Director-General of Fair Trading direct.

Footwear Industry

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement regarding the present state of the British footwear industry.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My Department is fully aware of the difficulties facing United Kingdom footwear manufacturers and of their continuing concern over low-cost imports, particularly from the Far East. The findings and recommendations of the Commission's Community-wide investigation into imports of footwear from Taiwan and South Korea have been circulated to member states. Those recommendations are now being urgently examined and we will reach a decision on appropriate action for the United Kingdom as soon as possible.

Industrial Assistance

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the aid given by his Department to firms in Tameside and Stockport.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Aid to firms in Tameside and Stockport, available from the Department of Trade and Industry under the Enterprise Initiative, is as follows:

The Consultancy Initiative

Encourages small and medium sized firms to develop their key management activities by making use of private sector consultancy. In Stockport (a non-assisted area) and Tameside (an assisted area), the DTI will pay half and two thirds, respectively, of the costs of consultancy;

The Regional Initiative

Provides selective assistance for investment projects undertaken by firms located in assisted areas, such as Tameside. The regional initiative does not apply in Stockport or other non-assisted areas;

The Export Initiative

Offers a comprehensive range of support and advisory services to help firms and businesses develop their markets overseas;

The Research and Technology Initiative

Seeks to support and encourage collaborative research partnerships between business and centres of academic excellence. Additionally, through the annual small firms merit award for research and technology provides financial help to assist with the costs of developing new and novel business ideas.

The Enterprise and Education Initiative

Aims to strengthen and develop at the local level the interface between business employers and schools.

Additionally, firms in Tameside and Stockport can benefit from a broad range of support and technical services available from the DTI either to complement action taken under the Enterprise Initiative, or separately.

House of Fraser

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his policy on publishing the House of Fraser report (a) once legal proceedings arising out of it are completed and (b) after the serious fraud squad indicates that no prosecutions are appropriate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: My right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State, has made it clear that it is his intention to publish the report at the earliest possible moment consistent with the even-handed administration of justice.

Hi-tech Industries

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what initiatives he plans for the improvement of hi-tech British industries.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Government's major initiative for helping United Kingdom hi-tech companies is LINK which supports collaborative projects of strategic research involving companies and science base institutions. There are now 21 LINK programmes in various fields with a total value of almost £300 million, of which Government will contribute 50 per cent. Within these programmes, over 500 projects are in the pipeline. Further programmes will be announced in due course.

Companies Act Investigations

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, for each investigation by his Department since May 1979 into United Kingdom companies, he will list (a) the name of the company investigated, (b) the date inspectors were appointed, (c) the date the inspectors reported to his Department, (d) whether prosecution was recommended, (e) the amount of fraud involved, (f) whether and when prosecution followed, (g) the outcome of the prosecution, (h) the date the inspectors' report was made public, (i) whether it was published in full or only in part, (j) the costs of the investigation and (k) the costs of the prosecution.

Mr. Redwood: This information in the form requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Information about Companies Act investigations is contained in the annual report prepared in accordance with the provisions of section 729 of the Companies Act 1985. Copies of the report are placed in the Library. Further information will be available in my Department's memorandum on DTI investigations provided to the Trade and Industry Select Committee which will be published by the Committee in due course. There have been 56 inspections under sections 432 and 442 since 1979.

Output Statistics

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what were the increases in real total output, as expressed in index numbers, for the following sectors between the latest available figures and the same period or periods in 1973: steel, heavy and light, bricks, cement, passenger cars, commercial vehicles, construction, textiles and engineering.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Percentage changes in output for the sectors concerned (or, in some cases, the nearest approximation for which figures are available) are given in the following table. The periods of comparison, unless otherwise stated, are the first three quarters of 1973 and 1989 respectively.

	Percentage change
Crude steel	[1] −27
Bricks	−31
Cement	−15
Motor vehicles and parts	−36
Construction	[2] +3
Textiles	−35
Mechanical engineering	−10
Electrical, electronic and instrument engineering	+69

[1] 1989 quarter 1 and 2 compared with 1973 quarter 1 and 2.

[2] 1988 compared with 1973.

Enterprise Initiative

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish (a) tables showing the number of projects and total expenditure in each standard region under the enterprise initiative in each case expressed also as a percentage of the national total of expenditure and projects approved and (b) similar tables for each programme within the enterprise initiative.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 30 November 1989]: The Enterprise Initiative is a comprehensive package of DTI services, including the consultancy initiatives, regional selective assistance (RSA), regional enterprise grants (REG), collaborative research programmes, the small firms merit award for research and technology (SMART), the enterprise and education initiative, the managing into the '90s programme and the export initiative.

Number of Consultancy Initiative Projects Approved and Total Actual Expenditure from 13 January 1988 to 31 October 1989

Notes:

1. A similar breakdown is not applicable to the Enterprise and Education Initiative, the Managing into the '90s programme or the Export Initiative, as these programmes do not offer individual project assistance to firms.
2. Information is provided by DTI Region and for Scotland and Wales as it is not available by standard economic region.

Research and Development

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the size of the research and development budget for each year since 1979 and the proportion of this budget spent in developing defence technology.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 30 November 1989]: Department of Trade and Industry spend on science and technology since 1979 is as follows:

1979-80	245
1980-81	252
1981-82	286
1982-83	283
1983-84	400
1984-85	436
1985-86	458
1986-87	462
1987-88	418
[1]1988-89	407

[1] Estimated.

Notes

(1) Before June 1983 figures relate to Department of Industry.

(2) Source of figures: Cabinet Office annual review of Government funded research and development.

There is no proportion of the budget spent in developing defence technology. Some limited support of research at Ministry of Defence establishments is carried out to promote civil applications of defence technology.

Telecommunications

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consideration his Department has given to the future deregulation of telecommunications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 30 November 1989]: The regulatory framework for telecommunications is established by the Telecommunications Act 1984 and certain policy statements made at that time. I have no current plans to make significant changes to this framework. I shall, however, continue to look for further opportunities within the framework for increasing competition.

Footwear

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to investigate the dumping and subsidisation of imports of ladies footwear from various far eastern countries.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 30 November 1989]: No. Under the Community's anti-dumping and anti-subsidy legislation it is the European Commission that carries out investigations in response to complaints from the Community industries affected. The Commission has recently completed an investigation into safeguard action against certain footwear imports from Taiwan and South Korea and has invited the views of member states.

Korea (Treatment of Animals)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will raise with the President of Korea during his visit to the United Kingdom for trade talks his country's treatment of dogs and cats intended for human consumption and the need to end such practices before stronger trade links are developed.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 1 December 1989]: While I share the hon. Member's concern about cruelty to animals, wherever it may occur, it is not an appropriate subject for trade talks. I am sure that the President of Korea will have noted the strong and justified views of the British public which were publicised extensively during his visit.

Information Engineering Technology Programme

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement as to the reason for the delays in the allocation of funds to projects in the information engineering advanced technology programme.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 1 December 1989]: About 80 per cent. of the offers under the first round of this programme have now been made. I am very conscious of the need to get the outstanding projects under way as soon as possible.

A major reason why offers have been delayed is that many companies have been slow to provide supporting information to explain the basis of their costs or to demonstrate their viability. Furthermore, many research consortia have needed reorganisation, following decisions by individual partners not to pursue the project as originally proposed. The Department tries to be helpful in such cases and allow a reasonable time for a revised proposal to be submitted.

Liability Insurance

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce legislation to require all building surveyors to show proof of adequate liability insurance prior to any property surveying work being undertaken for members of the public.

Mr. Chris Patten: I have been asked to reply. This proposal, which reflects a recommendation in the Government's recent report on professional liability, will be examined as legislative opportunities become available.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Zimbabwe

112. Mr. John L. Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current level of British aid to Zimbabwe.

Mrs. Chalker: In 1988 British gross bilateral aid to Zimbabwe amounted to more than £24 million, including assistance by the Commonwealth Development Corporation.

Ethiopia

113. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, in the light of reports of famine in rebel-held areas of Ethiopia, how Her Majesty's Government will ensure that food supplies they provide will get through to those who need them.

Mrs. Chalker: The food that we have supplied to rebel-held areas has been channelled through British non-governmental organisations with proven capacity to deliver it to those in need. We propose to continue using these channels.

114. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further steps he intends to take to alleviate the famine in Ethiopia.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Dover (Mr. Shaw) on 4 December.

124. Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what food aid is provided by Britain to the Tigre area of Ethiopia; and what steps are being taken to make sure supplies reach their destination.

128. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on emergency food supplies provided from British Government funds to Tigre and the surrounding area.

Mrs. Chalker: The food that we have supplied to rebel-held areas has been channelled through British non-governmental organisations with proven capacity to deliver it to those in need. We propose to continue using these channels. It is not the practice to reveal more precise details of such operations.

Amazonian Rain Forests

115. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has made an assessment of the results of the visit to Brazil of the right hon. Member for Bath (Mr. Patten) to discuss Amazonian rain-forest issues with the Brazilian Government.

Mrs. Chalker: Its main purpose was to sign a memorandum of understanding on technical co-operation on environmental matters, which provides the framework for our proposed assistance programme with Brazil in this area. I wrote to the hon. Member on 3 November giving details of progress on the first projects.

Poland

116. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what economic aid is currently given to Poland.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced a know-how fund for Poland during General Jaruzelski's visit in June; and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 29 November that it would be doubled. The fund, in effect a technical co-operation programme, will total £50 million over five years. We expect to spend £3 million in the current financial year. My right hon. Friend also announced a contribution of $100 million to a stabilisation fund for Poland, and finance for an agricultural project costing some £15 million.

Vietnam

117. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government have any plans to restore overseas aid to Vietnam.

119. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last reviewed Her Majesty's Government's aid and development embargo on Vietnam.

Mrs. Chalker: The Government's policy on Vietnam is kept under constant review. The announced withdrawal of Vietnamese troops from Cambodia is one consideration in resuming an aid programme to Vietnam. In his speech on 31 July to the international conference on Cambodia in Paris the then Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, the right hon. Member for Huntingdon (Mr. Major) said that Britain also expected the Vietnamese Government to fulfil their responsibilities towards their own people and to their neighbours before we would be prepared to consider contributing to a programme of assistance for Vietnam.

Non-governmental Organisations

118. Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about increases planned in the Overseas Development Agency joint funding scheme and other schemes benefiting United Kingdom non-governmental organisations operating in developing countries.

121. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he plans to channel further aid funds through United Kingdom non-governmental organisations for projects in developing countries.

Mrs. Chalker: I have recently decided to increase our joint funding scheme, under which we support non-governmental organisations' agreed long-term development projects by 25 per cent. next year to £20 million. I am also increasing support for the United Kingdom volunteer recruiting agencies—most notably VSO—by 10 per cent. to £14·3 million. We will, of course, also consider sympathetically requests for assistance from non-governmental organisations for disaster and emergency relief measures if the need arises.

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what were the principal categories of Overseas Development Administration grants to non-governmental organisations in 1988-89 under the heading "Others" in his reply to the right hon. Member for Tonbridge and Malling on 16 November, Official Report, columns 467-70; and what sum was paid to each non-governmental organisation within each of these categories of grant.

Mrs. Chalker: Grants to non-governmental organisations under the heading of "Others" as contained in my reply on 16 November encompass a wide range of activity which cannot readily be categorised. The principal elements are the volunteer programme and certain development projects implemented by non-governmental organisations but financed from bilateral country programmes. The volunteer programme accounts for 52 per cent. of the "Others" figure and consists of:

British Executive Service Overseas	300,006
Catholic Institute for International Relations	945,000
International Voluntary Service	760,000
United Nation Association International Service	490,000
Voluntary Service Overseas	8,681,533
TOTAL	11,176,539

Cambodia

120. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance is being given to the people of Cambodia; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Gravesham (Mr. Arnold) on 23 November at column 17.

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will name the diplomat and the Overseas Development Administration official who will be visiting Phnom Penh shortly; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: I have nothing to add to the statement that I made in answer to a question by my hon. Friend the Member for Gravesham (Mr. Arnold) on 23 November at column 17. It is not the practice to name officials in these circumstances.

Namibia

122. Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans his Department has to assist in infrastructure development in Namibia.

123. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what aid Her Majesty's Government propose to make available as a priority to Namibia.

125. Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much and what type of economic and development aid Her Majesty's Government gave in 1988, and are proposing to give in the current year, to Namibia.

Mrs. Chalker: British aid for Namibians in 1988 was just over £2 million. It focused on the development of English language teaching skills and scholarships for Namibians both inside and outside the country. This programme has continued in 1989. In addition we have contributed £1·15 million towards the refugee repatriation programme.

My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister told the House on 26 October at col. 1046 that we would provide assistance to Namibia after independence. The priorities for a future programme will be agreed with the new Government.

The Caribbean

126. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on overseas aid to the Caribbean.

Mrs. Chalker: Our bilateral aid programme to the Commonwealth Caribbean has been running at over £30 million a year for some time. Last year (1988-89) it reached £51 million, mainly because of a substantial increase in investment by the Commonwealth Development Corporation. This year expenditure is expected to remain at a high level.

A new feature is the capital aid programme for Guyana (plus increased technical co-operation) to support that country's economic recovery programme; we expect to spend some £12 million in loans, grants and technical co-operation in Guyana this financial year.

Hurricane damage has required an exceptional response. Last year we gave Jamaica a grant of £3 million after Hurricane Gilbert struck. This year, in the wake of Hurricane Hugo, we have assisted Antigua, St. Kitts and the British Virgin Islands and particularly Montserrat, where we have already spent or committed around £4·5 million in relief and reconstruction aid.

Horn of Africa

127. Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will hold discussions with other Governments and non-governmental organisations on the situation in the Horn of Africa.

Mrs. Chalker: At the European Community Development Council on 21 November I drew attention to the serious threat of famine in northern Ethiopia and urged that all possible diplomatic channels be used to exert pressure on the parties to the conflict to secure free access for food supplies. We are also liaising closely with other donor Governments and international agencies. Similar co-ordination takes place on the situation in Sudan. I meet regularly with the British non-governmental organisations working in the Horn of Africa.

Tropical Hardwood Forests

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contribution the United Kingdom is making to the European Community's effort to select the most practical and internationally economically viable options to conserve the tropical hardwood forests.

Mrs. Chalker: The United Kingdom is playing a full part in the Community's discussion of these issues, which were raised both at the Council of Development Ministers on 21 November and at the Council of Environment Ministers on 28 November. We have provided the only expert on tropical forestry in the development directorate of the Commission.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Local Education Authority Inspectors

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he received a copy of the Audit Commission report on the role of local education authority inspectors and advisers; and what response he will be making.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend received a copy of the report on 3 October. My right hon. Friend and I agree with much of the analysis and believe that local authorities will find the report thought-provoking and helpful. We shall be discussing with them how best to follow it up.

School Numbers

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are his estimates of the numbers of (a) primary school children and teachers and (b) secondary school children and teachers for each year of the 1990s.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The projected numbers of pupils in maintained primary and secondary schools in England and of teachers overall are given in the table. The numbers of teachers in future years will depend upon many factors. The projection is based on an illustrative assumption that the current overall pupil teacher ratio of 17:1 will be maintained in future years. Further assumptions would be needed to disaggregate the overall figure between the nursery, primary and secondary sectors, and no attempt has been made to do this in the figures shown.

Thousands

At January of each year	Primary schools	Secondary schools	Teachers overall
1990	3,967	2,851	397
1991	4,011	2,818	396
1992	4,046	2,833	399
1993	4,093	2,866	404
1994	4,164	2,912	410
1995	4,236	2,967	418
1996	4,316	2,999	424
1997	4,385	3,031	430
1998	4,452	3,063	436
1999	4,512	3,106	442

Notes:

1. Pupils in maintained nursery and special schools are excluded, as are those in independent schools.
2. The projections take account of the mid-1988 population projection provided by the Government Actuary's Department.
3. Pupils of all ages are included. For primary schools, part-time pupils under the age of five are each counted as one.
4. The overall number of teachers employed for service in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools in England is given. Teachers in nursery schools are included, to be consistent with the usual coverage of the overall aggregate employed for public expenditure planning. All full-time equivalent teachers are counted, including student teachers, instructors, occasional teachers and secondments.

International Student Conference, Buenos Aires

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if there was any United Kingdom representative present at the third international student conference on youth building the future in Buenos Aires on 11 to 18 August; and whether he has received any report on decisions taken at the forum.

Mr. Jackson: So far as I have been able to establish, the United Kingdom was not represented. I have received no report of this conference.

Records of Achievement

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to ensure that all school children have an individual record of achievement; what resources he is putting into securing this specific objective; and what advice he is offering to local education authorities on the need for records of achievement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Draft regulations and an accompanying circular on information to parents on their child's achievements are to be issued for consultation shortly. I will arrange for copies to be placed in the Library as soon as they are available.

Teacher Appraisal

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what arrangements have been made by his Department for the report on the evaluation of the school teacher appraisal pilot study, undertaken by the Cambridge Institute of Education, to be made available to those interested bodies who have been invited by his Department to comment on the report of the national steering group; what priority he attaches to such evaluation of school teacher appraisal; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Cambridge Institute of Education report on the evaluation of the school teacher appraisal pilot study was presented to the national steering group (NSG) responsible for overseeing the study in July this year, and was taken into account in the report to the Secretary of State by that group. My right hon. Friend did not send copies of the evaluation report, in addition to the reports of the NSG and Her Majesty's inspectors, to all those consulted on the NSG's recommendations, because he wished to limit the amount of reading required of them. Copies were, however, sent to the local authority and teacher associations and to all local education authorities and grant maintained schools.

My right hon. Friend attaches considerable priority to the evaluation of pilot projects such as those in school teacher appraisal. The Cambridge Institute of Education as evaluators of the pilot projects made an important contribution to the work of the national steering group.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what has been the amount of his Department's expenditure on the evaluation of teacher appraisal pilot projects, including expenditure for work undertaken by the Cambridge Institute of Education; and if he will make a statement on the main findings of this evaluation.

Mrs. Rumbold: A total of £248,843 was spent on external evaluation of the school teacher appraisal pilot study by the Cambridge Institute of Education. The findings of this evaluation are set out in a report by the Cambridge institute, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

Child Care Courses

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will introduce legislation to make practical child care courses part of the school curriculum.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Guidance on the place and content of health education in the curriculum as a whole is to be issued to all schools in England in 1990 by the National Curriculum Council. This is likely to include guidance on education about child care.

Barnstaple Schools

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the present and the forecast figure for pupils at the primary schools in Barnstaple Roundswell, Barnstaple Whiddon Valley and Barnstaple Landkey; and what additional funding he will provide for new schools in this area.

Mr. Alan Howarth: According to Devon local education authority, the figures are as follows:

	1989	1993
Barnstaple, Roundswell	371	501
Barnstaple, Whiddon Valley	887	1,140
Barnstaple, Landkey	205	218

No proposals for new schools are currently before my right hon. Friend for decision. Priority is given in the distribution of annual capital guidelines for new school places needed as a result of population growth.

New School Buildings

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the guidance his Department gives to local education authorities on planning space and facilities to cater for first aid and sickness of pupils and staff in new school buildings.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Local education authorities are under a duty to provide medical accomodation in both new and existing schools in accordance with the requirements of regulation 12 of the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981.

The Department has not published any separate guidance on planning space and facilities in school buildings for these purposes. Its professional staff are, however, available to offer advice on aspects of the design and planning of school buildings where this is required.

CBI Skills Report

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about the Confederation of British Industry report "Towards a Skills Revolution—A Youth Charter"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend has discussed the work of the Confederation of British Industry's task force on vocational education and training with its chairman, Sir Bryan Nicholson, and with the confederation's director general, Mr. John Banham. The Government have welcomed the final report "Towards a Skills Revolution" and are giving serious consideration to its proposals.

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking and on what timetable to give greater independence to local authority maintained further education colleges; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Under the Education Reform Act all local education authorities are required to draw up schemes for the planning and funding of their further education colleges, and to delegate substantial authority to reformed college governing bodies. LEAs outside inner London were required to submit proposed schemes, together with articles of government for their colleges, by September 1989 for implementation from April 1990. Those proposed schemes and articles are currently under consideration.

Inner London boroughs will be required to submit proposed schemes and articles of government by September 1991 for implementation from April 1992.

London Museums Education Initiative

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to encourage London education authorities to work with the London museums education unit's new initiative for education in the capital.

Mrs. Rumbold: The London Museums Service has had discussions with the Office of Arts and Libraries about the establishment of the unit and its programme of work. I welcome the steps the unit has taken to establish contact with individual boroughs and local authority associations.

Vocational Education and Training

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to encourage the involvement of employers with further education colleges in the development of vocational education and training.

Mr. Jackson: The reconstitution of college governing bodies required by the Education Reform Act will ensure that governors representing employment interests have no fewer than half of the available places on each new governing body. The Government have taken a number of steps to encourage employers to take up this opportunity to become involved in the development of vocational education and training. The then Secretary of State's speech to the 1988 CBI conference encouraged people from business to get involved and a leaflet "College Governors from the Business Community" was distributed. Earlier this year, an information pack "New Governors for Further Education" was produced by Industry Matters and also a promotional video. Employers can become involved in the work of colleges in many other ways. Through its Pickup initiative the Department has been encouraging colleges to work with employers to develop tailor-made training and updating provision. The changes required by the Education Reform Act will give employers greater oportunity to participate in the planning of such work.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what targets he is setting for vocational education and training among young people.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend recognises the need for considerable improvement in both the number and the level of vocational qualifications gained by young people. He believes that:

> Every young person should either be in full-time education or in a job with time off for good quality training.
> Every young person should achieve a recognised vocational qualification or its equivalent, with greater numbers achieving higher levels of qualification.

Bradford and Ilkley (Colleges)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how many times since 1979 Her Majesty's inspectors of education have visited Bradford and Ilkley community college; how many times their reports have drawn attention to inadequate accommodation; and what action has been taken;

(2) what location for new accommodation for Bradford college is identified in the bid submitted by Bradford local education authority to replace accommodation lost to Bradford college by vacating the Alexandra hotel building; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what representations he has received from students and others about inadequate accommodation at Bradford college.

Mr. Jackson: The Bradford and Ilkley community college has been visited by HMI on many occasions since it was created in 1982 but most of those visits will not have resulted in a report. There have, however, been four inspections of parts of the college's provision since HMI reports were published in 1983. As is usual all include an assessment of the adequacy and sufficiency of the teaching and other accommodation. Copies of the reports are sent to the authority for its consideration.

The bid from Bradford LEA for a major building project to start in 1990-91 proposes to replace the Alexandra hotel building by converting the Westbrook building on the same site. The bid will be considered on its merits along with those from other education authorities, and allocations will be announced later this month.

The hon. Member recently wrote to my right hon. Friend enclosing a press release and representations from students in respect of accommodation at Bradford and Ilkley community college. My right hon. Friend has not received any other representations this year on this matter.

Scientific Research

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the Government's policy on maintaining and improving the standards of British scientific research.

Mr. Jackson: I refer my hon. Friend to the speech at the first plenary meeting of the Academia Europaea on 26 June by my right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State, a copy of which is in the Library.

Student Loans

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science in what way the proposed student loan scheme will apply to students from other European Economic Community countries attending centres of education in the United Kingdom; what arrangements will be made to recover the loans from such students after they have returned to their home countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The rules governing the eligibility of students from the European Community will follow the provisions of the Mandatory Awards Regulations. Students from other member states will be eligible for top-up loans if they are attending relevant courses and satisfy the requirements for ordinary residence within the British Islands. Loans will also be available to students who are British citizens and who do not satisfy the ordinary residence requirements, if their absence resulted from employment, or their parents' employment, elsewhere in the European Community. European Community nationals not meeting the residence requirements will also be eligible if they, or their parents or spouses, can establish worker status under the relevant provisions in EC law. Arrangements will be made for the recovery of outstanding repayments from graduates living overseas. It will be in the interests of all borrowers to repay their loans.

Local Management of Schools

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement of progress to date on approving local education authorities' schemes of local management of schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: LEAs were required to submit their schemes by the end of September, and all did so. It is a great tribute to LEAs that they have got their schemes in on time. I have been impressed by the quality of what I have seen and the hard work that has been put into schemes by authorities, head teachers and governors.

We have now announced our approval decisions on 24 schemes. In each case we have proposed minor modifications, all designed to ensure that our three key objectives of local management are met. These are: the maximum delegation of resources to schools; the funding of schools through a clear, open and objective formula; and the minimum constraints on governors' use of their new powers.

The first 24 LEAs whose schemes we have announced our intention to approve from next April are;

Barking and Dagenham
Bedfordshire
Calderdale
Cambridgeshire
Cheshire
Cumbria
Essex
Harrow
Havering
Kent
Lincolnshire
Newcastle
Norfolk
Northamptonshire
Oxfordshire
Rotherham
Sandwell
Solihull
Suffolk
Sunderland
Surrey
West Sussex
Westminster
Wiltshire

Survey of Parental Awareness

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to publish the survey of parental awareness of school education commissioned by his Department.

Mr. MacGregor: Copies of the interpretative report of the survey of parental awareness of school education are being sent to each chief education officer and to various national education bodies today. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Investment

Mr. Amos: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the investment figure for United Kingdom business for the last year for which figures are available; if he will express the figure as a percentage of gross domestic product; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The level of business investment in 1988 is estimated to have been £58 billion. This was 14·7 per cent. of GDP at factor cost. Total business investment was forecast in the Autumn Statement to increase in real terms by 9¼ per cent. in 1989. As a share of GDP this year it is likely to be the highest ever.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what contribution the increase in investment in manufacturing industry made to the increase in the trade deficit in 1988 and in 1989 to date.

Mr. Norman Lamont: It is not possible to make a precise estimate of the contribution of the increase in manufacturing investment to the increase in the trade deficit. However, with the Autumn Statement forecast of a 9¼ per cent. rise in 1989, business investment will have increased by over 40 per cent. in the three years to 1989 —the largest increase over a three-year period since the war.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the inward and outward investment flows for each of the last five years between the United Kingdom and (a) the United States of America, (b) Japan, (c) West Germany and (d) France.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The available information relates to net outward and net inward direct investment flows and is published in tables 1·4 and 2·4 of Business Monitor MA4 1987—"Overseas Transactions". Information on portfolio investment, by country, is not available.

Manufactured Goods

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing (i) in terms of volume and of value at 1985 prices United Kingdom sales in 1973, 1979 and 1988 of the industries wholly or mainly engaged in manufacturing importable and exportable goods, (ii) imports and exports of such goods and (iii) the annual rate of increase in United Kingdom output in the 15 years prior to 1973 and in the period since.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Most manufactured goods can be imported and exported and therefore the question can be considered only in terms of manufacturing as a whole.

(i) United Kingdom sales data are not collected in volume terms, nor at 1985 prices, but the "Report of the Census of Production" summary volume contains current price data for sales and work done. However, a preferred indicator is gross output—that is, sales and work done adjusted for work in progress and goods on hand for sale. No figures are available yet for 1988.

(ii)—Data at 1985 prices are not published for imports and exports, but current price data and volume indices are contained in the "Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics".

(iii) Index numbers of output for manufacturing industries at 1985 prices are available in "Economic Trends" and its associated annual supplement.

The above publications are available from the House of Commons Library.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing in terms of 1985 prices the balance of trade in manufacturing less erratics on a BOP basis in each year from 1970 to 1973, in 1977, and from 1985 to 1988 and this year to date at an annual rate together with the annual increase/decrease in terms of 1985 prices in (i) gross and net investment in manufacturing industry, (ii) savings, (iii) consumer expenditure, (iv) United Kingdom output of capital and consumer goods, (v) imports of consumer and capital goods and (vi) exports of consumer and capital goods; and if he will publish corrective co-efficients with the trade deficit in each case.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Information at constant prices, as is available, from which the balance of trade and percentage changes may be derived, can be found in Government statistical service publications, available from the Library of the House, or on the Central Statistical Office databank, which may be accessed through the Library.

It is not clear what the hon. Member means by "corrective coefficients".

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the increase in the trade deficit in manufactures less erratics on a BOP basis in 1988 and this year to date; and what is his estimate of the contribution made in each case by the increase in investment in manufacturing industry and the fall in personal saving, respectively.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The figures requested can be found on the CSO's computer databank, which can be accessed in the House of Commons Library. It is not possible to make precise estimates of the contribution to the manufacturing trade deficit of the rise in investment and fall in personal saving.

Employment

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the growth in employment over the last five years.

Mr. Lamont: Total employment increased by 2,117,000 in the five years to June 1989.

Government Expenditure

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the value to the Government's spending plans arising from lower interest costs on the national debt.

Mr. Lamont: General Government gross debt interest as a percentage of GDP has fallen from 5 per cent. in 1981-82 to an estimated 3½ per cent. this year and is projected to fall to 2¼ per cent. in 1992-93. The fall in the burden of debt interest costs makes room within the medium-term plans for higher spending on priority programmes.

Income Tax

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has commissioned any research into the Swedish method of taxation for unmarried couples.

Mr. Lilley: No.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has to enable co-habitants to be taxed on the same basis as married couples where the couples are: (a) male/female, (b) male/male, and (c) female/female.

Mr. Lilley: The Government have no plans to allow unmarried couples to be taxed on the same basis as married couples. An unmarried couple who have a child living with them may qualify for an additional personal allowance, which will bring their total tax allowances to the same level as those available to a married couple.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the delay to the introduction of independent taxation which a revised policy allowing married couples to share the marriage allowance equally would entail.

Mr. Lilley: A change in the rules for giving the married couple's allowance, so that couples could share the allowance equally between them, would delay the introduction of independent taxation for up to two years.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether any surplus from a husband's marriage allowance will be automatically transferred to his wife in the new arrangements for married couple's allowance which are to be introduced in April 1990.

Mr. Lilley: Transfer of surplus married couple's allowance to the wife will normally require her husband to give notice to the tax office. Without such a notice, the tax office will not necessarily know that the husband has, or may have, any surplus allowance.

Balance of Trade

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the reasons for the United Kingdom's deficit on trade in invisibles with the European Economic Community and its surplus with the rest of the world.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The deficit on invisibles transactions with European Community countries and institutions reflects deficits on services, including foreign travel, and transfers. Surpluses on interest profits and dividends and on financial and other services make important contributions to the non-European Community invisibles surplus.

Exchange Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what effect the increase since January 1987 in both the nominal and real exchange rates against the D-mark has had on manufacturing capacity and on the future rate of growth in terms of the balance of payments constraint; and whether this has led him to revise the Treasury model of the economy.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The level of manufacturing investment (including leased assets) in 1989 quarter 3 is provisionally estimated to be about 38 per cent. higher than in 1987 quarter 1; and its cumulative growth over this period has added substantially to manufacturing capacity. The Treasury model is updated when necessary in the light of latest data.

Investment and Consumption

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what projections of net United Kingdom transactions in external liabilities for (i) direct investment, (ii) portfolio investment and (iii) total transactions, underlie the economic prospects for 1990 in the Chancellor's Autumn Statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Treasury does not publish forecasts of overseas sector capital flows.

Payroll Giving

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people in England and Wales now participate in payroll giving schemes.

Mr. Lilley: At 5 October 1989, the latest date for which figures are available, the total number of employees throughout the United Kingdom participating in payroll giving schemes was 162,526. Separate figures are not available for England and Wales.

Trade Statistics

Mr. Wall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of British exports is attributable to services, as opposed to manufactures, for the years 1979, 1984, 1988 and 1989; and what was total investment during the same years in these two sectors of the economy.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The most recent estimates of exports of services and manufactured goods in 1979, 1984 and 1988 are contained in the 1989 edition of CSO's "United Kingdom Balance of Payments". The available estimates for investment in these years are contained in the 1989 edition for CSO's "United Kingdom National Accounts". Copies of both publications are available in the Library. They are also on the CSO Databank, which is accessible through the Library. Estimates of exports and manufacturing investment for the first half of 1989 are available from the Library in various CSO publications and from the databank.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the principal differences between the definitions of consumer intermediate and capital goods, for United Kingdom production and for imports, in the national statistics.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 30 November 1989]: The principal difference is that the import classification applies only to finished manufactures (defined as Sections 7 and 8 of the Standard Industrial Classification, excluding ships, North Sea oil installations and aircraft), whereas the production classification applies to all industrial output. Further information may be obtained from "Industry Statistics: Occasional Paper No. 22" published by the Central Statistical Office in April 1989 and "Classification by broad economic categories" published by the United Nations in 1986, both of which may be found in the House of Commons Library.

Statistics (Social Science)

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the report, "Accessibility and other problems relating to statistics used by social scientists", prepared by Professor Benjamin for the Economic and Social Research Council.

Mr. Lilley: I understand that the Economic and Social Research Council has placed a copy of the report in the Library. Officials have prepared a detailed response, which has been sent to the commissioning bodies. This concludes that many of Professor Benjamin's criticisms are unfounded and based on factual inaccuracies and have been made without knowledge of the full range of publications and outputs. A copy of the full response has been placed in the Library.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

High Technology Trading

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the outcome of his discussions concerning trade in high technology with eastern Europe with his European Community counterparts at the Paris summit.

Mr. Maude: No such discussions took place.

Nepal

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has made to the Nepalese Government concerning abuses of human rights.

Mr. Maude: Her Majesty's embassy in Kathmandu has on a number of occasions, most recently on 12 November this year, made known to the Nepalese Government the concern felt in this country at the treatment of Christians in Nepal.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he intends to make to the Nepalese Government concerning article 18 of the United Nations convention on human rights; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: We have made and will continue to make known to the Nepalese Government our concern for the proper respect of religious liberties.

Bir Zeit University

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations have been made to the Israeli Government concerning the continued closure of Bir Zeit university; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have called regularly on the Israeli authorities, most recently in the EC statement on 6 October, to allow the schools and universities in the Occupied Territories to function normally.

Romania

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government are making to the Romanian Government in respect of the demolition of agricultural villages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We will continue to protest strongly to the Romanian Government on every appropriate occasion about abuses of human rights in Romania, including those involved in President Ceausescu's policy of "systematisation".

Cyprus

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met representatives of the Turkish Government; whether the question of Cyprus was raised; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: I met Mr. Ozceri, under-secretary at the Turkish Ministry of Foreign Affairs, in London on 17 October. We discussed the Cyprus dispute and agreed on the need for early progress.

Israel

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he intends to pay a visit to the territories occupied by Israel.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has at present no plans to do so.

Korea

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is planned to be discussed when the President of Korea visits the United Kingdom in the coming week; whether he will ensure that the issue of that country's animal welfare record is included on the agenda; and what representations he has received concerning possible trade sanctions related to this issue.

Mr. Maude: President Roh's visit provided the opportunity for a review of Anglo-Korean relations and current international issues. The Koreans are well aware of the strength of feeling in Britain about cruelty to animals. Trade sanctions, as advocated by the International Fund for Animal Welfare, would do nothing to help the situation.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received regarding trade union rights in Sri Lanka; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: We share the concern expressed by many hon. Members about abuses of human rights in Sri Lanka, but trade unions continue to operate normally there.

Hong Kong

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to afford citizenship rights in the United Kingdom to the Indian population now resident in Hong Kong.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs is considering with my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary a package of measures to maintain confidence in Hong Kong and hopes to make an announcement around the turn of the year.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether any steps have been taken to enable the Indian population now living in Hong Kong to become Chinese citizens after 1997.

Mr. Maude: Chinese nationality is a matter for the Chinese Government. However it is our understanding that under Chinese nationality law aliens lawfully resident in China are eligible to apply for Chinese nationality. Those members of the Indian population who have resided in Hong Kong for at least seven years and who have taken Hong Kong as their place of permanent residence will continue to enjoy permanent resident status in the Hong Kong special administrative region after 1997, in line with the Sino-British joint declaration on the question of Hong Kong of 1984.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will test the acceptability of the basic law in Hong Kong by a referendum of all citizens.

Mr. Maude: The Basic Law will be a Chinese law to be promulgated by the National People's Congress. It is being drafted by the Chinese authorities in consultation with Hong Kong people. A referendum would be neither appropriate nor useful.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many orphans there are at present in the camps in Hong Kong; how they are to be repatriated; and what measures he will take to ensure a satisfactory result.

Mr. Maude: We are seeking information from Hong Kong. I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

EC Council of Ministers

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement of forthcoming business in the European Community Council of Ministers.

Mr. Maude: At the Transport Council on 4 and 5 December, Ministers will further consider the Commission's proposals on stage II of the EC common shipping policy and a report on the present state of discussions with certain west and central African states concerning their cargo allocation policies. A number of road transport items will be discussed including a proposal for a Council regulation on road haulage cabotage; training for drivers of dangerous goods by road; vehicles hired without drivers for the carriage of goods by road; negotiations between the EC and third countries on transit routes; road safety and a note from the presidency on social regulations concerning road transport. It is expected that the Transport Commissioner will make an oral presentation on Commission proposals on railways policy in the Community. A number of matters concerning the development of civil aviation in the Community are to be considered including proposals for Council regulations on fares for scheduled air services and access for air-carriers to scheduled intra-Community air service routes and the sharing of passenger capacity on scheduled services between member states. Ministers will discuss a presidency note on problems relating to the capacity of air traffic systems and aspects of Community transport infrastructure.

The Telecommunications Council will meet on 7 December. Ministers will discuss the opening up to competition of the Community's telecommunications services markets by a Commission directive, and a related proposal for a Council directive on open network provision (ONP) to define the conditions on which telecommunications operators make available monopoly services. A common position on the proposed Council measure is unlikely to be achieved on 7 December. A proposed Council declaration on the establishment of a Commission working group to consider research and development in the field of broad-band technology will also be discussed.

The European Council will meet in Strasbourg on 8 and 9 December. Heads of Government will discuss developments in eastern Europe and the EC response to them, and will discuss economic and monetary union. They will consider a proposal for a charter of fundamental social rights and a number of issues relevant to the completion of the single market. There will also be discussions on audiovisual matters and the free movement of people.

The Agriculture Council will meet on 11 and 12 December to discuss veterinary checks, compound feedingstuffs, pesticide residues, pig semen, monitoring of export refunds and the scrutiny of EACFF accounts. Ministers will be asked to agree on the Commission submission to GATT on long term agricultural reform. The Council may also discuss the sluice gate price for pigmeat.

At the Education Council on 14 December Ministers will be invited to agree the terms of a mixed resolution on measures to combat failure at school, mixed conclusions on technical and vocational education and initial training and on European Schools, and a decision amending the ERASMUS programme. There may also be discussion on the possibility of opening up Community programmes in the education and training fields to eastern European countries.

At the Research Council on 15 December there will be further discussion of a new framework programme of Community activities in research and technological development. The agenda also anticipates the adoption of a common position on a two year programme on human genome analysis.

The Economic and Financial Council will meet on 15 December to consider the economic situation in the Community, including the Commission's annual economic report. The revised financial regulation will be taken at the Council with the aim of reaching agreement by the end of the year. The discussion on taxation of savings will concentrate on mutual assistance. Common position was reached at ECOFIN on 13 November on the proposed revised Council decisions which will replace the 1964 decision on co-ordination between central banks and the 1974 decision on encouraging the convergence of economic policies and performance. Subject to the opinions of the European Parliament and the Economic and Social Committee it is hoped that the decisions will be adopted at the forthcoming meeting. The Solvency Ratio Directive and Second Banking Co-ordination Directive have received second reading opinions by the European Parliament and now also return to the Council for final adoption. ECOFIN is expected to discuss progress on the Commission's indirect tax proposals and a progress report on key issues of Takeover Directive negotiations in the Council working party.

The Fisheries Council will meet on 18 December to discuss 1990 TACS and quotas, EC/Greenland, EC/Norway, EC/Sweden, EC/Norway/Sweden, EC/Faroes, NAFO, 1990 opportunities in Spanish, Portuguese and member states' waters (Accession Treaties) and 1990 fisheries opportunities in waters off French Guyana. It may also discuss tariff quotas and EC/USSR, EC/GDR, EC/Poland and EC/Latin America.

At the Foreign Affairs Council on 19 December Ministers will be asked to agree to the terms of the EC-USSR agreement. Ministers will consider developments in Eastern Europe and EC-EFTA co-operation. A Ministerial meeting on EC-EFTA matters is expected to take place in the margins of the FAC. The Council will consider the Commission's draft negotiating mandate for a second stage EC-GCC agreement and Ministers will be asked to agree on the Commission's submission to GATT on long term agricultural reform. The FAC is expected to discuss proposals from the Commission on European Community policy on Japanese car imports, including the issue of import restraints. Ministers will also need to discuss the implications of the finding of the GATT panel on the dispute between EC and United States over the EC oilseeds regime. They may also reach agreement on POSEIDOM (special programme for French overseas departments).

The Internal Market Council on 21 and 22 December will discuss a number of measures relevant to the completion of the single market.

Partial Test Ban Treaty

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) how many preparatory committee meetings are planned by the depository states for the partial test ban treaty amendment conference; and what decisions have been taken by the first committee of the United Nations on the amendment conference;

(2) if he will make a statement on current progress in arrangements for the planned amendment conference for the 1963 partial test ban treaty; how the amendment conference will be funded; what states have been invited, and by whom, to the conference; and what administrative facilities will be provided by the United Nations in support of the amendment conference.

Mr. Waldegrave: On 2 November the depositary Governments of the partial test ban treaty announced that they had arranged to convene the amendment conference on 8 January 1991 for a period of up to two weeks. They subsequently issued invitations to all states parties to the treaty. Although not a United Nations conference, the amendment conference is expected to be held on United Nations premises, and using United Nations facilities. No decisions have yet been reached by the participating states parties on funding the conference. On 17 November the first committee of the United Nations General Assembly adopted by majority vote a resolution recommending a preparatory commitee in May 1990 followed by a session of the amendment conference, with a second substantive session in January 1991.

Missile Technology Control Regime

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has had any discussions with representatives of the United States Government regarding tightening of the missile technology control regime; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Western Isles (Mr. Macdonald) on 6 November. The United Kingdom will act as host for a meeting of the partners in the missile technology control regime in London on 5-6 December.

Gibraltar

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has received any representations from the Gibraltar Government regarding the colony's direct participation in elections for the European Parliament.

Mr. Maude: None.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 28 November, whether the Gibraltar Government assumed responsibility for the maintenance of the Governor's residence gardens by agreement with the United Kingdom Government.

Mr. Maude: Yes.

St. Helena

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of the last elections to be held on St. Helena and list the number of contested seats, the number of votes cast and the percentage turn-out in each case.

Mr. Maude: The most recent general election in St. Helena was held on 10 May 1989. Twelve councillors were elected from eight constituencies. The number of votes cast in each constituency was as follows:

	Number
Jamestown	823
St. Paul's	669
Longwood	447
Half Tree Hollow	431
Blue Hill	123
Levelwood	76
Alarm Forest	157
Sandy Bay[1]	—

[1] Candidate elected unopposed.

The overall percentage turn-out was 72 per cent.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the gross national product per capita for St. Helena for the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Maude: It is not possible to enumerate these statistics because no system of national accounting as yet exists in St. Helena. However, such a system is now being developed.

Airport Agreement

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will seek to re-negotiate the 1987 airport agreement for Gibraltar with Spain in order to take account of the views of the Gibraltar Government.

Mr. Maude: We believe that the agreement set out in the 2 December 1987 joint declaration represents a good deal for Gibraltar. We do not see that any useful purpose would be served by attempting to re-open negotiations on the text of that joint declaration.

Islamabad High Commission

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will instruct the migration and visa correspondence unit to supply to the hon. Member for Caithness and Sutherland the Islamabad High Commission reference number requested by the hon. Member by telephone on Monday 27 November.

Mr. Maude: The information requested was supplied to the hon. Member's office by telephone on 30 November 1989.

El Salvador

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how may officers of the armed forces of El Salvador have been trained at United Kingdom military academies and training establishments in each of the past five years.

Mr. Maude: One cadet attended RMA Sandhurst from May 1986 to August 1987.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much military aid Britain provides to the Government of El Salvador.

Mr. Maude: None.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will discuss with his European Community counterparts a ban on all military aid and advice to the Government of President Cristiani, in El Salvador until death squad activity has ceased.

Mr. Maude: No.

Cambodia

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement concerning the plea of Prince Norodom Sihanouk, head of the Khmer Coalition Government of Kampuchea, that the country be placed under United Nations trusteeship.

Mr. Waldegrave: We welcome all constructive proposals for restoring peace and stability to Cambodia, including the Australian proposal, now supported by Prince Sihanouk, for an interim authority under United Nations control.

ENERGY

Wind Energy

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will be presenting a paper to the European Community wind energy conference in Madrid before the deadline in January 1990.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My Department, in association with its energy technology support unit, will be submitting a paper and subsequently presenting it to the Madrid wind energy conference.

Electricity Industry

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has on the contract between NORWEB and Lakeland Power.

Mr. Wakeham: The terms of the electricity purchase contract between NORWEB and Lakeland Power are a commercial matter for the parties concerned.

Energy Conservation

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has on the current level of sales of energy conservation equipment and the comparable figures for 1988; and what is his policy on the stimulation of the market for energy efficiency goods and services.

Mr. Peter Morrison: [holding answer 30 November 1989]: An important task of the energy efficiency office is to bring together in a variety of ways the energy efficiency industry and its potential customers.

Our regional energy efficiency officers sponsor seminars and meetings, and co-operate with trade association such as the Energy Systems Trade Association and the Association for the Conservation of Energy to promote the use of energy efficient equipment. Our technology support units similarly promote particular energy efficient techniques and equipment, under the best practice programme. I myself regularly speak at conferences, as indeed I did at national energy managers exhibition at Birmingham on November 21, to stimulate and challenge the market for energy efficiency.

On Wednesday 29 November, I similarly spoke in Cambridge at a conference entitled "The Greenhouse Effect and Energy Conservation". On 1 November I spoke on the occasion of Northern Electric's PEP and BETA awards, on 11 October at MANWEB's PEP and BETA awards and on 26 September at South Eastern Electricity's BETA awards; on each occasion taking particular pains to challenge managers to purchase and use more energy efficient equipment.

On sales figures, I understand that sales of building energy management systems have increased by about 10 per cent. on 1988 figures to an estimated £89 million in 1989. Information on other types of energy efficiency equipment such as Combined Heat and Power (CHP) plant is not readily available, although the CHP industry has claimed "greatly increased interest and sales" in 1989. The Building Energy Efficiency Confederation inform me that in line with the general market for domestic goods, sales of different types of domestic insulation and heating control equipment are down by 6 per cent. and 20 per cent. in 1989 compared with 1988.

THE ARTS

Museums

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received about the London museums education unit's new initiative for education in the capital; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: My Office has received details of the London Museums Education Unit's initiative for education in the capital. Officials have met members of the unit to discuss the proposals and are currently considering further information which has been received.

PRIME MINISTER

French President

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to meet the French President.

The Prime Minister: My next meeting with President Mitterrand will be at the NATO Heads of Government meeting in Brussels on 4 December.

Salary

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister what is (a) her official salary entitlement as Prime Minister and (b) the official salary she draws as Prime Minister; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: My salary entitlement, as Prime Minister, payable under the Ministerial and other Salaries Order 1988, is £46,109. However, I choose to accept the same salary as a Cabinet Minister in the House of Commons, namely £34,479.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Bills

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Lord President of the Council what considerations underlie a decision on which House of Parliament a Government Bill is to be introduced into; and how these considerations were applied in the case of the Food Bill.

Sir Geoffrey Howe [holding answer 28 November 1989]: Various considerations may underlie the decision, including the need to balance the weight of business before the two Houses. I do not propose to go into the detailed factors in a particular case.

ENVIRONMENT

Public Sector Pay

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what pay awards in the public sector he has approved in the current year.

Mr. Chris Patten: The pay of chairmen and board members of non-departmental public bodies and nationalised industries sponsored by my Department and of the staff of such controlled non-departmental public bodies requires my approval.

I have approved pay increases for the chairmen and board members of non-departmental public bodies in line with the Government's decisions on the 28th report of the Top Salaries Review Body. I have also approved pay increases for the chairman and board members of the British Waterways Board and for the chairmen and the board members sponsored by my Department of the former English regional water authorities.

In practice the pay of most of the staff of sponsored NDPBs is linked to public sector pay negotiated nationally. The application of national settlements to staff of the bodies in the following lists has been approved as they arose during the year. In addition I have approved pay increases for the junior staff of new town development corporations (negotiated in the Whitley Council for new town staff in line with the local authority 'white collar' settlement), for the wardens and deerstalker of the Nature Conservancy Council and a new package of pay and terms and conditions of service for the industrial staff of the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission, constrained by the overall increase in the pay bill for similar staff in the Civil Service.

Civil Service Pay Links

British Board of Agrement
Countryside Commission
Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission for England (English Heritage)—(non-industrial staff)
Housing Corporation (Senior Staff)
National Heritage Memorial Fund
Nature Conservancy Council (except as noted above)
New Town Development Corporations (Senior Staff)
Rent Officers
Royal Armouries
Royal Commission on Historical Monuments (England)
Royal Fine Art Commission
Rural Development Commission

Sports Council (non-industrial staff)
Local Government Pay Links
Merseyside Development Corporation
Sports Council (industrial staff)
New Town Development Corporations (manual and craft workers)
Valuation & Community Charge Tribunals
New Town Pay Links
Housing Corporation (junior staff)

As regards the urban development corporations, other than the Merseyside Development Corporation, and the National Rivers Authority, I have approved the pay levels of senior staff and the overall increases in the pay bill for the rest of the staff by reference to the levels of public sector settlements generally.

Rating Reform

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what provision he has made to protect tenants from landlords who do not remove the rate element from their rent following the introduction of the community charge; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what guidelines his Department issued to landlords on adjusting rents following the introduction of the community charge.

Mr. Chope: Where a fair rent is registered a landlord will not, after 1 April 1990, be able to recover an amount for rates in addition to that fair rent. Where no fair rent is registered landlords will not be able to demand from tenants any sum specifically included in rents as payable towards the domestic rates of the landlord. Since this is already the legal position further special provision is not necessary, nor would it be workable. The Department will shortly be issuing a leaflet for both landlords and tenants explaining the position.

Housing Capital Investment

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list at 1988-89 prices local authorities housing capital investment on (a) new building, (b) renovation of local authority dwellings, (c) renovation grants, (d) lending to housing associations and (e) other housing capital programmes, in (1) inner London, (2) outer London, (3) metropolitan areas, (4) the south-east outside London, (5) other non-metropolitan areas and (6) England as a whole for (i) 1980-81, (ii) 1982-83, (iii) 1984-85, (iv) 1986-87 and (v) 1988-89.

Mr. Chope: I have today placed tables giving the relevant information in the Library. 1988-89 data have not yet been fully analysed.

Energy Savings (Palace of Westminster)

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what potential energy savings at the Palace of Westminster were indicated in the feasibility study commissioned by his Department; what was the recommended required investment; what was the indicated payback period; when he proposes to undertake the investment; and if he will release the study to the Library.

Mr. Chope: An energy audit of the Palace of Westminster was commissioned by the Parliamentary Works Office in 1988 as part of the normal process of ensuring that its planned programme for the care and maintenance of the Palace takes proper account of needs and priorities.

The report contain 130 recommendations. It identified the scope for savings of £217,000 pa. In the nine months since the report was received work has been completed which will achieve savings of over £70,000 pa. Further work is dependent on other developments, particularly the upgrading of the power supply. £0·6 million has been spent on this work in the current year and further major work will be carried out next year.

In other cases major design work and or capital expenditure would be required to implement the recommendations. The saving from these, in aggregate, would be less than £50,000 pa for an investment of over £300,000 with pay-back periods mainly greater than four years. The timing of these schemes will be considered with the appropriate House Committees against other demands for the capital works programme.

Tenants Rights

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider amending the current legislation to provide statutory protection of the tenant's right to renewal of a lease after application has been made to the court in order to avoid the present need to register an application on a land charge.

Mr. Chope: No. Legislation already exists covering this area. No changes are necessary.

Community Charge (Prisoners)

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether guidance will be issued to local authorities on the amount of community charge to be levied on prisoners who lived alone before entering prison.

Mr. Chope: Charging authorities have discretion to specify classes of property for the purposes of the standard charge. In doing so they may have regard to a number of factors, including the circumstances of the person subject to the charge. If they wish, they may therefore specify a class of property to include property unoccupied because the owner is in prison. Guidance explaining this has been sent to charging authorities, but it is for individual authorities to decide whether to specify such a class, and, if they do, what rate of standard charge to levy.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much in cash terms has been paid to (a) Langbaurgh, (b) Stockton and (c) Middlesbrough councils by way of central Government grants to support rates income in each of the past five years.

Mr. Chope: The information is as follows:

Central Government grants[1]

£ million

	Langbaurgh	Stockton	Middlesbrough
1984-85	6·4	6·9	14·0
1985-86	6·9	6·0	14·7
1986-87	7·9	6·7	16·3
1987-88	6·1	6·9	16·3
1988-89	5·8	6·5	19·0

[1] Rate Support Grant and specific grants paid to authorities' Rate Fund Revenue Accounts.

Cleveland County Council

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to regulate the spending of Cleveland county council.

Mr. Chope: Decisions about spending are for each local authority but if any authority insists on excessive spending plans we shall consider using our powers to cap.

Common Land

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to introduce legislation for the protection of common land; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 27 November 1989 to my hon. Friend the Member for Harborough (Sir J. Farr) at column 89.

World Student Games

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what support the Government are giving to the next World Student Games to be held in Sheffield.

Mr. Moynihan: £9·5 million has been provided for games-related projects in the form of urban programme funding, derelict land grant and city grant. In addition the Sports Council has set aside £3 million in its spending programme over the next three years to go towards the revenue costs of the games.

Greenham Common

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether those people encamped outside the air base of Greenham common will be liable for the community charge.

Mr. Chope: All adults unless exempt are liable to pay the personal community charge to the local council in whose area they are mainly resident. Persons may be exempt if they have no fixed abode. It is for the community charges registration officer of Newbury district council to determine whether some residents near Greenham common are permanently there, have another main residence elsewhere, or are genuinely of no fixed abode.

House Prices

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the increase in house prices in France, West Germany, Italy and the United Kingdom since 1979 to the latest available date.

Mr. Chope: Based on the building societies quarterly mix-adjusted index house prices in the United Kingdom increased by 247 per cent. between the third quarter of 1979 and the third quarter of 1989.

My Department does not have comparable information for the other countries listed.

Homelessness

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how the sum of £250 million, recently allocated by his Department to tackle homelessness, will be distributed to provide accommodation for the households accepted as homeless by local authorities.

Mr. Chope: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment announced on 15 November, over the next two years we are making an extra £177 million available to local authorities, and an extra £73 million to the Housing Corporation (for distribution to housing associations), for homelessness projects in the "pressure areas" of London and the south-east. The aim is to secure extra lettings for homeless families currently in bed and breakfast accommodation. We have invited bids from local authorities in London and the south-east. Similarly, the Housing Corporation has invited bids from housing associations.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a further statement on his plans to reduce homelessness.

Mr. Howard: On 15 November my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced a substantial package of measures to relieve and reduce homelessness, following our thorough review of the legislation. Since then, I have invited bids from local authorities in the pressure areas of London and the south-east for projects under the £250 million of extra resources available (and the Housing Corporation has invited bids from housing associations). I have announced that councils will be able to continue existing leasing schemes for a further period of three years, without affecting their capital allocations, to ensure that homeless families are not returned to bed and breakfast accommodations; and I have visited various voluntary organisations to discuss the enhanced role we would like them to play, with increased Government funding.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will take steps to make housing benefit a landlord function for private tenants in the same manner as responsibility of local authorities for their tenants.

Mr. Chope: No.

Environmental Policy

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to delay any decision to merge the Nature Conservancy Council with the Countryside Commission until he has presented the Government's white paper on environmental policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The Government have no plans to delay the reorganisation of the conservation agencies announced in July. Postponement would increase uncertainty among the staff of the existing agencies, and would not be in the interests of conservation.

Nature Conservancy Council

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many Nature Conservancy Council staff will be available per site of special scientific interest, to monitor, control and protect these sites in England, Scotland and Wales and how many personnel are employed in the field per hectare of existing site of special scientific interest.

Mr. Trippier: The NCC has estimated that the equivalent of the following numbers of staff (both permanent and non-permanent) are currently available per SSSI to monitor, control and protect such sites:

	Equivalent persons
England	0·045
Scotland	0·069
Wales	0·043

The equivalent of 0·0003 persons (including permanent and non-permanent staff) per hectare of existing SSSI are currently employed in the field by NCC's three country directorates.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he has any information on further plans affecting Selby common site of special scientific interest;

(2) if he has received representations about the damage caused by agricultural operations to Sherburn Willows site of special scientific interest, near Selby; and what action he proposes to take to assist the restoration of this site;

(3) what action he will take to preserve remaining habitat of importance to rare aquatic flora at Hatfield Chase, near Doncaster;

(4) what action he is taking to safeguard Hollywell wood, near Castleford;

(5) if he will take steps to prevent felling of ancient woodland at Bog wood, Thorp Underwood, north Yorkshire and of the resulting loss of a heronry in this location; and what action he will take to prevent such habitat loss in the future;

(6) what action he is taking to preserve habitat at Cawood meadows:

(7) what action he is taking to protect the Wressel-Breighton hedgerow within the Derwent Ings site of special scientific interest, SPA and Ramsar site;

(8) what action he will take to protect North Ferriby Ings, Humberside, from further destruction; and if he will ensure that surviving species and habitat are properly managed and protected;

(9) what action he will take to safeguard Snaith and Cowick moors, near Goole in Humberside from peat digging;

(10) what representations he has received regarding the effect of the infilling at Great Heck quarry, near Selby, on an albino form of the rosebay willowherb;

(11) what representations he received following operations at Shepherds wood, Allerton Mauleverer, north Yorkshire, concerning loss of habitat to the herb Paris;

(12) what steps he will take to monitor pollution threats and the laying of electricity cables at Maltby Low Common site of special scientific interest;

(13) what urgent action he will take to preserve the Hatfield Moors site, near Doncaster.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as the Nature Conservancy Council has assembled the information requested.

Wildlife Sites

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will undertake an immediate national audit of remaining prime sites for wildlife.

Mr. Trippier: My Department is considering the scope and methodology of a national survey aimed at improving our knowledge of the natural heritage. The Government's scientific advisors, the NCC, is planning a complementary exercise on a census of wildlife. The Government hope that these works will contribute to the White Paper on the Environment which we intend to publish in 1990.

Habitat Census

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what action has been taken to implement phase 2 of the Nature Conservancy Council, field by field habitat census/survey;

(2) what is the annual budget allocated to (a) phase 1 and (b) phase 2 of the Nature Conservancy Council field by field habitat census/survey, from 1979 to the last year in which figures are available;

(3) what is the percentage area of each individual county within England, Scotland, and Wales which has been covered by phase 2 of the Nature Conservancy Council field by field habitat census/survey;

(4) what is the percentage area of each individual county within England, Scotland and Wales which has been covered by phase 1 of the Nature Conservancy Council field by field habitat census/survey;

(5) what is the proportion of (a) England, (b) Wales and (c) Scotland covered by phase 1 of the Nature Conservancy Council field by field habitat census/survey;

(6) what is the proportion of (a) England, (b) Wales and (c) Scotland, covered by phase 2 of the Nature Conservancy Council field by field habitat census/survey;

(7) what progress has been made with the Nature Conservancy Council phase 1, field by field survey.

Mr. Trippier: I will write to the hon. Member.

Environmental Consultation

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultation took place with voluntary environmental agencies, prior to the decision to merge the Nature Conservancy Council and the Countryside Commission in Scotland and Wales.

Mr. Trippier: Proposals to reorganise the Nature Conservancy Council and the Countryside Commission were announced in July following a thorough internal review by the Government. These have since been the subject of detailed discussions both with the existing conservation agencies and with voluntary bodies and individuals. The Government will be taking account of these discussions in framing legislation, which will then be debated and decided in Parliament.

Footpaths

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much the Government have spent in footpath renovation and upkeep during the past five years; and what future action he intends to take to tackle this problem.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The maintenance of highways, including footpaths and bridleways, is the responsibility of the highway authority. The allocation of resources between their various statutory responsibilities is a matter for the authorities themselves to determine. However, the Countryside Commission has been seeking, with some success, to raise the profile of rights of way work, and to encourage the better management of these recreational assets. The Government have strongly supported its initiative.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has met representatives of the Countryside Commission to discuss the quality of footpaths.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State met Sir Derek Barber, Chairman of the Countryside Commission on 26 September when a number of issues were discussed. My hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside visited the Commission's offices on 4 October for a presentation on various aspects of its work.

National Parks

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he plans to introduce legislation to offer extra protection to the landscapes of national parks.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We see no need for further legislation about this subject at present.

Capital Receipts

Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in detail what the new rules governing councils' expenditure from capital receipts will be from 1 April 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Section 59 of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 provides that any capital receipt realised by a local authority on or after 1 April 1990, other than a receipt received by them as trustee of a charitable fund, must be divided into a reserved part, which must be set aside as provision for credit liabilities, and a usable balance which the authority may apply to expenditure for capital purposes or as voluntary provision for credit liabilities. The usable balance of capital receipts may be applied in the financial year in which they are received or later, at the authority's discretion. Expenditure for capital purposes is defined in section 40 of the 1989 Act. The reserved part is calculated by reference to the amount of the receipt reduced by the amounts (if any) which out of the receipt are paid to the Exchequer by way of clawback of Exchequer grant or assistance or (in the case of certain receipts from housing disposals) are applied to meet the administrative costs of disposal. Except insofar as is otherwise provided by regulations made by the Secretary of State or, in cases where receipts arise from disposals which required his consent, by directions given by him, the amount of the reserved part is a percentage of the amount of the receipt thus reduced. The percentage specified in the Act is 75 per cent. in the case of disposals of dwelling-houses held for the purposes of Part II of the Housing Act 1985 and 50 per cent. in other cases. It has already been announced that it is the intention to make regulations which would provide for a percentage of 75 per cent. for receipts from the disposal of share and loan capital (other than certain holdings in public transport and airport companies) and from disposals of property held in connection with the police, probation, magistrates courts, and civil defence services. My Department is currently consulting the local authority associations on proposals for regulations which would (a) specify percentages other than 50 per cent. for certain other categories of receipts, (b) provide that in certain cases the reserved part would be calculated by references to the authority's net receipt rather than the gross amount realised, and (c) specify a percentage of 0 per cent. for most receipts realised by authorities who had paid off all their captial borrowings and had made full provision for their other credit liabilities.

A credit received by a local authority as trustee of a charitable trust fund must be applied in accordance with any directions given by the Charity Commissioners or, in the absence of such directions, for the purposes of the charity concerned.

Tin Compounds

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment at what date tributyltin and organotin compounds were added to his Department's red list; and from what external sources advice or evidence was received on this decision.

Mr. Trippier: Tributyltin and tryphenyltin compounds were included on the initial red list of priority substances liable to pose a threat to the aquatic environment, which was announced on 10 April 1989 following the issue of a consultation paper. There were, in total, 80 responses to the consultation exercise, of which seven specially commented on the inclusion of these substances on the list. Copies of these responses were placed in the Library of the House on 10 April, with the exception of one respondent who asked for their comments to be treated in confidence.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research has been completed or is in process on the toxicity of tributyltin and organotin compounds.

Mr. Trippier: Much of the research which led to the existing controls on triorganotins is referred to in DOE pollution paper 25 (Organotin in anti-fouling paints: environmental considerations). This was published in 1986 and a copy has already been placed in the Library of the House. Twenty seven scientific papers and reports produced subsequently under DOE funding are listed in the DOE report on research and development 1986-1988.

Current research funded by the Department of the Environment at the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food Burnham laboratory and at the Plymouth marine laboratory is mainly concerned with monitoring recovery since the ban imposed in 1987 and assessing the implications of tributyltin use on vessels over 25 metres.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he proposes to commission an environment impact statement on the use of tributyltin or organotin compounds in anti-fouling paints and on alternative anti-fouling systems.

Mr. Trippier: No. All antifouling preparations have to be notified under the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986. Approvals are granted or withheld following an assessment of possible impact on human health and the environment. Tributyltin compounds have not been approved for use on small boats or in fish farming; other uses are being kept under review by the Advisory Committee on Pesticides.

Tenants Incentive Scheme

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about the introduction of the tenants incentive scheme for the tenants of charitable housing associations.

Mr. Chope: The tenants incentive scheme will be introduced by the Housing Corporation in 1990-91. It will enable registered housing associations, including charitable housing associations, to give cash grants to help their tenants buy homes of their own.

In addition to the major increase in resources being made available for the Housing Corporation's main programme, the Government are making available through the corporation an extra £73 million over the next two years to help housing associations provide more homes for homeless people by various means including securing vacancies by giving additional grants under the tenants incentive scheme. These extra resources will be targeted on London and the south-east where homelessness pressures are greatest.

Endangered Species

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will increase resources to allow the designation of special sites to be undertaken more speedily and effectively;

(2) if he will make resources available to identify species decline in the British Isles; and if he will strengthen legislation protecting endangered species habitat.

Mr. Trippier: The Government's grant-in-aid to the Nature Conservancy Council in the financial year 1990-91 will be £44·069 million, an increase over this year of almost £4 million. The council has indicated that this amount will allow it to carry forward its statutory work and to deliver additional benefits for nature conservation. Within the framework of the corporate plan, it is for the council to decide the priorities of the calls on its resources, and site safeguard is regarded as being of the highest priority. The Government have no plans to amend the legislative provisions for protecting the habitats of endangered species.

Countryside Work Force

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he will take to create a countryside work force, to monitor, identify, protect and manage environmentally important sites; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: A large number of organisations are active in various aspects of the environmental protection and enhancement work to which the hon. Member refers, including particularly the Government's statutory agencies, the Nature Conservancy Council and the Countryside Commission, the Groundwork Trusts and numerous voluntary conservation bodies, many of which receive financial assistance from public funds.

Overspent Targets (Shires)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those shire counties in England which overspent the targets or other assessments set by Government in each of the last two years for which figures are available, with the amount of overspending and the proportion this formed of the total spending in each case.

Mr. Chope: The information requested is as follows:

Shire counties' spending compared to grant related expenditure assessments

Habitats Directive

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will support a European Community habitats directive, providing protection for special features of value to wildlife.

Mr. Trippier: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to my hon. Friend the Member for Luton, South (Mr. Bright) on 30 November at column 370.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement following the Council of Environmental Ministers on 28 and 29 November concerning discussions held on the proposed European Community habitats directive; and if he will indicate what funding will be made available to enable the effective implementation of the directive in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Chris Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Luton, South (Mr. Bright) on 30 November at column 370.

Registered Funding Co-operatives

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give urgent consideration to exempting registered funding co-operatives from the requirements set out in his Department's circular 31/88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Housing Corporation circular HC31/88 sets out the financial viability tests the corporation applies where registered housing associations seek consent for private loans. The criteria in the circular are of a general nature and the corporation is prepared to relax them in appropriate circumstances.

Water Shares

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to ensure that service personnel who own, but are unable to be resident at a United Kingdom home, are in no way disadvantaged in obtaining access to special terms offered by water authorities for the purchase of shares by their customers.

Mr. Howard: It was open to absent servicemen qualifying as customers under the terms of the water share offers to make arrangements to be registered with the Water Share Information Office by the last date for registration of 15 November, and to make arrangements for their personalised customer application forms to be completed and returned by representatives in the United Kingdom before the closing date and time which is 10 am on 6 December. No applications may, however, be made which are in breach of the local securities laws of the country in which they are serving.

Litter

200. Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what legislative proposals he intends to introduce to reduce litter.

Mr. Trippier: The proposals we intend to introduce in the forthcoming environment Bill, to improve the appearance and standards of cleanliness of public places were published in a consultation paper 'Action on Litter', a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

These proposals include a new duty on local authorities, statutory undertakers and owners of some other land to keep their land clear of litter. In carrying out this duty, these bodies will have to have regard to a code of practice issued by my right hon. Friend. If they fail to carry out the duty, an aggrieved person will be able to apply to the magistrates court for a litter abatement order compelling them to do so. We will also bring in tougher penalties for litterers: we intend to raise the maximum fine for littering from £400 to £1,000; and give local authorities powers to introduce a fixed penalty scheme for litter offences, similar to that already operating in Westminster.

Dust Emission Limits

201. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to place individual SO_2 and dust emission limits on large industrial plants.

Mr. Trippier: Large industrial plants which have the potential for significant emissions of SO_2 and dust are subject to control by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution. Operators of these plants are required to fit such equipment and to operate in such a way as to minimise air pollution and its effects. The specification of the requirements may include emission limits. Under proposed changes to air pollution legislation to be introduced this Session, control requirements, including any relevant emission limits, will be set in legally binding authorisations which will be open to public inspection. I have written to my hon. Friend about the control of dust and SO_2 emissions from the Fiddlers Ferry power station, which is among the plants covered by proposals in the Department's recent consultation paper on implementation of the EC large combustion plants directive.

Poll Tax Publicity

295. Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish details of his planned poll tax publicity campaign showing (a) the cost of television advertising, (b) the cost of newspaper advertising, (c) the cost of radio advertising and (d) the planned start and end dates of the campaign; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: We are not planning a poll tax publicity campaign. We are, however, preparing an information campaign to ensure that those eligible are aware of entitlement to community charge benefit and transitional relief.

Local Government Finance

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the 10 highest annual rate increases reported among English local authorities since 1983, giving the year of increase, the amount and the appropriate local authority.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 29 November 1989]: The information requested is as follows:

General rates—Highest annual increases since 1983-84

	Year of increase	Percentage of increase	Poundages in pence from	to
1. Ealing	1987-88	57·4	160·5	252·5
2. Waltham Forest	1987-88	56·6	205·0	321·0

10. South Lakeland	1986-87	33·2	192·9	256·8

Docklands

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total projected cost of transport, environmental and infrastructure improvements financed by the Exchequer and designed to serve London Docklands between 1985 and 1995; and if he will itemise all such improvements.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 30 November 1989]: Past expenditure, current commitments and proposals by the London Docklands Development Corporation (LDDC) and the Department of Transport (DTp) on transport, environmental and infrastructure improvements to serve docklands exceed £2 billion. A full list of all such schemes is not available, but transport projects by DTp and LDDC are summarised in DTp's publication "Transport in Docklands" (June 1989), copies of which are in the Library.

Water Companies

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his answer of 27 November to the hon. Member for Copeland, Official Report, column 86, he will list the individuals serving on each water holding company trust scheme.

Mr. Chris Patten [holding answer Thursday 30 November 1989]: The Companies Act 1985 requires the filing of names and addresses of directors at Companies House and for these to be made available to the public on request.

Child Care Facilities

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will be introducing any new measures to assist or encourage local authorities to provide additional child care facilities in order to enable more women with pre-school age children to seek employment.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I have been asked to reply.

It is for local authorities to decide what priority they give to provision of services for pre-school children. We would expect local authority provision to be targeted on children from families with particular health or social difficulties rather than specifically designed to enable mothers to seek employment. Under the Children Act local authorities will be expected to review the availability of services and to publish information not only about what they provide themselves but also the provision of others and in particular voluntary organisations who make a valuable contribution in this area. The Department of Education and Science wrote in October to encourage local education authorities to allow the use of school premises for child care provision out of school hours.

WALES

A487 (Tourist Signposting)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when his Department received a letter from Inigo Jones and Co. Ltd., Groeslon, Caernarfon, dated 17 August, concerning information signposting for tourists on the A487 trunk road; on what date a reply was sent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The letter from Inigo Jones and Co. Ltd., dated 17 August and addressed to the county surveyor of Gwynedd was received in the Welsh Office on 18 September. A full reply was sent to the company on 30 November. This set out the criteria used in considering the signing of tourist attractions from trunk roads in Wales.

Rates

Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for each charging authority area, attributing business rate income received by precepting authorities under the current system to each area in proportion to the aggregate of rateable values in that area (a) the estimated revenue from non-domestic rates in 1989-90, (b) the estimated amount which would have been raised in revenue by the national non-domestic rate in 1989-90 after the end of transitional arrangements and assuming rateable values at current levels, (c) the amount which would have been paid from the national non-domestic rating pool to each area in 1989-90, (d) the difference between (a) and (b), (e) the difference between (b) and (c), and (f) the difference between (a) and (c), showing aggregates for each figure for each class of charging authority.

Mr. Peter Walker: The estimates requested are shown in the following table:

Charging authority	(a) Revenue from non-domestic rates £ million	(b) Amount to each district/area from national non-domestic rate £ million	(c) Amount from national non-domestic rating pool[1] £ million	(d) Difference (a)−(b) £ million	(e) Difference (b)−(c) £ million	(f) Difference (a)−(c) £ million

Craft Industry

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will publish the full cost of the review of the Welsh craft industry that took place in February 1988;

(2) if he will publish the full costs of the design and development fees for the "Wales—Land of Quality" promotion and logo;

(3) what information he has on the current position of the finances and on the number of jobs created by the craft incentive of the Welsh Arts Council which began on 1 April 1988;

(4) what information he has on the figures on the current expenditure on and value of sales achieved by the Welsh Craft Council's (a) Buyers' Guide 1988-89, (b) Wales fair, October 1988 and (c) direct sales events;

(5) what information he has on the full expenditure on, and income received from, the Welsh Development Agency's (a) publication of the Buyers' Guide 1989 and the South Wales Business Adviser, (b) research and promotion of retail sales, (c) craft shops in museums and (d) grant to Wales Craft Council.

Mr. Peter Walker: I will write to the hon. Gentleman and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House.

Hospital Beds

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the numbers of hospital beds available in Ceredigion for geriatric cases; how many patients there are on the waiting list; and what steps he is taking to increase the number of beds in the area.

Mr. Grist: 106 NHS hospital beds are currently designated for geriatric medicine in Ceredigion. At 31 March 1989 there was one person on the in-patient waiting list for admission to those beds.

The planning of bed numbers for particular specialties is an operational matter for the relevant district health authority in the first instance.

Trunk Roads (Traffic Flow)

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the total traffic flow on the Cardigan to Machynlleth trunk road and the A44 Aberystwyth to Ponterwyd road; and what proportion of this traffic is heavy goods vehicles.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: In 1988, the annual average daily traffic flows on the A487 between Cardigan and Machynlleth ranged from about 3,000 vehicles per day on stretches between Cardigan and the outskirts of Aberystwyth to up to 11,000 vehicles per day through Aberystwyth itself. The heavy goods vehicle content ranged between about 2 per cent. and 8 per cent.

Annual average daily traffic flows on the A44 between Aberystwyth and Ponterwyd, in 1988 ranged from 2,500 vehicles per day between Ponterwyd and the A4159 junction to almost 8,000 vehicles per day at Llanbadarn with a heavy goods vehicle content of between 7 per cent. and 10 per cent.

Welsh Language Teaching

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average number of hours spent teaching Welsh in schools in Wales in (a) primary and (b) secondary sectors; and if he will give a county by county breakdown.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The latest information about the time spent on teaching Welsh is derived from the primary school staffing survey 1987. The information is shown in the following table:

Percentage of class time spent learning Welsh

	Percentage
Clwyd	9
Dyfed	14
Gwent	[1]
Gwynedd	19
Mid Glamorgan	n/a
Powys	9
South Glamorgan	3
West Glamorgan	5
Wales	[2]8

[1] Less than 1.

[2] Includes an estimate for Mid Glamorgan.

No comparable information is currently available for secondary schools. The results of the recent secondary schools staffing survey will be published during 1990.

East Glamorgan Hospital

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether funds have been allocated to the Mid Glamorgan health authority sufficient to ensure an immediate start to the repair programme to the fabric of East Glamorgan general hospital.

Mr. Grist: Mid Glamorgan health authority has received revenue allocation of £149 million and a capital allocation of over £7 million in the current financial year. These allocations represent cash increases by comparison with 1988-89 provision of 7 per cent. and 27 per cent. respectively. It is for the authority to determine how these resources should be deployed.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether funds have been allocated to the Mid Glamorgan health authority sufficient to ensure a speedy start to the construction of a replacement district general hospital for the existing East Glamorgan general hospital.

Mr. Grist: It is for Mid Glamorgan health authority to decide how best to deploy the capital and revenue resources allocated to it. We are, however, currently considering a number of bids under the programme for the valleys for health schemes starting in 1990-91, including a bid from Mid Glamorgan health authority in respect of preliminary works associated with the proposed new district general hospital. We shall announce decisions on the programme early in the new year.

Water Pollution

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many reservoirs and lakes in Wales have been affected by poisonous algal blooms during 1989; how much dredging has taken place to get rid of such blooms; and what action he will take to ensure that algal blooms are effectively eliminated in future.

Mr. Grist: Monitoring carried out during 1989 revealed no significant algal blooms in Welsh reservoirs and therefore no dredging has been carried out. It is for the National Rivers Authority, in conjunction with Dwr Cymru, to consider what future action may be necessary in areas potentially affected by algal blooms.

Deprivation Survey

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he intends publishing his Department's survey of 100 towns facing deprivation in Wales; and if he will include information on how the survey was conducted and the action he is taking in reaction to the survey's findings.

Mr. Peter Walker: I assume the hon. Gentleman is referring to some work undertaken by my Department to devise a mechanism for the distribution of one of the new allowances payable to general medical practitioners under the new GP contract to take effect on 1 April 1990. The work was undertaken for this specific purpose and is not considered to have any wider application. Discussions continue with representatives of GPs.

Wrexham Maelor Hospital

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has yet received a new submission from the Clwyd health authority for the funding of renal services at Wrexham Maelor hospital.

Mr. Grist: We understand that the health authority is presently preparing its submission in respect of a regional subsidiary renal unit in the context of its response to consultation on the report of the evaluation of renal services in Wales.

Cancer

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what investigations he will institute to consider the rates for cancer in North Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, what measures he will take to investigate (a) the rate of stomach cancer in North Wales, (b) breast cancer rates in Merioneth, Aberconway, Rhondda and Colwyn, (c) rates of cancer of the cervix in Clwyd and Anglesey and (d) incidences of leukaemia in women in Colwyn, Merioneth and Wales generally; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: It has been known for some time that there was a slight elevation of cancer incidence rates for north Wales in comparison with the average for Wales as a whole. In order to establish if any particular factor could be held responsible it was announced in 1987 that Professor Hubert Campbell, Emeritus Professor of Medical Statistics of the University of Wales, College of Medicine had been appointed to consider the available data relating to the incidence of cancers in north Wales since 1974.

Professor Campbell's report was published in July 1988. In introducing his findings Professor Campbell emphasised there was nothing new in the elevation of cancer incidence rates in north Wales; records demonstrate this situation has existed for at least 70 years and it would not be possible to identify any aetiological agent as being responsible. It was however suggested that some further investigation might be undertaken into the question of whether some genetic factor might play a contributory role in the excess of leukemia registration identified in the report and also into the possible reasons for an excess in thyroid cancer registration in women over the age of 25 between 1974 amd 1978.

The feasibility and potential value of such further investigation is being considered in conjunction with the small areas health statistics unit.

The Wales Cancer Registry records incidence rates for all types of cancer and detailed summaries are published periodically. The third report "Cancer Registration Wales 1974-84" was published in May 1988.

It must be appreciated in considering such reports that at district level or below the number of annual registrations for certain types of malignancy can be very small. As such, considerable care must be exercised in the interpretation of the derived incidence rates.

Domestic Rates Bills

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many households in the area of the Merthyr borough council are paying an annual rates bill of less than £350;

(2) how many households in the communities of Rhymney, Brithdir, Tydfil and New Tredegar are at present paying an annual rates bill of less than £350.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information requested is not available centrally.

Sheltered Accommodation

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report the number of sheltered schemes for the elderly, units in those sheltered schemes and other purpose-built dwellings for the elderly operated by (a) local authorities and (b) housing associations.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 30 November 1989]: In April 1989 there were 16,219 Local Authority sheltered dwellings and 23,111 other local authority dwellings designed for the elderly. Housing association data held centrally do not distinguish between sheltered and other purpose-built dwellings, and are not yet available for April 1989. However, in April 1988 there were 4,313 Housing Association dwellings designed for the elderly.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Trespass

93. Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Attorney-General what plans the Government have to review the application of the law of trespass.

The Attorney-General: The Government have no plans to review the application of the law of trespass.

Birmingham Pub Bombings

97. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Attorney-General when he last discussed the Birmingham pub bombings case with the Director of Public Prosecutions.

The Attorney-General: It was mentioned briefly last Thursday when considering today's questions with him.

Bradford Law Centre

98. Mr. Madden: To ask the Attorney-General if he will visit Bradford law centre.

The Attorney-General: I do not have any plans to visit Bradford law centre.

Nazi War Criminals

99. Mr. Hind: To ask the Attorney-General how many representations he has received in the last year urging him to introduce legislation to try Nazi war criminals from eastern Europe in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Any representations addressed to me on this topic would have been transferred immediately to my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary, and I have no records of their number.

Confessions

100. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Attorney-General if he will arrange for statistics to be placed in the Library showing the number of convictions in England and Wales founded upon uncorroborated confessions obtained by the police for each of the years 1980 to date.

The Attorney-General: No. The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Such evidence is considered by the Crown prosecution service in the course of its review of each such case in accordance with the code for Crown prosecutors.

Trials

101. Mr. Allen: To ask the Attorney-General how many cases are awaiting trial in the east midlands; and what is the average length of waiting time in each category for which figures are available.

The Attorney-General: As at end October, there were 1,031 committals for trial awaiting disposal in the group of Crown court centres comprising Derby, Grimsby, Leicester, Lincoln and Nottingham.

The average waiting times for the group for the period April to October 1989 are 8·4 weeks for those defendants in custody and 9·7 weeks for those on bail.

Crown Prosecution Service

102. Mr. Archer: To ask the Attorney-General whether he is satisfied with the working of the Crown prosecution service; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Yes. A record of the substantial achievements and progress of the Crown prosecution service for the year ending in July, upon which the service deserves congratulations is contained in the Director of Public Prosecutions' annual report, a copy of which is in the Library. I commend it to hon. Members. I welcome this opportunity to record my full confidence in the Crown prosecution service and my support for its continuing progress.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General when he last met the Director of Public Prosecutions to discuss the operation of the Crown prosecution service.

The Attorney-General: On 30 November 1989.

Planning Covenants

103. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Attorney-General whether he will ask the Law Reform Committee to consider the effectiveness of planning covenants; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: There are no plans to refer any aspect of planning law to the Law Reform Committee.

Legal Profession

104. Mr. Stanbrook: To ask the Attorney-General if he will propose the ending of the monopoly whereby only members of the legal profession are allowed to represent defendants before courts.

The Attorney-General: The Government's proposals for widening choice in the provision of advocacy services were set out in the White Paper published on 19 July 1989.

Serious Fraud Office

105. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Attorney-General when he last met the director of the serious fraud office.

The Attorney-General: I frequently meet the director of the serious fraud office to discuss matters of departmental interest.

Haemophiliacs

106. Mr. Aitken: To ask the Attorney-General what representations he has received on the current litigation brought by haemophilia patients against health authorities and other Government agencies.

The Attorney-General: Apart from those made by the hon. Member, no representations have been made to me on the current litigation.

Duty Solicitors

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General how many duty solicitors' schemes have been established in England and Wales for each year over the last 10 years; how many have ceased to exist; how many are still in operation; and if he will list the areas concerned.

The Attorney-General: The information is not available in the form requested.

Legal aid legislation has provided for duty solicitors at magistrates' courts since 1983 and at police stations since 1986. Cover has been established at 488 magistrates' courts and 1,780 police stations. Where cover ceases the Legal Aid Board seeks to restore it as soon as possible. Duty solicitor cover has ceased, but has not yet been restored, at four police stations: Hatfield, St. Albans, Welwyn Garden City and Sevenoaks.

Consolidation Measure

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Attorney-General whether he will give consideration to introducing a consolidation measure to incorporate the Landlord and Tenant Act 1927, the Landlord and Tenant Act 1954, part 2, and the Law of Property Act 1969.

Mr. Chope: I have been asked to reply.

No, given that these Acts are generally working well as they stand.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Gaelic Football (Loughry College)

Rev. William McCrea: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether students at Loughry college, who may be part-time members of the security forces, will be permitted to play Gaelic games under the auspices of the Gaelic Club at Loughry; and whether the Irish Republic's tricolour will be permitted to be flown at Gaelic games being played at Loughry.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Loughry college strongly encourages all students to organise and participate in those sports or recreational activities in which they are interested. Gaelic football is a popular choice among students.

The college expects each club or society to be student-led and to manage its own affairs. This may include affiliation with the governing body for a particular sport such as the Gaelic Athletic Association or the Irish Rugby Football Association (Ulster Branch).

I congratulate the college club on its success in the all-Ireland agricultural colleges competitions.

We are unaware of any student being refused permission to play Gaelic games because he or she is a part-time member of the security forces.

The flag which may be flown at Loughry college is the Union flag. It is flown from the official flag pole on appointed days.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Medical Board Hearings

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the reasons for the delay in the hearing by the medical board of the claim by Mrs. D. Lowe; and when he now expects the hearing to take place.

Mr. Scott: The medical board, which took place on 19 October, was arranged as soon as it was practicable following receipt of all the evidence which the board required.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security by how much housing benefit spending has been reduced in the past year; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Housing benefit expenditure has not been reduced over the past year; in fact, estimated spending in 1989-90 (including community charge rebates) is 17 per cent. higher than in 1988-89.

Food Vouchers

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the number and value of food vouchers issued by the Newcastle (Saxon house) and Newcastle (Bentinck road) offices of his Department during the period April to October.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The number of food vouchers issued by the Newcastle (Saxon house) office between 1 April and 31 October 1989 is four at a value of £100·30. The Newcastle (Bentinck road) office issued no vouchers in that period.

Young Offenders

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment his Department has made of the special needs of young offenders on probation and at risk of custody, particularly with reference to any delay in processing a claim.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The Government continue to monitor the effects of the recent changes in social security provision. As part of this monitoring the Department of Social Security maintains close liaison with the Home Office's probation services. We are also looking carefully at the findings of the recent research carried out for the Association of Chief Officers of Probation by the University of Lancaster, which indicates that offenders and their families have problems in getting the social security benefits to which they are entitled.

Income support claims are dealt with on average within five days, with urgent claims being processed well within that period. Moreover, as a result of our monitoring I announced on 27 November a number of procedural improvements designed to ensure that claims from young people, including those from young offenders, are dealt with as effectively and sympathetically as possible. These changes demonstrate the Government's willingness to act when areas of genuine difficulty are identified.

Disability

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has for consultation with disabled people and their families following the publication of the changes in social security benefits for disabled people.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) ahd the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) on 23 October at columns 341-42.

DEFENCE

Married Quarters

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total amount of money gained from the sale of surplus married quarters since 1981.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The amount of money gained from the sale of surplus married quarters before 1 April 1987 is not identifiable without disproportionate effort. Receipts since then are as follows:

Financial year	Receipts £ million
[1]1989-90	15·721
1988-89	55·627

[1] To 30 September 1989.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the maintenance backlog at 1 April for each year since 1979 for (a) unavoidable and essential repairs, and (b) urgent repairs for married quarters.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The backlog of unavoidable repairs at 1 April 1989 was estimated at £323 million, although it cannot be guaranteed that this is precisely accurate in every respect, given that assessments of this kind are a matter of professional judgment. Figures for previous years were either not collated at all or, where they were, not in such a way as to permit comparison between one year and another, as the definition and interpretation of what constitutes backlog has been progressively revised from year to year. At no time has the backlog of maintenance of married quarters been separately identified. Consequently the information requested could not be obtained at all or without incurring disproportionate cost.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any surplus married quarters have been sold or leased to housing associations since 1981.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Yes. There have been several occasions since 1981 when surplus married quarters have been sold to housing associations. However, records are not kept in a way which makes specific purchasers readily identifiable, and to give details of all such transactions would entail disproportionate effort. Properties which were temporarily surplus to MOD requirements have been leased to a housing association in recent years but there are no such leases at present.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any surplus married quarters have been sold or leased to local authorities since 1981.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Yes. There have been several occasions since 1981 when surplus married quarters have been sold to local authorities. However, records are not kept in a way which makes specific purchasers readily identifiable and to give details of all such transactions would entail disproportionate effort. Properties which are temporarily surplus to MOD requirements may be offered for leasing to local authorities when circumstances permit. There are currently over 500 such properties leased to local authorities throughout the United Kingdom.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arms and equipment supplied to the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation are manufactured in Yugoslavia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: I am not able to supply this information on behalf of our NATO partners. The amount of such equipment procured by the United Kingdom is extremely small.

Harrier Public House

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence at what heights Harrier aircraft overflew the Harrier public house at Bowerhill, Wiltshire and surrounding area on 9 November.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Harrier aircraft flew at a height of between 250 and 500 ft above ground level.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many hours' flight time was used by the Royal Air Force Harrier aircraft to travel between their base and the Harrier public house on 9 November.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Harrier aircraft flew a routine training mission of 50 minutes' duration. The overflight of the public house required no additional flying time.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what was the total cost of the overflight of the Harrier public house at Bowerhill, Melksham, Wiltshire on Thursday 9 November;

(2) whether any of the costs to the Royal Air Force of the overflight of the Harrier public house by Royal Air Force Harrier aircraft on 9 November were reimbursed by the brewery or the licensee.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The overflight of the Harrier public house was undertaken as part of a routine training sortie. It is not our practice to give information on the costs of individual sorties. However, no additional costs were incurred as a result of the overflight, and there was therefore no requirement for reimbursement.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether those Royal Air Force personnel present at the Harrier public house, Bowerhill, Wiltshire on 9 November were on official duty; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Royal Air Force personnel attended the Harrier public house on 9 November in a private capacity and were off duty at the time.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who instigated the overflight of the Harrier public house by Royal Air Force Harrier aircraft on 9 November; and whether ministerial approval was given before the flypast.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The overflight took place in response to a request from the publican of the Harrier public house at Bowerhill, Melksham. It was approved by a senior RAF commander as part of a routine training sortie, at no extra cost to public funds.

Sea Harriers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence at what heights Sea Harrier aircraft overflew the Thames and surrounding area on 11 November.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The flypast over the Thames was at approximately 1,000ft.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many hours' flight time were used by the Sea Harrier aircraft to travel between their base and the Thames on 11 November.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The aircraft took off from Yeovilton at 13.24 and landed there again at 14.21.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total cost of the overflight of the Thames by Royal Navy Sea Harrier aircraft on 11 November.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is not our practice to give information on the costs of individual flights.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether any of the costs to the Royal Navy of the overflight of the Thames by Sea Harrier aircraft on 11 November were reimbursed by the organisers of the Lord Mayor's show.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. The flight was regarded as having training value.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who instigated the overflight of the Thames by Royal Navy Sea Harrier aircraft on 11 November; and whether ministerial approval was given before the flypast.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The flypast was at the request of the pageantmaster of the Lord Mayor's show, and was approved at the appropriate level within the Ministry of Defence.

Private Security Firms

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (i) Ministry of Defence sites not used by United States forces and (ii) Ministry of Defence sites used by United States forces are currently being guarded by private security firms.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Private security firms are currently used at 45 Ministry of Defence establishments, including one which is made available to United States forces.

Aldermaston

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many new posts will be required for the Ministry of Defence police under the proposed scheme to upgrade the perimeter fence at the Atomic Weapons Research Establishment Aldermaston; and what is the cost, as estimated by his Department, of the provision of these posts;

(2) if he has recently reviewed security at the Atomic Weapons Research Establishment Aldermaston;

(3) if he will make a statement regarding the proposed upgrading of the perimeter fence at the Atomic Weapons Research Establishment Aldermaston, including the expected total cost of the scheme;

(4) what is the cost, as estimated by his Department, of building a new 7·5 km weld mesh fence around the Atomic Weapons Research Establishment Aldermaston;

(5) what is the cost, as estimated by his Department, of laying a patrol track between the present outer and proposed inner fences under the proposed scheme to upgrade the perimeter fence at the Atomic Weapons Research Establishment Aldermaston; and what is the proposed surface material for this track;

(6) what is the cost, as estimated by his Department, of realigning the existing perimeter fence at the Atomic Weapons Research Establishment Aldermaston to accommodate proposed improvements;

(7) what is the cost, as estimated by his Department, of the proposed new perimeter lighting system at the Atomic Weapons Research Establishment Aldermaston;

(8) what is the cost, as estimated by his Department, of the proposed remote controlled closed circuit television system and its associated control room to be installed at the Atomic Weapons Research Establishment Aldermaston;

(9) what is the cost, as estimated by his Department, of the proposed intruder detection system to be mounted on the inner fence at the Atomic Weapons Research Establishment Aldermaston;

Mr. Neubert: Security at AWE is subject to regular review and it is not our policy to give details of operational security measures.

We have decided to upgrade the perimeter fence system at Aldermaston and are seeking proposals from industry for the following elements:

1. Realignment of the existing chain link fence where necessary.
2. A new inner fence around the 7·5km perimeter of weldmesh construction.
3. An intruder detection system mounted on the inner fence.
4. A new perimeter lighting system.
5. A CCTV surveillance system with remote control and monitoring room.
6. All associated services.
7. Steam main alterations and diversions.
8. Roadwork extensions and alterations.
9. A patrol track between the inner and outer fences.
10. Entrance gate modifications.
11. Modification of existing and provision of new MDP posts.
12. Undergrounding of SEB overhead 33KV line and diversion of 11KV underground cable.

It is not appropriate to disclose our cost estimates while tenders are being sought and any subsequently agreed price will, of course, be commercially confidential.

Public Houses

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many openings of public houses, or similar establishments, Royal Air Force aircraft or aircrew have attended in an official capacity in the last 10 years.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We have no records of official RAF participation in, or attendance at, such events.

Perimeter Fences

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many other bases or facilities owned, operated or under the contol of his Department have had new perimeter fences of weld mesh construction provided for them in the last 10 years; and what was the total cost of construction for each of these weld mesh fences.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

S10 Respirators

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many S10 respirator facepieces have been purchased by his Department in the three years to the end of the financial year 1989-90; how many are to be purchased over the next three financial years; and what is his Department's total requirement of these items.

Mr. Alan Clark: I regret that, in the interests of national security, the Department's total requirement for this item cannot be revealed. I can confirm that the current requirement is under contract and the bulk of it should be delivered by the end of the financial year 1989-90. Future requirements remain subject to review.

Air Electronics Operators

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the proposed wage reductions for Royal Air Force air electronics operators; whether he will reconsider this decision; and if he will ensure that no serving operator has any reduction in his pay.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: From 1 October 1989 air electronics operators in the ranks of master aircrew and flight sergeant have been placed in a lower pay band in accordance with the job evaluation results for their trade. This decision was taken after three full evaluations, and is currently the subject of internal appeal procedures. Existing regulations ensure that none of the personnel affected will suffer any reduction in pay.

Project Brinton

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement regarding Project Brinton.

Mr. Alan Clark: Project Brinton provides secure fixed communications in Northern Ireland. For security reasons I am unable to give details.

Low Flying

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement regarding the awarding of compensation to Mr. Paul Adorian of Kirklinton for the death of a llama caused by low-flying fast jet aircraft.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Mr. Adorian submitted a claim for compensation to the Ministry of Defence for the death of one of his llamas as a result of military low-flying aircraft activity. Following a thorough investigation of the circumstances, this claim was accepted and an appropriate award of compensation for the loss was made.

Triaminotrinitrobenzene

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement regarding the procurement of triaminotrinitrobenzene by the Atomic Weapons Research Establishment Aldermaston; and for what purpose this material is procured.

Mr. Alan Clark: A notice has been placed in the MOD contracts bulletin of a tender for the procurement of quantities of triaminotrinitrobenzene. For security reasons I am not prepared to identify the applications for which this material is procured.

War Widows

Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will review the present level of pension paid to war widows of service men who died before 31 March 1973 with a view to bringing them into line with pensions paid to war widows of service men who died on or after 31 March 1973.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Under the rules of the armed forces pension scheme the level of pensions paid to the widows of service men depends upon the terms and conditions in force at the date on which their husbands completed their service, or died in service. Changes in the rules, which became operative on 31 March 1973, applied only to personnel giving service on or after that date. In accordance with normal principles and practice for occupational pension schemes, the revised rules did not apply retrospectively, and there are no plans to change that position.

EH 101 Helicopter

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will describe any current problems involved in developing the utility EH 101 helicopter project; what is the latest estimate of any cost over-runs; and if he will make a statement on the progress of this programme item.

Mr. Alan Clark: The RAF utility EH 101 helicopter programme is currently in the project definition phase, the first stage of which will be completed by April 1990. This involves a detailed examination of the RAF's foreseen requirement against a range of options, and establishing the costs and risks associated with each. The results of this work will provide the basis for decisions on the next stage of the programme.

NATO

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he has had any discussions with other members of North Atlantic Treaty Organisation regarding possible British troop reductions in the Federal Republic of Germany, following an agreement on the reduction of conventional forces in Europe.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My right hon. Friend has frequent discussions with his NATO counterparts on a wide range of arms control issues. The NATO proposals on manpower at the negotiations on conventional forces in Europe are limited to forces stationed by the United States and the Soviet Union in Europe.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he has had any discussions with representatives of the Netherlands Government regarding the creation of a multinational North Atlantic Treaty Organisation maritime patrol airforce in the north Atlantic; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is his policy towards the creation of a multinational North Atlantic Treaty Organisation maritime patrol airforce in the north Atlantic: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. I am not aware of any proposals to create such a force.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards co-operation with other North Atlantic Treaty Organisation countries regarding the use of flight simulators; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: It is our policy to co-operate with other NATO countries in making most cost-effective use of available flight simulators. For example, the RAF is currently hiring time on equipment owned by the United States and Spanish air forces, which simulates the Harrier GR5, while German forces are trained on simulators belonging to the Royal Navy.

Submarines

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what instructions are given to submarine commanders regarding their conduct when their submarines become entangled in fishing nets.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The guidance given to a submarine commander in the event of his vessel becoming entangled with the nets of a trawler is designed to ensure that the safety of human life is given paramount consideration.

The instructions require:

(a) the submarine to come to periscope depth to check visually for any vessels in distress and establish communications where circumstances permit:

(b) the naval authorities to be immediately informed of the incident and, if appropriate, the coastguard contacted;

(c) that, if fishing nets are still attached to the submarine, every effort is to be made to recover them—if this is not possible a note of the position in which the gear was lost is to be taken; and

(d) the submarine not to leave the area until it has been established beyond all reasonable doubt that no danger to human life exists as a result of the incident.

Sram-T Missiles

46. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards the possible deployment of Sram-T missiles on United States F1-11E aircraft based in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As part of NATO's force restructuring and modernisation measures, designed to sustain its strategy of flexible response in the post-INF era, a number of options are under consideration. However, no decisions have yet been taken.

Butt of Lewis Incident

47. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he plans to publish the resuls of the inquiry into the incident involving a Royal Navy submarine and the fishing vessel Scotia on 14 November off the Butt of Lewis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A preliminary on-board investigation has already been conducted into the incident, which took place on the 13 November. The conclusions of this will not be fully known until the submarine returns to port. A decision will then be made whether there are sufficient grounds for convening a full board of inquiry. For operational reasons it is not our practice to release details of the findings of inquiries of this nature.

Fijian Training

97. Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Fijian military personnel are being given training by Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: At present, three Fijian military officers are attending military training courses in the United Kingdom. In addition, a Royal Navy officer is serving on loan to the Fiji hydrographic unit.

Battle of Britain Stamps

158. Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will meet the chairman of the Post Office to discuss the issue of commemorative stamps to mark the fiftieth anniversary of the Battle of Britain.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We are discussing this matter with the Post Office.

Death Compensation

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what considerations underlie the decision on the amount of compensation payable (a) in respect of the death of a llama, attributable to a low flying incident, and (b) to the family of a single soldier murdered by the IRA; and if he will take immediate steps to introduce a scheme to provide minimum compensation equivalent to at least one year's salary in the case of services personnel killed in the course of their duty;

(2) what has been the average compensation paid by Her Majesty's Government to the families of single service personnel murdered in the course of their duty by the Irish Republican Army in each of the past five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The amount of compensation paid by my Department recently in respect of the death of a llama was based on substantial evidence provided by the claimant and verified by professional advisers in the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. I cannot answer for claims arising from the death of single soldiers killed by the IRA in the United Kingdom, since these are considered under the criminal injury compensation schemes for Great Britain and Northern Ireland. My Department operates a corresponding scheme for service men overseas, although we have not received any claims arising from the death of single service personnel as a result of IRA attacks under this scheme. The amount of criminal injuries compensation payable to the family of a single soldier murdered by the IRA is assessed in the same way as claims for damages under common law and reflect the degree of financial dependency. I see no requirement for any additional scheme along the lines proposed.

HEALTH

Flexible Working

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice and encouragement he has given to the National Health Service as an employer to provide more flexible working arrangements and child care facilities for National Health Service staff with children; and if any new advice is to be issued with regard to the reduced number of young people available for midwifery and nursing in the 1990s.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We fully recognise that staff with domestic responsibilities have a major contribution to make to the staffing of the National Health Service, especially in view of forecast reductions in the numbers of suitably qualified school leavers available for employment in the 1990s. This year we have commended to health authorities the NHS training authority's resource package on implementing an equal opportunities strategy and the report of the national steering group on equal opportunities for women in the NHS which include advice on the organisation of work-break schemes, flexible working arrangements and child care facilities. The NHS training authority is now looking at the training implications of "return and retain" schemes for staff wishing to take career breaks.

In March this year, the Department wrote to all health authorities commending to them a joint collaborative scheme agreed with the Midland bank for the sharing of workplace nursing facilities between NHS and bank staff. The first nursery under the joint scheme is due to open early in the new year at the royal Berkshire hospital. I understand that similar plans at the royal Infirmary in Derby are well advanced, while a number of others in different parts of the country are under discussion. Some health authorities are entering into sharing arrangements with other local employers.

While decisions about the implementation of work-break schemes, including flexible working and the provision of child care facilities must remain a matter for the individual employing authorities, we will continue to emphasise that there must be improvements in working practices and recruitment and retention policies so that authorities may be in a sound position to attract and retain the services of all staff who wish to combine employment in the NHS with domestic responsibilities.

North Western Regional Health Authority

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) successful and (b) unsuccessful claims for compensation have been made against the North Western regional health authority during each of the last three years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I understand from North Western regional health authority that the number of claims for alleged medical negligence made against health authorities in that region were as follows:

March 1987	822
March 1988	774
March 1989	758

Information on successful or unsuccessful claims is not readily available, and could only be produced at disproportionate cost.

Infertility

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many men and women have received medical help for infertility in the last year for which figures are available;

(2) what is the average time between requesting help with fertility problems and receiving treatment in the National Health Service;

(3) which district health authorities provide (a) ovarian scanning, (b) radio-immune assay service, (c) artificial insemination by donor or husband, (d) in vitro fertilisation and (e) counselling for infertile people; and whether any charge for the services.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not held centrally. The provision of infertility services is a matter for individual health authorities to decide in the light of local needs and priorities.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research the Government are currently funding into the causes of human infertility; and when the results of this research are expected to be available.

Mr. Jackson: I have been asked to reply.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon) on 30 October at columns 11-13.

Results arising from this extensive and continuing programme of research are published as they become available, in appropriate medical and scientific journals.

IUD

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on what proportion of pelvic inflammatory disease has been associated with the intra-uterine contraceptive device in the last five years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not held centrally.

Haemophiliacs (AIDS)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects the recent award to haemophiliacs to be paid to individuals.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give an assurance that the ex-gratia payments of £20,000 to people with haemophilia who have been infected with the AIDS virus in the course of National Health Service treatment will be made to them before Christmas.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We are urgently considering with the Macfarlane Trust the best method of implementing these payments and we intend that they should be made as soon as possible.

Haemophiliacs (HIV)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations he has received subsequent to the recent statement on additional aid to haemophiliac sufferers who have contacted the HIV virus arising from blood transfusions; of these how many have pressed for a more substantial settlement for such sufferers; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 30 November 1989]: We have received three representations to date seeking additional financial help. As my right hon. and Learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health announced on 23 November, our objectives are to give £20,000 lump sum payments to those affected, on an ex-gratia basis, and to enable the Macfarlane Trust to continue on a more generous scale their help to families in particular need. However, compensation is a matter for the courts.

Health Service Reform

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many meetings he has had with representatives of the medical profession to discuss his plans for reforming the NHS.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Since the White Paper "Working for Patients" was published in January this year my colleagues, senior officials and I have met representative bodies, other groups and leaders of the medical profession on some 100 separate occasions. These have included for instance, meetings with the presidents of the Royal Colleges, the Joint Consultants Committee, the British Medical Association, the General Medical Council, the General Medical Services Committee and the Hospital Consultants and Specialists Association.

We have been able to listen carefully to the views of the profession and have taken their points into account in developing the Government's proposals. I and my colleagues are always willing to enter into further constructive dialogue with the profession about how best to implement our plans.

Schools Health Service

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what his policy is on preventive health education measures in terms of the schools health visitor service.

Mr. Freeman: Health education will be a cross-curricula theme in the national curriculum and the responsibility for its teaching in any school lies ultimately with the head teacher and governors. School nurses however can make a very useful contribution to the development of teaching programmes and also, in the course of their regular duties, they use their contacts with individual pupils to promote health education and encourage healthy life styles.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the future of the schools health service once local management of schools is in place as (a) medical support to staff and pupils and (b) health education support to staff.

Mr. Freeman: Legislation has been amended so that district health authorities will have a responsibility to continue to provide a school health service for pupils at both schools maintained by local education authorities and at grant maintained schools. The range and organisation of services will still be determined by individual health authorities in consultation with local education authorities.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the role of the schools health visitor service in all age schools.

Mr. Freeman: School health services make a very useful contribution to preventive medicine through child health surveillance and health promotion among school children. We have recently carried out a brief fact finding survey of a sample of school health services and will be considering if further guidance on the management of the service is appropriate.

Homeless People

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is his estimate of the numbers and proportion of homeless people currently not registered with any general practitioner;

(2) what steps he is taking to ensure that homeless people are accepted on to general practitioners' lists under the terms of the new general practitioner's contract.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is not possible to make reliable estimates of the numbers involved. Everyone entitled to NHS treatment has the right to be registered with a doctor in their locality. In cases where people, such as the homeless, are unable to find a doctor to accept them, the local family practitioner committee has power to assign them to a particular doctor's list. In addition two pilot projects have been undertaken in London to improve access by homeless people to primary health care services. We are establishing permanent arrangements in these areas and considering ways to extend them to other inner city FPCs.

Hospital Services (Tendering)

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will give details of all contracts awarded in the first and second round of National Health Service competitive tendering by each district health authority, by hospital, for (a) cleaning, (b) catering, (c) laundry, (d) portering, (e) other ancillary services and (f) other National Health Service services;

(2) if he will give the latest figures as a percentage of services put out to tender by each district health authority for (a) cleaning, (b) catering, (c) laundry, (d) portering, (e) other ancillary services and (f) other National Health Service services; and if he will give estimated annual savings.

Mr. Freeman: Information collected centrally in the form requested relates to the national initiative on domestic, catering and laundry services and for the first round only. A table giving information on tender exercises in this round in the period October 1988 to 30 September 1989 has been placed in the Library to update earlier published information. We do not propose to collect similar information centrally for these services in the next round of tendering, or for other services, ancillary or otherwise on the basis that the choice of new services to be tendered is a matter for local determination based on value for money and local circumstances. Many health authorities, as a matter of routine, and of their own accord, are looking to combine ancillary services in various packages before tendering and also extending the process to other services. We encourage such developments and to maximise flexibility will only collect aggregate information on progress as part of the cost improvement programme.

Savings to date achieved by health authorities in England for the three services covered by the national initiative are £110 million. For 1989-90 authorities plan new additional cost improvement savings through competitive tendering for services, of almost £10 million.

Physiotherapy

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received on the impact that the Health Service Bill is likely to have on the provision of physiotherapy services in hospitals and in the community; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received a number of written representations about the impact of physiotherapy services of the proposals in "Working for Patients" now included in the National Health Service and Community Care Bill. The Chartered Society of Physiotherapy also made representations at a meeting to my predecessor on 25 September. The proposals in the Bill are intended to improve the provision of physiotherapy services in hospitals and in the community.

Embryo Research

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representation he has had from Sir George Porter PRS on behalf of the scientific community about (a) the effect on the pursuit of knowledge of any ban on pre-14 day embryo research, (b) the effect on British industry of any ban on pre-14 day embryo research and (c) the effect on those suffering from degenerative disease and infertility of any restriction on pre-14 day embryo research.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department has received representations from Sir George Porter PRS on the possible impact of the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Bill on the scientific community. He pointed out the benefits which the Royal Society anticipates from research on embryos up to 14 days old for those suffering from genetic disorders and infertility, and the pursuit of knowledge generally. I understand he is also concerned about the effect which any ban on embryo research might have on British industry through a possible emigration of United Kingdom researchers.

Project 2000

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what mechanism he proposes to employ for determining the future levels of bursaries to students pursuing Project 2000 courses of nursing education.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In determining bursary levels for Project 2000 students, the Government's objective was to reflect the need to recruit sufficient candidates to nurse training, having regard to the current earning power of existing nurse students. Bursary levels will be kept under review in the light of that objective.

Leicestershire Health Authority

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many in-patients were treated in Leicestershire health authority area in (a) 1978 and (b) 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In the calendar year 1978, there were 73,521 in-patient cases in Leicestershire health authority. In the financial year 1988-89 the figure was 102,964.

Christie Hospital, Manchester

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure access for patients from Denton and Reddish to Christie hospital, Manchester, if it goes ahead with plans to opt out.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: NHS trusts will not opt out, but will remain firmly part of the NHS. It will be for district health authorities to determine, in the light of local circumstances, what services are required to meet the health care needs of their resident population and to secure provision of those services through contracts. As part of this process, health authorities will identify those services which must be provided locally. Where a unit which applies for NHS trust status is the only sensible option for providing such services, my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State will approve arrangements for their continued provision on establishment of the NHS trust. Any later changes will be subject to my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State's further approval if they cannot be agreed locally.

Disability

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the National Health Service and Community Care Bill and services for disabled patients.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The purpose of the National Health Service and Community Care Bill is to make the changes in the law needed to implement the proposals set out in our White Papers "Working for Patients' (Cmnd 555) and "Caring for People" (Cmnd 849). Under the proposals for NHS services, district health authorities will be responsible for seeing that the needs of all their resident population, including people with disabilities, are met and that patients have access to a comprehensive range of high quality value for money services. The new arrangements for community care will improve opportunities for independent living for people with disabilities by improving coordination between agencies providing care, providing for multi-disciplinary assessment of need, whether for residential care or support at home, involving the individual more closely in decisions affecting him, and taking more account of the needs of carers.

Pulse Oximeters

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will call for a report on the supply to medical staff at Killingbeck hospital, Leeds, of pulse oximeters;

(2) if he will take immediate steps to ensure that medical staff at Killingbeck hospital, Leeds, are equipped with pulse oximeters.

Mr. Freeman: The supply of medical equipment is a local matter for the management of the health authority concerned. The hon. Member may therefore wish to contact the chairman of Leeds Eastern health authority, Mrs. Solk.

Eye Examinations

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the figures for the number of eye examinations before and after the introduction of charges.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The number of sight tests under the general ophthalmic services over the past five years is given in the table. Information is currently not available as to number of general ophthalmic services sight tests carried out since April 1989.

Sight tests for England and Wales

Financial year	Total sight tests
1984-85	10,453,014
1985-86	10,846,497
1986-87	11,241,789
1987-88	12,392,076
1988-89	13,226,297

Natural Medicines

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many experts in natural medicine he proposes to appoint to the Medicines Commission and the section 4 committees in his current review of nominations; and if any such appointment will come from the nominations proposed to him by the medicines advisory research committee of the Natural Medicines Society.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 24 November 1989]: Appointments and re-appointments to the Medicines Commission have been made by United Kingdom health and agriculture Ministers and by United Kingdom health Ministers to the Committees on Safety of Medicines, on Review of Medicines and on Dental and Surgical Materials. Details have been placed in the Library.

A member of the Medicines Commission has a special interest in holistic medicine. His term of office continues until December 1991. We understand the Natural Medicines Society to be interested in herbal and homoeopathic medicine. No practitioners in these fields have been added to the advisory bodies either on the instance of the society or of any other organisation consulted.

We are aware of public expectations of access to such remedies with, of course, adequate assurances as to their safety and quality and as to the basis of any curative claims. Their safety and quality can be determined in the normal way. Criteria for assessing the efficacy of herbal preparations are set out in the published 1985 information sheet which was accepted by the herbal industry. There is therefore no general need for herbalists on the advisory bodies. Homoeopathic products are not currently subject to European Community pharmaceutical directives. A directive is, however, expected to be submitted to the Council of Ministers early in the new year. It would have been inappropriate to have anticipated this directive in decisions about United Kingdom statutory bodies.

However, officials are in touch with the Natural Medicines Group and similar organisations to prepare for the directive.

EMPLOYMENT

European Social Fund

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action he is taking to improve the flow of information from his Department to those local authorities preparing operational programmes for European social fund-supported projects.

Mr. Eggar: My Department has published two guides on the new regulations and procedures for the European social fund. These were distributed to all interested applicants on 11 April 1989 and 21 June 1989 respectively in good time for the submission of operational programmes to the European Commission by its deadline of 31 August. My Department will continue to update applicants through European social fund working group meetings, arranged in accordance with the partnership requirements of the fund regulations, and through bulletins.

Unemployment (Forecasts)

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will now make it his policy to issue forecasts of unemployment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: No. Macro-economic forecasts are the responsibility of the Chancellor of the Exchequer. However, it has not been the practice of this or previous Governments to publish forecasts of unemployment.

Footwear and Textiles

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the numbers of jobs in the (a) footwear industry and (b) textile industry for each year since 1979; and how many have been lost in each industry so far in 1989.

Mr. Nicholls: The number and change in employees in employment in the footwear and textile industries is shown in the following table:

Employees in the Footwear and Textile Industries

Professional And Executive Register

Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the names of the companies which bid for the purchase of the professional and executive register before it was privatised; and if he will give the dates on which the applications to acquire this service were first received, the criteria upon which the decision was made and the date upon which the choice of purchaser was reached.

Mr. Eggar: On the recommendation of our financial advisers, Lloyds Merchant bank, Professional and Executive Recruitment was sold by private tender. This form of sale meant that companies were invited to bid on the understanding that their interest would remain confidential. I am accordingly unable to give the names of the companies which bid for PER.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced the sale of PER for £6,000,000 to Pergamon Professional and Financial Services PLC on 8 September 1988 after considering the bids and presentations of interested parties on 5 September 1988. Legal completion took place on 6 September 1988.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how training and enterprise councils will be monitored for performance and quality.

Mr. Eggar: Training and enterprise councils (TECs) will operate under a contract with my Department. The contract will cover a TEC's business plan which will set out a strategy for ensuring and improving quality. Performance will be monitored against specific targets agreed annually as part of a TEC's business plan.

Wages Council

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the future of the Wages Council.

Mr. Nicholls: The future of the councils remains under consideration.

Excessive Wage Claims

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what criteria are used to determine what is an excessive wage claim.

Mr. Nicholls: Businesses themselves must judge what is or is not "excessive" in the light of all the relevant circumstances. Excessive wage claims are irresponsible and, if conceded, would erode competitiveness and destroy jobs.

VDUs (Radiation)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will launch a survey into the possible emission of low levels of radiation from visual display units and whether pregnant women are affected by working on visual display units.

Mr. Nicholls: Radiation from visual display units (VDUs) is very low and is not considered to be in any way hazardous. Surveys in other countries have not shown any risks to pregnancy attributable to VDUs. The Health and Safety Executive has commissioned an epidemiological study of possible reproductive effects from VDUs in order to obtain additional reliable data based on British VDU operators.

Disability

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what priority is given within the employment service to work with disabled people.

Mr. Eggar: People with disabilities are one of the main priority groups for assistance from the Employment Department. A comprehensive network of services is available to help people with disabilities find and retain jobs through advice, assessment, rehabilitation and training; and in the case of people with severe disabilities, support in the form of sheltered employment.

My Department is currently reviewing the full range of services for people with disabilities, and a consultative document covering the conclusions of the review will be published as soon as possible.

Employment Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action his Department takes, if, for whatever reason, an unemployed claimant finishes employment training and continues to be unemployed but fails to inform the unemployment benefit office or sign on and continues to receive their full training allowance.

Mr. Nicholls: Entitlement to training allowance ceases when an individual leaves ET and training managers are expected to inform the UBO accordingly. At the same time they should tell the individual concerned that allowances will cease to be paid and advise them, should they be unemployed, to return to the UBO to claim benefits.

Where, for whatever reason, the situation described in the question does arise, the question would be referred to the training agency and trainees could be asked to make a repayment.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Young Offenders

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consultation his Department has had to ensure that young offenders on probation and at risk of custody have their individual needs assessed without any delay.

Mr. John Patten: In the Green Paper "Punishment, Custody and the Community" and in "Tackling Offending: An Action Plan" the Home Office emphasised the need for individual assessment of offenders at risk of custody. The action plan suggests that social inquiry reports should include comprehensive individualised programmes for young adult offenders. The action plan also asks the probation service to improve co-ordination and co-operation with other agencies, to help provide coherent and effective programmes of supervision under probation orders. Every probation area was asked to draw up a local action plan for putting these ideas into effect. The Home Office is currently consulting the probation service on further guidelines for promoting inter-agency work under the action plan.

Immigration (Carriers' Liability)

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list (a) the number of passengers who were the subject of a notice of liability under the Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987 and (b) the countries at which they had embarked.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: From the introduction of the Act until 31 October 1989, 16,091 notices of liability had been served on carriers. Information on the countries from which the passengers embarked is not readily available.

Tobacco and Alcohol (Sales to Children)

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions have taken place in respect of illegal sales to children of (a) tobacco and (b) alcohol in each of the past five years for which figures are available; and what steps he proposes to improve enforcement of the law.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The figures are as follows:

	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988
Prosecutions for sale of tobacco to persons under 16	45	28	17	18	29
Prosecutions for sale of alcohol to persons under 18	314	274	296	333	673

The enforcement of the law is a matter for chief officers of police, who decide what action to take against particular types of crime in the light of other priorities. However, last year several measures were agreed with the police to make the law on the sale of alcohol more effective; this is reflected in the increased number of prosecutions for 1988. The Government are currently considering what additional steps might be taken to improve the enforcement of the law regarding the illegal sale of tobacco to children.

Guildford Pub Bombings

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the Surrey police have reopened their inquiries into the Guildford pub bombings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The reopening of the investigation is an operational decision for the chief constable of the Surrey police. I understand that he proposes to review the facts of the case and to give careful consideration to whether any further inquiries can usefully be made. Such action will, however, have to await the conclusion of the criminal investigation being conducted by the Avon and Somerset police and the return of the papers on the original investigation, currently held by that force.

Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many countries he has instituted proceedings against under the Immigration (Carriers' Liability) Act 1987; and what is the value of these claims.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Any such action under the Act would be civil proceedings against the carrier concerned, but none has yet been instituted.

Prisoners (Visits)

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what entitlement a prisoner has to receive a discretionary visit from persons not on their approved list of visitors.

Mr. Mellor: The approved visitors scheme applies only to category A prisoners. Discretionary visits may be authorised by the governor to enable close relatives to visit such prisoners during the period before the vetting process is completed. Such visits may also be granted for relatives and close friends who live abroad and whose stay in the United Kingdom is short.

Separate arrangements apply to legal advisers visiting in a professional capacity, Members of Parliament and peers, bishops of the diocese, justices of the peace, public officials visiting in the course of their duties, children of the prisoner (or of a visitor) and other persons with specific Home Office approval.

SCOTLAND

Birds

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what investigations he has conducted into the illegal poisoning of birds on Islay; and if he will take steps to draw the attention of estate owners where poisoning has occured to the requirements of the law.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Scottish Office officials have engaged in scientific analysis and field investigations of poisoning incidents and co-operate with the police in their inquiries with a view to possible prosecution if sufficient evidence can be obtained.

It is the policy of the Scottish Office that estate owners and others with an interest in the land should in every case be made aware of incidents which have occurred on their property and of the requirements of the law.

Sporting Rights

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the Government intend to receive the rating of sporting rights in Scotland; whether he intends to reform the rating of shooting rights in Scotland; what representations he has received regarding this matter; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: We have received representations from the Scottish Landowners Federation and from individuals about the differences which exist in the rating of sporting rights in Scotland and in England and Wales. It will not be possible to remove all these differences for the 1990 revaluation, which takes effect from April next year, but it is the Government's intention to move towards a common approach to the rating of sporting rights throughout Great Britain thereafter.

Greater Glasgow Health Board

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many members appointed to the Greater Glasgow health board reside in the area of the city covered by the Eastern district local health council; and if he will make it his policy to appoint east end residents to the board.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: None. No one is appointed to a health board as a representative of a particular area or interest and that will continue to be our policy.

Roads

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received concerning the future of the A1 road in response to his Department's consultation paper on routes south of Edinburgh.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I am very pleased with the level of interest that has been shown in this study which has resulted in around 200 responses to date. It is, of course, too early to have a detailed analysis of these but I estimate that between half and two thirds of the respondents have commented on our proposals for the A1. Almost all of these support our proposed upgrading of the route although many have suggested that the proposals be extended. I intend to make a statement on the findings of the whole consultation in due course.

Nature Conservancy Council

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many posts will be transferred from the Nature Conservancy Council headquarters in Peterborough to Scotland as a result of merger.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Decisions will be taken after discussions involving the Scottish Development Department, Department of the Environment,, Welsh Office and the NCC. Any relocation of posts will be determined when the NCC is reorganised. This reorganisation will take place in advance of the proposed merger of the new NCC for Scotland with the existing Countryside Commission for Scotland.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if any staff currently employed by either the Nature Conservancy Council in Scotland or the CCS will lose their jobs as a result of merger.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: All staff in both bodies have been given assurances about job security. They will be offered employment on terms and conditions not less favourable than they have at present.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proportion of the Nature Conservancy Council's budget is spent in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: For the current financial year, £6·5 million has been allocated by the council for direct spend in Scotland. The proportion of the council's total budget spent in Scotland is not readily available and I will write to the hon. Member.

Water Supplies

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make available sufficient funds to enable drinking water quality throughout Strathclyde to meet European standards by 1996 at the latest.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The quality of drinking water supply is the responsibility of regional and islands councils. The needs of Strathclyde, and other authorities, will be taken into account in setting capital expenditure allocations for 1990-91 and subsequent years.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will name the water supplies in Scotland which have derogations for aluminium under article 20 of the drinking water directive which will expire in each of the years: 1990, 1991, 1992, 1993, 1994 and 1995-96.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The water supplies concerned, which were the subject of delay applications under article 20 of the drinking water directive, are as follows and the delays expire in the years indicated:

Old People's Homes

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by (a) region and (b) district the number of old people in homes in Scotland (i) in the private sector, (ii) in the voluntary sector and (iii) run by local authorities.

Mr. Lang: Information for 1988, the latest year available, is set out in the following table:

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list by (a) region and (b) district the number of old people's homes in private ownership in Scotland in (i) 1980, (ii) 1985, (iii) 1987 and (iv) 1989.

Mr. Lang: Information in the form requested is not held for 1980 and no information after 1988 is available yet. Figures for that year and for 1985 and 1987 are given in the following table:

Number of Private Homes for the Elderly by District/Region

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the charities currently subsidising old people in private sector homes in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: No information is collected on this, which is a wholly private matter for the residents themselves.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the latest estimate of the investment made by international companies in old people's homes in Scotland; and what were the comparable figures in (a) 1985 and (b) 1988.

Mr. Lang: No information on this subject is held centrally. Financial arrangements for private developments of this kind are a matter of the proprietors themselves.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the weekly average cost for (i) a single room and (ii) shared accommodation in old people's homes in the private sector in Scotland in (a) 1980, (b) 1985, (c) 1986, (d) 1987, (e) 1988 and (f) 1989.

Mr. Lang: Information in the form requested is not held centrally. The weekly average charge for residents in private homes was £149 in 1987 and £158 in 1988.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received regarding old people's homes in private ownership in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: I have received 12 representations in the last three years. They covered specific issues, such as standards and charges, as well as more general issues. Responsibility for the registration and inspection of residential homes rests with regional and islands councils.

Airports

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether his Department has submitted evidence to the review of Scottish lowland airports policy.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No. However, before any decision is taken on the future shape of Government policy for Scottish lowland airports my right hon. and learned Friend will be fully involved in considering all the written comments submitted in response to the Department of Transport consultation document.

Wildlife and Countryside Act

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any plans to repeal or amend the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 insofar as it relates to Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No substantive amendments are planned for the Wildlife and Countryside Act

1981 so far as it affects Scotland, though some technical and consequential amendments will be needed for the creation of a separate Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland.

Scottish Arts

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much of the fundings of Scottish Arts in 1990-91 is for (a) provisions for maintenance, repair and refurbishment of galleries and museums and (b) an increase in real terms of provision for activities of art groups and institutions.

Mr. Lang: I will write to the hon. Gentleman.

Natural Heritage Agency

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he estimates that a single natural heritage agency will be established in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Environmental Protection Bill which will shortly come before Parliament provides inter alia for the establishment of a Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland. It is our intention to establish the proposed natural heritage agency by subsequent legislation.

Health Service (Information Requirements)

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to support information and information technology requirements arising out of the proposals in "Working for Patients" and "Promoting Better Health".

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Advice to health boards on priorities will be issued as appropriate. In addition to their normal financial allocations health boards will be able to bid for centrally held resources.

Adoption

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many babies were adopted in Scotland, for any convenient periods in the period of 1980 to 1989.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 27 November 1989]: The numbers of children under 12 months old adopted in Scotland in the years 1980 to 1988 are as follows:

Year	Number
1980	379
1981	321
1982	326
1983	291
1984	229
1985	199
1986	160
1987	156
1988	132

Corresponding figures for 1989 (to date) are not yet available.

School Boards

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many parents have to take part in by-elections for school boards in (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 30 November 1989]: All parents in schools where by-elections take place are entitled to take part. There is no compulsion to do so.

TRANSPORT

Toll Roads

12. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what his policy is with regard to the use of tolls on the road infrastructure network; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Tolls have been levied to finance certain costly estuarial crossings which provide exceptional benefits for users. In addition, tolls will be a means of paying for privately-financed roads.

Channel Tunnel (Freight Terminal)

13. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from British Rail concerning a freight terminal for Channel tunnel trade in the north-west of England.

Mr. Parkinson: British Rail is required by law to publish a plan setting out its proposals for passenger and freight services from the Channel tunnel to each region of the country. I have no doubt that this plan will have something concrete to say about a freight terminal in the north-west.

Wheel Clamping

14. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if there has been any reduction in illegal parking on double yellow lines following the introduction of wheel clamping as a method of parking enforcement.

Mr. Atkins: The level of illegal parking on double yellow lines is not separately recorded. Studies since 1983 in central London have shown that illegal parking on yellow lines generally has halved since the introduction of wheel clamping.

Speed Limit

15. Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the 70 mph speed limit.

Mr. Atkins: The representations I get are divided between setting lower speed limits and setting higher ones. I see no reason to change the present 70 mph on motorways and high speed roads.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to alter the maximum speed limit on motorways and other non-residential roads.

Mr. Atkins: I have no such plans. The representations I get are divided between setting lower speed limits and setting higher ones. I see no reason to change the present limits on motorways and other non-residential roads.

Second Channel Tunnel

16. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to encourage the building of a second Channel tunnel.

Mr. Parkinson: Eurotunnel is required by the concession agreement to put forward by the year 2000 plans for a drive-through link to be constructed when technical and economic conditions permit.

Border Routes

17. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy on the further provision of dual carriageway cross-border routes in the north-east as they connect with the Scottish road networks south of Edinburgh.

18. Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to make the A1 a dual carriageway up to the Scottish border.

Mr. Atkins: An improvement scheme for dualling a section of the A1 at Cawledge, south of Alnwick, was recently completed and opened to traffic.

Other dual carriageway proposals in the road programme for the A1 north of Morpeth are the Brownieside improvement and Marshall Meadows to the Scottish border improvement. On current planning the start of works on these schemes is scheduled for the spring of 1991.

One-man Bridge Operation

19. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made with the Department's one-man bridge operation at night project; and if he will make a statement about the origin of the funding for this scheme.

Mr. McLoughlin: The first phase of the project has been completed and a second phase is being considered. It has been funded from the Department's marine directorate research budget.

Lockerbie Air Disaster

20. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to announce a public inquiry into the Lockerbie air disaster and related events; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: My right hon., noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate has stated that there can be no question of an inquiry in public while the police investigation continues, as a public inquiry would interfere with that investigation and perhaps prejudice its outcome. I explained this to the representatives of the victims' families when I met them in September, and I believe they understood the position.

"Road Users and the Law"

21. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made with the Government's White Paper, "Road Users and the Law"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: As I told the hon. Member for Kingswood (Mr. Hayward) on 23 November, preparation of the legislative changes is well advanced. We have issued consultation papers on driver re-testing, vehicle prohibition and the use of technology for enforcement. This legislation will be brought forward as soon as time is available.

We have already taken powers to extend the high risk offenders scheme and are consulting the police and other interested organisations on improvements to the operation of the road traffic legal system which do not require changes to the law.

Road Speed Law

23. Mr. Bidwell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will launch a national campaign for the strict observation of road speed law.

Mr. Atkins: Speed limits are set for the protection of all road users. Every driver should observe them responsibly without special campaigns: sensible drivers go at lower speeds when it is foggy, dark or raining and adopt a safe driving distance from other vehicles. In residential areas, we welcome and encourage the engineering measures that local authorities are taking to slow vehicles to safe speeds.

Traffic-calming Measures

24. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he intends to take on the introduction of traffic-calming measures.

Mr. Atkins: We have done much to develop approaches to traffic calming in recent years. We encourage local highway authorities to consider the opportunities for traffic calming measures in their general planning of highways investment. We are looking into the possibility of earmarking funds for the implementation of local road safety schemes, some of which can include traffic calming.

Channel Tunnel

22. Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he is discussing to provide rail links from the Channel tunnel to ports in the south and west of Great Britain.

Mr. Parkinson: There are already rail links between the site of the Channel tunnel entrance and most ports in the south and west. British rail will be setting out its current proposals for passenger and freight services in the plan which it will shortly be publishing, in compliance with section 40 of the Channel Tunnel Act 1987.

25. Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a further statement on the high-speed railway line to the Channel tunnel.

48. Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a further statement on the high-speed railway line to the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Parkinson: It is now for British Rail and its chosen partner, Eurorail, to take this project forward.

26. Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent discussions he has had with the chairman of British Rail over the provision of through passenger and freight services from the north of the country to Europe through the Channel tunnel.

38. Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with British Rail about plans to link the Channel tunnel with routes north of London.

79. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what rail facilities will be provided in Liverpool in preparation for the opening of the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Parkinson: It is British Rail's responsibility to set out its proposals in the plan which it will shortly be publishing, in compliance with section 40 of the Channel Tunnel Act 1987. I await with interest the publication of the board's proposals.

62. Mr. Cyril D. Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if the Government will now give financial support to British Rail to assist with the environmental costs of the strategic Channel tunnel rail link.

Mr. Portillo: It is for the joint venturers to provide in the project for the high standard on environmental protection which they think will satisfy Parliament.

72. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received seeking regional passenger and freight rail links to the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Portillo: We receive a number of representations from time to time from hon. Members and others.

84. Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy on the construction of the Channel tunnel high-speed rail link.

90. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on British Rail, Eurorail and developments in the Channel tunnel high speed link.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend made an announcement on Friday 3 November.

54. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to improve the road and rail links between the Channel tunnel and Yorkshire.

Mr. Portillo: There are a number of major schemes in the road programme which will improve access between Yorkshire and the Channel tunnel. British Rail is about to publish its plan setting out its proposals for international services to regions outside the south east.

73. Mr. Aitken: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the co-chairmen of Eurotunnel plc; if the financial viability of the project was discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend last met the United Kingdom co-chairman of Eurotunnel at the ceremony to mark the breakthrough of the landward service tunnel on 9 November. Eurotunnel has announced that increasing costs will require additional funding. I understand that it is discussing the figures with its contractors and bankers.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will make it his policy to consider alternative routes for the Channel tunnel rail link to London in addition to proposals put forward by British Rail;

(2) if he will make it his policy to study the viability of developing Stratford as the main London transit point of the Channel tunnel rail link in comparison with the existing British Rail proposals.

Mr. Portillo: British Rail is statutorily responsible for providing rail services in Great Britain and planning new ones. It also holds the rights to through train paths in the Channel tunnel on which it has contractual agreements with Eurotunnel and French Railways. A Channel tunnel rail link will require the participation of British Rail. Anyone is free to suggest alternatives to British Rail's proposals. However, I accept that now that BR and Eurorail have announced their preferred route through Kent and terminal in London it will not be practicable for them to devote great efforts to examining other proposals. It will be for Parliament to decide whether the route can be accepted.

Bus Industry

27. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many new jobs have been created in the private sector bus industry since de-regulation.

Mr. Parkinson: Between 1985-86 and the end of 1988-89, there was a net increase of 3,900 in the total staff employed by private bus operators, including former subsidiaries of the National Bus Company.

Network SouthEast

28. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what requests he has received from British Rail to approve additional expenditure for (a) Network SouthEast and (b) the line from Liverpool street to Southend (Victoria).

Mr. Parkinson: This year I have approved five major investment schemes for Network SouthEast worth nearly £450 million. This included approval for the construction of 124 class 321 vehicles at cost of £45 million to meet the forecast growth in demand for services north of the Thames, including the Liverpool street-Southend (Victoria) line.

British Rail (Safety)

30. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much Government money is allocated to improving safety on British Rail.

Mr. Parkinson: British Rail's corporate plan includes some £125 million for additional safety expenditure over the next three years, which has been reflected in public expenditure provision. This expenditure will be supported by PSO grant where it falls to the subsidised sectors, Network SouthEast and provincial. British Rail is assessing the need for further expenditure following Sir Anthony Hidden's report on the Clapham junction accident.

British Rail

29. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to meet the chairman of British Rail to discuss his successor and the future of the railways under privatisation.

49. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet the chairman of British Rail; and what matters will be discussed.

57. Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next expects to meet the chairman of British Rail; and what matters he expects to discuss.

87. Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet the chairman of British Rail; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. Parkinson: I have already discussed with Sir Robert Reid the objectives we propose to set for British Rail over the next three years. We expect to publish them shortly.

31. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the progress of plans for the denationalisation of British Rail.

Mr. Portillo: Work is continuing.

35. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will direct British Rail to review its policy on unstaffed railway stations.

Mr. Portillo: The staffing of railway stations is a matter for British Rail or where appropriate the local passenger transport executive.

36. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent discussions he has had with the chairman of British Rail concerning the electrification of the rail network; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: It is for British Rail to bring forward any worthwhile proposals for electrification. Since 1979 British Rail have spent £691 million in today's prices on electrification, an average of £63 million a year.

67. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received concerning the staffing of British Rail stations.

Mr. Portillo: We have received a number but staffing policy is a management matter for British Rail.

91. Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce the appointment of the chairman of British Rail.

Mr. Parkinson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given earlier today to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker).

Road Safety Statistics

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the road safety figures for the last year for which figures are available for the United Kingdom and the other EC countries.

Mr. Parkinson: The United Kingdom has an excellent record for road safety compared with our foreign neighbours. The rate of road deaths at 9·4 per 100,000 head of population was the lowest of all the European Community countries in 1987. In 1988, the United Kingdom has achieved a further 1 per cent. reduction in fatalities, and a 1·5 per cent. reduction in serious injuries, although international comparisons for that year are not yet available. The detailed information is contained in the following table:

International comparisons of road deaths: number, and rates for different road users: by selected countries: 1987

[1] In accordance with the commonly agreed international definition, most countries define a fatality as being due to a road accident if death occurs within 30 days of the accident. The official road accident statistics of some countries however, limit the fatalities to those occurring within shorter periods after the accident. Numbers of deaths and death rates in the above table have been adjusted according to the factors used by the Economic Commission for Europe and the European Conference of Ministers of Transport, to represent standardised 30-day deaths: France (6 days) +9 per cent.; Italy (7 days) +7 per cent.; Greece, Austria (3 days) +12 per cent.; Spain, Japan (24 hours) +30 per cent.; Canada, Switzerland (1 year) −5 per cent.; Portugal (at the scene) +35 per cent.

Underground Railways

32. Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement concerning future plans for new underground railways serving south-east London.

Mr. Portillo: The Jubilee line extension to docklands will improve accessibility to Southwark and Bermondsey. London Regional Transport are also considering further the case for extensions of the East London line and the docklands light railway to parts of south-east London.

Commuter Services, London

33. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport by how much investment in London commuter services will increase over the next three years.

Mr. Portillo: London Regional Transport and BR's Network SouthEast plan to invest about £3·4 billion over the next three years (including £0·5 billion for the Jubilee line extension). That is £1·6 billion more than in the three years to April 1990, an increase of nearly 70 per cent. in real terms. Most of that investment will benefit services used by commuters.

Bus Substitution

34. Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will direct British Rail to cease providing services by bus substitution.

Mr. Portillo: No. If these services stopped the passengers who used them would be inconvenienced.

Women Travellers

37. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he is taking to improve the safety of women travelling on their own.

Mr. Portillo: Public transport operators are implementing a number of measures which will improve the security of all passengers.

British Rail: The British transport police are maintaining a higher visibility throughout the British Rail network and particularly in the Network SouthEast area. Other measures at NSE stations include better lighting and closed circuit television (CCTV). The remaining closed compartment carriages still in use on NSE services will be replaced as soon as new rolling stock comes on stream.

London Underground: The Government have provided £15 million for a programme of passenger security measures including passenger alarms, CCTV, mirrors and improved lighting in passageways. The number of police on the Underground has increased and their effectiveness has been improved by a new radio system and new area police stations.

Buses: The installation of radios and video cameras will help to deter crime. Women may particularly welcome the growing use of midi-buses where passengers travel close to the driver.

My Department has issued advice to motorists on what to do should they break down on the motorway or in remote places.

Concessionary Fares

39. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about the future operation of the concessionary fares scheme in London.

Mr. Portillo: Many such representations have been received following speculation that the present concessionary travel scheme in London might be withdrawn or curtailed. I wrote to London Members on 4 September explaining that the details of the scheme are agreed each year by the London boroughs and the City of London. If they fail to reach agreement, the reserve free travel scheme will be implemented.

Thames Collision

40. Miss Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement regarding the inquiry into the collision involving the Marchioness and Bow Belle dredger on the river Thames.

Mr. McLoughlin: The inquiry into the collision involving the Marchioness and the Bow Belle is not yet completed. It is our intention to publish the report of the chief inspector of marine accidents at the earliest practicable date.

Air Traffic Control Centre

41. Mr. Ground: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport by how much the Civil Aviation Authority's new en route air traffic control centre will increase airspace capacity.

Mr. McLoughlin: The new en route centre is expected to increase capacity in the en route sectors over England and Wales by at least 40 per cent. when operational in 1996.

Stockton-on-Tees

42. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make an official visit by car to Stockton-on-Tees; and if he will notify his route in advance.

Mr. Atkins: I have no plans to visit Stockton-on-Tees in the near future.

Orange Badge Scheme

43. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made with the proposals to modify the qualifying conditions for an orange badge and to tighten the monitoring of abuse; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: We are currently drawing up detailed proposals for redefining the eligibility criteria for the orange badge scheme in the light of the plans we published earlier this year. We are also examining ways of extending the benefits of the scheme to people with severe upper limb disabilities. We shall consult widely on our proposals as soon as possible.

Revised eligibility criteria are needed so that badges are issued only to those who genuinely need them. Our proposals for a new design of badge with space for a photograph of the holder will aid enforcement. The operation of the revised scheme will be kept under close review and discussions held with chief police officers as necessary.

Underground Railway, London

44. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what methods he intends to adopt to assess the relative merits of proposals for new underground railway routes in central London.

Mr. Portillo: The costs and benefits of the various options will be assessed with the assistance of the London transportation survey model. Account will also need to be taken of any wider benefits not included in the model.

M1, Bedfordshire

45. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the current repairs to the M1 in Bedfordshire.

Mr. Atkins: The major maintenance works between junctions 12 and 13 were substantially completed on 19 November, four weeks earlier than expected. Some further minor remedial works involving closure of the northbound hardshoulder and overnight works on the outside lane are expected to be completed soon.

Motorways, North-East

46. Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the expected road life of existing motorways in the north-east of England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Since the Department's standards for highway design were revised in 1985, motorways have been built to last, with appropriate maintenance, for 40 years before having to be reconstructed. Before that time bituminous roads were generally built to last on average 20 years and concrete roads 40 years. The actual life of particular motorways or sections of motorways depends upon a number of factors, notably the volume and weight of traffic using them, and may vary significantly. The condition of motorways is routinely monitored to identify deterioration and the need for major maintenance. An announcement about the 1990-91 programme of major maintenance will be made as usual around the end of March.

Roads (Spending)

47. Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport by how much spending on national roads will be increased over the next three years.

Mr. Atkins: Spending on national roads over the next three years will total £5·7 billion, compared with £3·3 billion in the three years ending March 1990. This is an increase of 70 per cent. in cash terms.

Of the £5·7 billion, £4 billion will be made available for new construction and improvement. This represents an increase of 50 per cent. in real terms, on original expenditure plans for the years 1987-88 and 1989-90, and reflects the Government's commitment to the proposals set out in the White Paper "Roads for Prosperity" for reducing congestion.

In addition £1·7 billion will be spent on road, bridge and current maintenance. This will mean an increae of over 40 per cent., in real terms, in spending on capital maintenance compared with the three years to March 1990.

Dalston Kingsland Station

50. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to visit Dalston Kingsland BR station.

Mr. Portillo: No, but I visited stations on the north London line on 7 October this year.

Leeds-Bradford Airport

51. Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received for the further extension of operating hours at the Leeds-Bradford airport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Transport announced on 14 August 1989 their decision on planning application by Leeds-Bradford airport for extended opening hours.

Since the announcement, my right hon. Friend has received 12 representations favouring longer opening hours than the 1½ hour extension granted.

A30, Cornwall

52. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what improvements are planned for the A30 in Cornwall.

Mr. Atkins: The following schemes are in the trunk road programme:

Launceston-Plusha
Plusha-Bolventor
Shallowater Hill Improvement
Temple-Higher Carblake Improvement
Bodmin-Indian Queens Improvement
Indian Queens Bypass
Penhale-Carland Cross
Zelah Bypass
Zelah-Chiverton Improvement
St. Erth-Newtown Improvement

I shall be opening the Launceston-Plusha scheme on 7 December. Work is expected to start on Plusha-Bolventor and Penhale-Carland Cross in spring 1990 and on Zelah bypass in summer 1990. The remaining schemes are at an earlier stage of preparation.

A38

53. Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he hopes to announce his Department's preferred route for the A38 trunk road improvement Liskeard-Bodmin section and consulting engineers to undertake investigations for the proposed A38 Saltash-Trerulefoot section.

Mr. Atkins: I hope to announce a preferred route for the Liskeard-Bodmin section early in 1991 and the appointment of consulting engineers for the Saltash-Trerulefoot section very shortly.

Civil Aviation Authority (Computers)

55. Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the Civil Aviation Authority's new computers will be installed.

Mr. McLoughlin: I understand that the replacement mainframe computers for the London air traffic control centre have now been installed. After further testing they will become operational early next summer.

Roads and Street Lighting

56. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from the City of Newcastle upon Tyne about the maintenance of roads, and the provision of streetlighting in residential areas.

Mr. Atkins: I have received the city council's document entitled "Residential Roads: The Problem—The Cure". All matters and priorities relating to local roads are, of course, the responsibility of the local highways authority.

London Underground

58. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much Government money is allocated to improving safety standards on the London Underground.

Mr. Portillo: London Underground estimates that by the year 2000 it will have spent more than £1 billion on improving safety. Although Government grant is not attributed to specific projects or activities, I am satisfied that the increases recently announced by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer will be more than sufficient to allow London Underground to secure its planned improvements in safety standards.

89. Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has to reduce overcrowding on the London Underground.

Mr. Portillo: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given by my right hon. Friend to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford (Ms. Ruddock), earlier today.

Rural Transport

59. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on rural transport provision.

Mr. Portillo: The provisions of rural transport is chiefly a matter for local transport operators and for local authorities. Under the Transport Act 1985 the operators can provide services wherever they see a commercial opportunity to do so. Local authorities may make provision for additional socially necessary services, under subsidy, after going out to competitive tender. In addition, the rural transport development fund, administered by the Rural Development Commission, receives £1 million a year from the Department of Transport to assist the provision of innovative rural transport services in England. In Wales and Scotland, the Welsh and Scottish Offices administer similar rural transport innovation grant schemes.

London Road Assessment Studies

60. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are his Department's plans for public consultation on the London road assessment studies once these proposals have been published.

63. Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress has been made in his consideration of the west London assessment study; and if he will make a statement.

76. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will make a decision on the options raised by the London road assessment studies.

Mr. Atkins: Arrangements have been made for the consultants' reports to be printed and I expect them to be published later this month. An announcement will be made at that time about the arrangements for consultation and decision.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, when his statement is made in early December on the London road assessment studies, he will ensure that at the same time a free copy of a summary of these studies will be made available to the general public; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Summary leaflets of the consultants' reports on each of the four London assessment studies will be available free of charge from the consultants and at libraries and other venues throughout the relevant study areas.

Manchester Airport

61. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on negotiations concerning trans-Atlantic flights to Manchester airport.

Mr. McLoughlin: Negotiations on air services between the United Kingdom and the United States were held between 29 November and 1 December. The United Kingdom's objectives include agreeing a balanced expansion of opportunities for the airlines on both sides which will allow for additional transatlantic services to be introduced to serve Manchester airport.

Bus Deregulation

64. Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the vehicle mileage increase on private sector bus routes since deregulation.

Mr. Portillo: Between 1985-86 and 1988-89, there was an increase from 168 million to 1,241 million in the vehicle kilometres run by private operators on local services outside London.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what progress his Department has made towards the deregulation of buses in London.

Mr. Portillo: We have already moved some way towards deregulation by splitting London Buses Ltd. into smaller operating subsidiaries, by promoting the extension of competitive tendering on London Regional Transport bus routes and by enhancing the opportunities for private operators to introduce their own routes under the London local service licensing system. The timetable for full deregulation has yet to be set.

Regional Airports

65. Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he is taking to support regional airports.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Government encourage the maximum use of regional airports, both to meet local demand and to relieve pressure on the London airports. Over the past decade more than £300 million of capital expenditure has been facilitated through special borrowing approvals for local authority airports. I hope to announce shortly the special borrowing approvals for 1990-91. We also very much welcome the contribution to the development of local authority airports which the private sector makes through the direct investment and joint venture schemes.

We are continuing to pursue liberalisation policies, both in the European Community and in bilateral negotiations, which increase further the scope for services from our regional airports.

London Regional Transport

66. Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next plans to meet the chairman of London Regional Transport; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend and I frequently meet the chairman of London Regional Transport to discuss a wide range of issues.

European Aviation Package

68. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the second stage of the European aviation liberalisation package will be agreed.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Council is committed to agreement on a second stage of aviation liberalisation by June 1990. The Government have welcomed the proposals which the Commission has recently put forward, and are fighting hard to prevent them being watered down.

A41 Bypass

69. Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the decision on the A41 bypass inquiry will be announced.

85. Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce his decision on the A41 Hemel Hempstead and Bourne End bypass.

Mr. Atkins: I expect the announcement to be made by the end of the year.

Trunk Roads, Selby

70. Mr. Alison: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proposals he has for expediting the flow of traffic along the A19 and A63 trunk roads through the town of Selby.

Mr. Atkins: Detailed proposals, in the form of draft orders under the Highways Act 1980, have just been published for a bypass of Selby by my Department. The scheme is designed to aid the flow of traffic on the A19 and A63, and bring considerable relief to the town centre.

Light Rail Projects

71. Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many light rail projects are planned around the country.

Mr. Portillo: We are in touch with the promoters of light rail projects in Greater Manchester, south Yorkshire, Avon, the west midlands, Cleveland and Nottingham. We are also aware of about 30 other schemes, many at an early stage of consideration.

A3

74. Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when present improvements to the A3 London to Portsmouth road in the Godalming and Guildford area will be complete.

Mr. Atkins: The Compton-Shackleford improvement is programmed for completion by the end of January 1990 but we may be able to complete the major part of it in December. The improvement at Deerbarn bridge should be completed early in December.

Disabled People

75. Mr. David Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he is taking to improve the mobility of the disabled.

Mr. Atkins: Our active and constantly evolving programme of initiatives to promote mobility for people with disabilities is set out in our document "Transport and Disability—a statement of Aims and Priorities".

One major priority is to improve the accessibility of public transport including the development of wheelchair-accessible coaches and buses. We shall be working with vehicle designers and manufacturers to influence car design and control modifications, to increase opportunities for personal mobility for even the most severely disabled people.

We are also developing guidelines on design for pedestrian areas to help elderly and disabled people.

M3

77. Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the plans to complete the M3.

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement of progress on the southern extension of the M3.

Mr. Atkins: Work to widen and upgrade the A33 between Compton, south of Winchester, and the M27, to form the southernmost section of the M3 started in August. It is scheduled for completion in late summer 1991.

Revised proposals for the remaining section between Bar End and Compton, around Winchester, were the subject of a public inquiry in 1985 which was re-opened in 1987-88 to consider further evidence. My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Environment and for Transport are considering the reports of the independent inspectors who conducted the inquiries. They will announce their decisions as soon as they are able. Construction dates will depend on the nature of those decisions.

"New Roads by New Means"

78. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to involve the private sector in road building and road repair programmes in light of the responses received to his consultation paper, entitled "New Roads by New Means."

Mr. Atkins: The private sector is already closely involved in the planning, design, supervision and construction of new trunk roads and in the maintenance of existing trunk roads. The response to the consultation paper "New Roads by New Means" was encouraging, and several new schemes are being taken forward actively, in England and in Scotland.

Road Safety

80. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what measures he is taking to improve road safety.

Mr. Atkins: Improving road safety is one of our top priorities. That is why we have developed a comprehensive strategy to attain our target of cutting casualties by one third by the year 2000. I welcome the commitment and enthusiasm of local authorities who are now drawing up plans and targets for their own areas.

We are working with them, the police and all others concerned to tackle the key problems: safer vehicle design, low cost local road engineering measures, concentration on making roads safer for the most vulnerable groups and above all, encouraging a sensible and responsible attitude among all road users.

East Coast Railway Line

81. Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent discussions he has had on the electrification of the east coast railway line between Aberdeen and Edinburgh.

Mr. Portillo: It would be for British Rail to bring forward any proposals if it believes they would be worthwhile. Since 1979 BR has spent £691 million in today's prices on electrification, an average of £63 million a year.

World Student Games

82. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to make available a special grant to Sheffield to expand railway facilities and station alterations for the world student games in Sheffield.

Mr. Portillo: I understand that British Rail is intending to undertake extensive improvement works to Sheffield station in time for the world student games. My Department has taken full account of the funding requirements of the Sheffield transport interchange in allocating resources to the South Yorkshire passenger transport authority. In addition, I am discussing with the authority whether any resources might be made available for part of the proposed Supertram route serving the games sites.

Submarines

83. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action his Department is taking to test systems which alert submarines to the presence of fishing vessels above them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Two proposals for acoustic devices have been received which have been sent to the Admiralty research establishment to assess their suitability as a warning to submarines of the presence of fishing vessels and their nets.

Inner Cities (Access)

86. Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he is taking to improve access to inner-city areas.

Mr. Atkins: Assisting local authority road schemes through transport supplementary grant; constructing trunk roads where appropriate; providing grant under section 56 of the Transport Act 1968 for public transport investment which shows good benefits; and consolidating the regeneration of London docklands with the approval of the Jubilee line extension from Green Park via Waterloo and the Isle of Dogs to Stratford.

Freight

88. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what studies his Department has undertaken to find out the environmental cost of transporting freight by road as compared to transport by rail.

Mr. Portillo: The environmental cost of transporting goods by road and rail will vary from case to case, and so no general conclusions from studies of the type suggested can be drawn.

In those cases where the transfer of goods from road to rail is shown to provide clear and worthwhile environmental benefits, section 8 of the 1974 Railways Act provides for grants to be paid.

Traffic Lights, SE1

92. Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department is responsible for, or was consulted about, the new traffic lights at the junction of Gaden way and St. Georges road, London SE1; what was the cost of the installation; what representations he has received about its effect on traffic flows from both directions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The traffic lighting scheme in question, costing £18,600, is the responsibility of the London borough of Southwark, as the local highway authority, and was devised in association with the traffic control systems unit.

The Department was consulted about the proposal as St. George's road is a designated road. The Department has not received any representations about the scheme.

Drink Driving

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he intends to alter the permitted level of alcohol that a driver can consume before an offence is committed.

Mr. Atkins: The present limit is the level at which for most drivers the chances of being involved in an accident start to rise sharply. With some half of drink drive offenders convicted at around twice the limit, our priority is to achieve greater compliance with the law as it stands.

Public Transport

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the ratio of women to men who use public transport.

Mr. Portillo: According to the 1985-86 national travel survey, women aged 16 and over made on average 38 per cent. more public transport journeys than men in that age group. They accounted for about 60 per cent. more bus journeys but 25 per cent. fewer rail journeys. In terms of passenger mileage, women generated 10 per cent. less public transport mileage per head than men, but were responsible for relatively more bus usage and less rail usage.

Relative use of public transport by women and men
Journeys and mileage per person per week

	Journeys			Mileage
	Women	Men	Ratio	Women	Men	Ratio
Bus	2·00	1·24	1·61	7·0	5·0	1·40
Rail	0·34	0·45	0·76	6·1	9·4	0·65
Bus and rail	2·34	1·69	1·38	13·1	14·4	0·91

Pilotage

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport which competent harbour authorities are charging vessels under the command of a master with a pilotage exemption certificate; and if he will list the highest and lowest charges.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Department does not have this information. The Pilotage Act 1987 however provides for objections to be made to the Secretary of State by, amongst others, port users against the levels of charges levied by competent harbour authorities for the issue or use of pilotage exemption certificates.

Vehicles (Fire Hazards)

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce measures to improve the design or location of petrol tanks in motor vehicles to prevent fires in collisions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: In high speed collisions it is virtually impossible to protect tanks totally. Regulations already require them to be in a position where they are reasonably secure from damage. For the future we are pressing the European Commission to adopt more stringent requirements for fuel tanks. We shall be seeking support of other Community members.

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what research his Department has commissioned or undertaken into the causes of fires in vehicles involved in collisions and into methods of reducing them.

Mr. Atkins: Though relatively few people die from this cause, such cases inevitably arouse particular horror. Over the years our research and action programmes to improve vehicle safety have included work on the features most likely to cause fires. Fuel cut offs are important and we have discussed this with manufacturers. We have also just sent them an analysis of electrical causes of fire and plan further work to protect against fuel leakage following rear impacts. We have made clear to vehicle manufacturers that we expect them to pay close attention to designs that reduce fire hazards.

Correspondence

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when his Department expects to reach a decision on the case of Mr. P. Robinson, of 7 Southland road, SE18, about whom his predecessor wrote to the hon. Member for Woolwich on 28 June.

Mr. Atkins: Shortly. We shall write to the hon. Member when a decision has been made.

Thames Riverbus

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the future of the Thames Riverbus service.

Mr. Portillo: The consortium responsible for the management of Riverbus is currently reviewing the experience of the first eight months of operations.

A46 (Accidents)

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the number of accidents which have taken place on the A46 trunk road at the Thrussington-Seagrave crossing north of Syston, Leicestershire, over the last two years; what action he intends to take to improve safety there; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: There have been six personal injury accidents at this junction in the last two years. Sadly, four of these involved fatalities.

The Department instructed its agents, Leicestershire county council, in October this year to place improved warning signs on all approaches to the crossroads. These should be in place by Christmas. A scheme to light the crossroads will be implemented as soon as practicable. Urgent consideration is being given to the need for further modifications.

A303/A30 (Improvements)

Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what improvements have been made to the A303/A30 route west of Amesbury since 10 March 1987.

Mr. Atkins: Between Amesbury and Exeter bypasses of Ilminster and Sparkford have been completed in the past two years.

Cars (Child Restraints)

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what evidence is available to him on the level of public support for the legislation requiring that children seated in the rear of cars are restrained where appropriate restraints exist.

Mr. Atkins: This valuable legislation, introduced by my hon. Friend the Member for Cheadle (Mr. Day) has been widely supported at all stages. It is generally recognised as making an important contribution to the reduction of unnecessary death and injury among children.

The new law came into force on 1 September. Next spring we shall review whether further publicity about its requirements and its benefits is needed in the light of a survey of seat belt wearing being carried out by the transport and road research laboratory.

Irish Lights

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his reply of 29 November, how many commissioners there are in Irish Lights; who appoints the members of Irish Lights from Northern Ireland; and for what period of time they serve as commissioners.

Mr. McLoughlin: The Commissioners of Irish Lights consist of 17 members (including those from Northern Ireland) who are appointed by the Irish Lights board for unlimited terms; and four ex-officio members, who are the Lord Mayor of Dublin and three nominees of Dublin city council and who hold office for the period of their nomination.

Central London (Traffic Management)

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will review traffic management schemes in central London to determine their effect on traffic flows and his power to change such schemes in the public interest.

Mr. Atkins: We are considering a number of proposals and will make an announcement as soon as possible.

Sprinter Trains

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what requests he has received for investment in replacements for 155 series Sprinter trains intended for operation out of Cardiff.

Mr. Portillo: None.

East London Assessment Study

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what date in December he plans to publish the results of the East London Assessment Study.

Mr. Atkins: The consultants will publish their report as soon as possible.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

North Sea

143. Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) by what date he intends to phase out the dumping of industrial wastes into the North sea; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he intends to allow the practice of dumping liquid industrial waste at sea after 31 December; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The United Kingdom is fully meeting international agreements reached unanimously by the North sea countries.

Indeed the United Kingdom is amongst the European leaders in demanding higher standards for the North sea. We are very conscious of the need to prevent pollution of our offshore waters. Eighty per cent. of riverborne pollution entering the North sea comes from rivers of Germany, Holland and Belgium.

Ministers at the second North sea conference agreed that disposal at sea of industrial wastes should not be prohibited if there were no practical alternative means of disposal on land and if it could be shown to the Oslo Commission that the materials caused no harm in the marine environment. The Oslo Commission in 1989 agreed the procedure by which a country would show that a waste met these criteria. The Government have initiated this procedure in respect of three wastes which have been licensed for sea disposal for some years.

The nature of these wastes and the problems faced in identifying environmentally acceptable alternative disposal options have been discussed at length in the Oslo Commission. At no stage has evidence been produced that any of these wastes cause harm in the marine environment. Detailed scientific work in the United Kingdom has shown that no harm is caused by sea disposal. Indeed, the presence of the wastes in the sea cannot be detected by the most sensitive means of analysis a few minutes after disposal.

No deadline has been set internationally for termination of sea disposal. However, the Government are seeking to end sea disposal of these wastes at the earliest possible time. Of the 20 licences issued in 1987 for disposal of liquid industrial waste at sea, more than half will not be renewed next year. The remainder will be terminated as soon as alternative means of disposal have been identified and implemented. The companies concerned are urgently working to develop land-based methods. The Oslo Commission agreed earlier this year that even when an alternative disposal option is identified a transitional period will be needed before sea disposal can end, to give time for introduction of the alternative arrangements. At this stage the final termination date for liquid industrial waste licences cannot be precisely identified, though it is expected that most will be terminated within about two years.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) when he received an application to dump 3,000 tonnes of a curing agent in epoxy powder in the North sea; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when he received an application from Sterling Organics to dump 42,000 tonnes of paracetamol waste in the North sea; and if he will make a statement;

(3) when he received an application from Fisons Ltd. to dump in the North sea 4,000 tonnes of waste from the making of asthma medicines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: All three companies have for some years had sea disposal licences for these wastes which arise from production of medicines—which help asthma sufferers and relieve pain—and soap. These have been subject to annual renewal. Pending the completion of development and implementation of alternative means of disposal the companies have sought continued licensing as some of their products provide relief—sometimes life-saving relief—to asthma sufferers and pain relief to others. The procedures agreed for such cases by the Oslo Commission were therefore initiated for the Sterling Organics and Fisons wastes on 19 September and for the third waste on 5 October.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many applications he has made to the Oslo Commission for licences to dump industrial waste in the North sea in 1990; if he will list in each case the substances, quantities and companies involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The Oslo Commission procedure, which is required in advance of the issue of national licences under the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985, has been initiated for three wastes, as follows:

Material	Tonnage
Fisons
Wash waters from synthesis of Intal—a treatment for asthma and allergies	6,000
Sterling Organics
Aqueous residues from preparation of paracetamol	42,000
Orsynetics
Salt solution from manufacture of O-tolyl-biguanide, exported for use in paint and soap manufacture	3,000

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the licence applications he has received for dumping industrial waste in the North sea in 1989 (a) from January to June and (b) from June onwards; if he will list the substances, quantities and companies involved; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The information is as follows:

	Material	Tonnage
January to June
Fisons PLC	Wash waters from the synthesis of Intal, a treatment for asthma and allergies	6,000
Imperial Chemicals Industries PLC	Waste from pharmaceutical manufacture	6,000
Tate & Lyle	Filtration sludge from sugar refining	33,000
Sterling Organics Ltd.	Aqueous residues from preparation of paracetamol	42,000
Orsynetics Ltd.	Salt solution from the manufacture of O-tolyl biguanide, exported for use in paint and soap manufacture	3,000
Fisons PLC[1]	Distillation waste from pharmaceutical manufacture	1,000
Formica Ltd.	Phenol washings from laminate manufacture	800
Fine Organics Ltd.	Effluent from pharmaceutical production	8,000
A. H. Marks Ltd.[1]	Neutralised acetone/water mixture from formulation of organic chemicals	999
BP Petroleum Development[1]	Used saline drilling mud	1,000
British Coal	Minestone	150,000
British Coal	Minestone	150,000
CEGB	Pulverised fuel ash	36,000 (part year)
CEGB	Pulverised fuel ash	290,000 (part year)
[1]—	Solid waste from boric acid production	200,000

	Material	Tonnage
July to November
Chorley Bleaching Co. Ltd.[1]	Waste from bleaching cotton	100
ICI Chemicals & Polymers Ltd.	Acid ammonium sulphate effluent from acrylics production	165,000
Allied Colloids Ltd.	Acid ammonium sulphate effluent from acrylics production	15,000
Woolcombers Ltd.	Waste from washing wool	999
Chlor Chem Ltd.	Acidic effluent from production of water treatment chemicals	1,000
Robinson Bros[1]	Caustic liquor from manufacture of pharmaceutical intermediates	70
British Coal	Minestone	1,250,000
British Coal	Minestone	525,000
British Coal	Minestone	525,000
CEGB	Pulverised fuel ash	50,000
CEGB	Pulverised fuel ash	500,000
Jackson's Fuel Co. Ltd.	Washed sand	7,500

[1] Licences to expire by end of 1989.

[2] Application not approved. Information on the applicant was received in confidence.

Lindane and Pentachlorophenol

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if any new scientific or medical evidence is under consideration by the Advisory Committee on Pesticides on the link between the development of aplastic anaemia and Lindane and Pentachlorophenol.

Mr. Maclean: The Health and Safety Executive is evaluating available data on aplastic anaemia and Lindane. The matter is expected to come before the Advisory Committee on Pesticides in 1990-91.

Hens

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what regulations control the disposal of laying hens slaughtered under the salmonella control regulations.

Mr. Maclean: The Animal Health Act 1981 as applied by the Zoonoses Order 1989 provides that where an animal, including a bird, has been slaughtered under the Act at the Ministers discretion, the carcase of the animal shall belong to him and shall be buried, or sold, or otherwise disposed of by him, or as he directs, as the conditions of the animal or carcase and the other circumstances may require or admit.

Food Safety Directorate

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the cost to industry and the consumer of the work of the food safety directorate.

Mr. Maclean: The food safety directorate will strengthen my Department's organisation for dealing with food safety issues. This reorganisation of work does not involve costs to industry or the consumer.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the interested parties he consulted before establishing the food safety directorate.

Mr. Maclean: I did not consult any interested parties before setting up the food safety directorate, but I did take into account the views put to me by a number of individuals and organisations that the large amount of food safety and similar regulatory work undertaken by my Department should be more clearly identified and brought together.

High-density Baling

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what studies he has made of the use of refuse in high-density baling for coastal defence work and land reclamation.

Mr. Curry: My Department has not carried out any studies on the use of high-density baled refuse for these purposes. We support adoption of new techniques that offer improved protection, lower costs or both. However, at first sight there seems to be some question as to the suitability of such material for coastal defence work. For example, there is a possibility of microbiological activity within the bale which could lead to voids being created and a reduction in the density of the bale, which in turn would put in question the structural integrity of the defence. Further, possible leaching of harmful substances from such bales could cause pollution in a marine environment.

Bread Prices

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on (a) the increases in bread prices in each of the last three years and (b) the price of wheat, in real, actual and percentage terms for each of the last three years.

Mr. Curry: The information requested is set out in the following table. The 1989 figures are based on information for the first 10 months and are not strictly comparable with those of earlier years.

	Actual price of standard white wrapped and sliced loaf (800 g)				Weighted average price of United Kingdom wheat at point of sale[1]

Artificial Bovine Somatotropin

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what information he has concerning the incidence of mastitis in dairy cows subject to artificial bovine somatotropin treatment;

(2) what information he has concerning the effect of bovine somatotropin treatment on the fecundity of trial animals.

Mr. Maclean: In addition to the published material on these subjects my Department receives data provided by companies in support of their product licence applications.

Fishing Industry

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is yet in a position to make a statement on a decommissioning scheme for the fishing industry.

Mr. Curry: Not yet. I shall make an announcement as soon as possible.

Pesticide Ban

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will issue a ban on Alar, Tecnazene, Maneb, Mancozeb and Zineb.

Mr. Maclean: No. These substances are under review by the advisory committee on pesticide whose recommendations to Ministers are based on scientific evidence. The evidence to date does not indicate that approval for these substances should be withdrawn.

Food Standards

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will launch a survey on the standard of potatoes, lettuces, blackcurrants, tomatoes, apples and pears.

Mr. Curry: I have at present no plans to do so.

Parents for Safe Food

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture Fisheries and Food when he last met representatives from Parents for Safe Food.

Mr. Maclean: I have not met representatives from Parents for Safe Food but officials from my Department specialising in pesticides met a representative from PSF on 18 October 1989.

Habitat Sites

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress is being made with incentives to farmers and woodland managers to maintain and enhance important habitat sites of wildlife value.

Mr. Curry: My Department has introduced a number of grant schemes that provide incentives for the protection of existing, or creation of new, wildlife habitats.

The introduction of the environmentally sensitive area schemes in 1987 was designed to conserve and enhance landscape and wildlife interests in areas vulnerable to changes in farming practices. The farm woodland scheme, introduced last year, has as one of its objectives the enhancement of the landscape and the creation of new wildlife habitats. The farm and conservation grant scheme (introduced in February this year) places particular emphasis on conservation and the needs of the environment. As far as woodlands are concerned, it is a requirement of the Forestry Commission's woodland grant scheme that proper account should be taken of the needs of nature conservation. In this connection, the commission will shortly be publishing comprehensive guidelines on the nature conservation aspects of woodland management.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps were taken when the drainage system at Shirley Pool/Rushy Moor site of special scientific interest near Doncaster was installed to avoid damage to the site and habitat; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Proposals were submitted to my Department by the Dun drainage commissioners in 1981 to improve the land drainage within the catchments of the Thistle Goit and Haywood pumping stations. These included works to deepen the drains running through the Shirley Pool/Rushy Moor SSSI. In order to retain the marshland and wet woodland habitats within the site, the proposals were revised by agreement with the Nature Conservancy Council and my Department, to divert the main flow to deepened channels outside the SSSI. Drainage work within the Shirley Pool SSSI was thereby avoided.

Lead Contamination

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many farms in England and Wales placed under restriction following the recent contamination by lead of foodstuffs were subsequently shown not to have contaminated milk or meat products; if he will estimate the financial loss involved to producers; whether he intends introducing a compensation scheme; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is his estimate of the total financial loss so far incurred by milk producers subject to restrictions, following suspected use of lead-contaminated imported feedstuffs.

Mr. Maclean: A total of 2,069 farms in England and Wales have at some time been subject to restrictions. Of these, 367 were able to be released in the light of further information from feed suppliers. As at 29.11.89, 1,052 dairy farms have been released from milk restrictions as a result of the milk testing programme and arrangements are now in hand to allow the orderly release of animals from slaughter and movement restrictions subject to a number of further checks, including blood testing of some animals. Reliable information on the costs to the industry are not available and there is no provision under the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985 for the payment of compensation.

Food Advisory Committees

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the legislation and relevant sections under which he has power to set up advisory committees on food.

Mr. Maclean: There is none. Successive Governments have maintained advisory committees on food matters without the need for legislation.

East Anglia

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from East Anglian farmers since 1 August on the state of agriculture in East Anglia.

Mr. Gummer: I frequently meet East Anglian farmers, both in my constituency and elsewhere, and receive numerous representations from them on agricultural matters. I have also discussed in detail these problems with hon. Members concerned—particularly with my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire, South-East (Mr. Paice).

Global Warming

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps are being taken to assess the impact of global warming on British agriculture; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: My Department is aiming to fund research to identify the sensitivity of key sectors of British agriculture to variations in climate so that when regional climate change forecasts become available, an assessment of the impact can be made. In addition my Department is involved in research to monitor sea level trends and last year about half of the budget for river and coastal engineering research was spent on projects designed to provide a better understanding of the coastal environment and add to the knowledge needed for improving coastal defences.

Isle of Man

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what fishing limits around the Isle of Man have been agreed for the period commencing 1 January 1990.

Mr. Curry: The present three-mile limit around the Isle of Man will apply on 1 January 1990. Consideration, including in relation to fishing, on how the provisions for a 12 mile territorial sea around the Isle of Man contained in the Territorial Sea Act 1987 might be implemented is in hand.

Animal Exports

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce a system of licensing for carriers of live animals intended for export; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: I do not intend to introduce licensing since this would add little to existing controls related to unnecessary suffering. Such a system would almost certainly contravene the Treaty of Rome.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food under what provision he launched his recent investigation into the death of beagles being exported for research purposes in the pharmaceutical industry; if he has yet concluded his investigation; what action he proposes to take; and what powers he has to regulate such trade.

Mr. Maclean: The investigation has now concluded. Charges are being considered under the Transit of Animals (General) Order 1973, as amended in 1988, and the Protection of Animals Act 1911. Under section 39 of the Animal Health Act 1981 Ministers may by order provide for regulating the export of animals from Great Britain in the interests of animal welfare.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has concerning the numbers and species of live animals being exported from the United Kingdom for use in research projects; and, in respect of both species and numbers, what is the importing country.

Mr. Maclean: The numbers of animals exported for research purposes are not collected centrally.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the number of slaughter animals exported live by species, to each of the member states of the European Economic Community during 1988 and the current year to date.

Mr. Maclean: Animals inspected and certified as fit for transportation prior to export from Great Britain were as follows:

1. During 1988

	For immediate slaughter		For further fattening
Destination	Cattle	Sheep	Cattle	Calves	Sheep	Pigs
Belgium/Luxembourg	99	7,193	—	—	—	—

West Germany	23	4,215	299	463	—	—
TOTAL EEC	136	262,647	323	234,651	184,120	—

2. During the period 1 January to 30 September 1989

	For immediate slaughter		For further fattening
Destination	Cattle	Sheep	Cattle	Calves	Sheep	Pigs
Belgium/Luxembourg	48	13,460	—	50	—	—

TOTAL EEC	274	125,743	1,445	191,797	132,474	24

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the number of slaughter animals, exported live, by species, to each non European Economic Community country during 1988 and the current year to date.

Mr. Maclean: Farm livestock for slaughter are not licensed for export to countries outside the EEC.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the total number of animals of each species exported from the United Kingdom in 1988 and 1989 to date for the purposes of (a) slaughter, (b) fattening, and (c) breeding.

Mr. Maclean: Statistics for the United Kingdom do not distinguish between animals for fattening and those for immediate slaughter. The information is as follows:

	Breeding	Other	Total
1. During 1988
Cattle	7,690	259,101	266,791
Sheep	11,310	497,603	508,913
Pigs	11,311	47,692	59,003
2. January-September 1989
Cattle	4,906	198,824	203,730
Sheep	8,752	318,820	327,572
Pigs	11,946	66,775	78,721

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what powers he has to regulate the export of live puppies; and what information he has concerning the numbers and destination of such exports by country of import during 1988 and 1989 to date.

Mr. Maclean: Powers exist in the Animal Health Act 1981 to regulate by order the export of animals from Great Britain in the interests of animal welfare. I have no information on the numbers of exported puppies.

ENERGY

Offshore Workers (Safety)

112. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what provision his Department is making for safety and survival courses for offshore workers.

Mr. Peter Morrison: It is for an employer to ensure that his employees are adequately qualified and trained for the duties they are required to undertake. The Health and Safety at Work etc Act 1974 places a duty on an employer to provide the necessary instruction, training and supervision to ensure, as far as is reasonably practicable, the health, safety and welfare at work of his employees.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of Statement for Energy (1) what encouragement he is giving to commercial organisations wishing to set up wind electricity generators on Welsh farms;

(2) what assistance has been given by the Government to commercial organisations in Wales to install wind energy generating capacity which can be sold to the grid.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My Department has not given any assistance to commercial organisations in Wales to install wind energy generators for the purpose of subsequent sale of electricity to the grid. Such installations will however be eligible for consideration under the non-fossil fuel obligation.

We have collaborated with a number of organisations in the design and construction of experimental wind turbine generators at the CEGB's test site at Carmarthen bay, and we are also collaborating with the CEGB in a project to construct an experimental wind farm at Capel Cynon.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much money has been spent in Wales on sources of renewable energy over the past three years.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The table includes expenditure by the Department of Energy over the past three years on projects based in Wales such as the 160 kW vertical axis wind turbine at Carmarthen bay, and work undertaken by Welsh contractors, for example, university of Cardiff.

Year	£
1986-87	656,935
1987-88	854,459
1988-89	833,020

Information is not available to say precisely how much of this expenditure was in Wales.

Mining Statistics

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will state the numbers of men employed underground in privately owned mines on 3 April 1989 as recorded in the registers which are required to be maintained under the terms of section 2(1) of the 1908 Act.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Daily tallies for the number of men working underground in licensed mines are not collected centrally. British Coal does, however, give a total figure for the end of each financial year in its annual report and accounts, copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the average number of hours worked below ground by mineworkers and deputies in 1978 and in 1988.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for British Coal. I have asked the chairman of British Coal to write to the hon. Member.

ENVIRONMENT

Council Housing

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those local authorities which have sold fewer than 10 per cent. of their council house stock.

Mr. Chope: Of those authorities which have provided a complete record of their sales from April 1979 to March 1989, only two authorities, Oldham and Blackburn, report sales of less than 10 per cent. of their stock. Six authorities —Arun, Bracknell Forest, Bromley, Crawley, Fenland and Havant—report sales of more than 35 per cent. of their stock.

There are 12 authorities where an incomplete total of sales between April 1979 and March 1989 shows that less than 10 per cent. of their stock has been sold, but who may have exceeded the 10 per cent. threshold if unreported sales were to be included.

I have today laid a table in the Library giving available information up to March 1989. It shows year by year information for each authority since 1984-85, together with cumulative figures since April 1979.

Over 1 million local authority dwellings (about a fifth of the England 1979 stock) had been sold by the end of March 1989, the majority to sitting tenants, and sales are continuing at a high level. Information on total year by year sales of local authority houses and flats in England is listed in the following table. The number of flats sold in 1988-89 was greater than in any previous financial year and the number of houses sold was the largest since 1982-83.

Sales of local authority dwellings England[1]

Year	Houses	Flats
1979-80	52,386	1,162
1980-81	66,946	1,282
1981-82	125,200	2,967
1982-83	175,334	5,902
1983-84	113,613	8,430
1984-85	85,487	5,885
1985-86	76,088	6,230
1986-87	77,677	8,454

1988-89	116,933	26,895

Year	Houses	Flats

[1] Includes some small transfers to housing associations.

[2] Excludes the sale of 5,480 dwellings by the London Residuary Body to Thamesmead Town Ltd.

Methane

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to reduce methane being released into the atmosphere.

Mr. Trippier: The sources of methane emissions to the atmosphere are diverse. Some are natural, some man-made. Our understanding of the contribution from different sources and the way methane behaves in the atmosphere require further research, which is now under way. The Department of Energy has a programme to promote the use of landfill methane as an energy source.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the relative impact of (a) methane and (b) chlorofluorocarbon gases on global warming.

Mr. Trippier: The relative importance of all the major greenhouse gases for global warming in the past, at present and in the future is discussed in detail in the booklet "Global Climate Change", published by the Department in association with the Meteorological Office in October. Copies have been placed in the Library of the House.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the factors in the 1989-90 scheme to determine community charge support which are different from or additional to factors used in earlier years to calculate local government support.

Mr. Chope: There are two main differences. First, the rate support grant system aims to equalise resources between authorities measured in terms of rateable values, whereas the new revenue support grant system equalises resources measured in terms of numbers of community charge payers in an area. Secondly, there has been a major review of the method of distributing grant between authorities and as a result the following additional factors will now be taken into account: the numbers of residents aged 11 or over, aged 65 to 74, aged 75 to 84 and aged 85 or over; the proportion of children aged under 16 years living in private households in rented accommodation; the number of residents aged 65 or over in independent registered residential homes whose primary function is reported as the care of elderly people, elderly people who are mentally infirm and elderly and other people who are handicapped; the number of fire false alarm calls; current expenditure on coast protection.

The full extent of the differences can be identified from a comparison of the GRE indicators given in appendix 2 to annex J of the Rate Support Grant Report (England) 1989-90 with those given in annex A to the draft Revenue Support Grant Distribution Report (England) issued on 6 November by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Mr. Wall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what help will be available under the poll tax transitional relief scheme to students presently living in a hall of residence.

Mr. Chope: Full-time students will be liable to pay only one fifth of the community charge of the area where they live during term time. Students will be entitled to receive transitional relief, whatever type of accommodation they occupy, provided a comparison between rates and either one or two assumed community charges (depending on the number of community chargepayers in the property) shows an increase of more than £156 a year. Any student entitled to relief will receive it at the rate of one fifth of the normal rate to match the reduced community charge liability.

Football Membership Scheme

Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress there has been on the preparation of the national membership scheme for football specators.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend and I had a helpful meeting with the president of the Football League and the chairman of the Football Association on 14 November. They made it clear that it was still their wish that the football authorities should have first refusal to form the company that will be appointed as the Football Membership Authority. We confirmed that it was our hope and expectation that they would do so on the basis which had been agreed—that the Secretary of State would approve the composition of the authority; that the body appointed was willing and able to produce a scheme which he could approve and which satisfied the requirements of the legislation and that he was satisfied about the implementation timetable.

We propose to hold further discussions shortly with the football authorities about the membership of the FMA. The FMA will be appointed following parliamentary approval of the commencement order bringing section 3 of the Football Spectators Act 1989 into operation. We intend that the commencement order should be laid and debated in the new year, after the publication of Lord Justice Taylor's final report on the Hillsborough inquiry.

I welcome the progress which the working party set up by the football authorities has made in its preparations for the national membership scheme. I understand that it has now issued an invitation to tender to the seven companies and consortia which are bidding for the contract to operate the scheme.

I share the hope of the football authorities that it will be possible, from a wide range of financial options, to meet the requirements of the national membership scheme, on a self-financing basis, at no direct cost to football clubs. If the clubs adopt a positive approach to promoting the scheme among their supporters, there is every prospect that this approach will be pursued successfully. The Government have provided a share of the costs incurred on the preparation of the scheme in advance of Royal Assent to the Football Spectators Act. The full funding of its implementation will be football's responsibility.

It will be for the Football Membership Authority, in conjunction with the chosen supplier, to come forward with an acceptable timetable for the implementation of the scheme. The Government want the scheme to be in place as soon as practicable. We will approve its introduction when we are satisfied that it will be effective, workable and safe. Before that can happen, both the Football Membership Authority and the Football Licensing Authority will need to be confident, among other considerations: that the technology has been tested properly; that the flow of spectators through the turnstiles will proceed smoothly; that the implications for the stewarding and policing of designated football matches have been fully assessed including the methodology for handling invalid cards, and that any structural alterations which may be needed at individual grounds have been made. The Football Licensing Authority will not license a ground to hold a designated match unless the requirements of the national membership scheme have been complied with and they are fully satisfied on safety requirements.

I look forward to continuing co-operation between the Government and the football authorities in preparing for the implementation of the scheme and to the major contribution which the scheme will make to break the link between football and hooliganism.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many planning appeals have been made in each of the last three years; if he will express these figures in terms of percentage increase; how many planning appeal inspectors have been in post in each of the last three years; and what percentage of appeals within the last 12 months have been heard within the time limit prescribed by the relevant legislation.

Mr. Moynihan: The information requested is as follows:

Planning Appeals

Year	Planning appeals received	Percentage increase over previous year Per cent.
1986-87	19,856	11·3
1987-88	22,482	13·2
1988-89	28,659	27·4

Salaried inspectors in post as at 31 December

	Number
1987	166
1988	173
[1]1989	190

[1] As at 30 November 1989.

A total of 1,424 planning appeals have so far been processed under the Town and Country Planning (Inquiries Procedure) Rules 1988 and the Town and Country Planning (Determination by Inspectors) (Inquiries Procedure) Rules 1988. In 724 cases (50·8 per cent. of the total) the inquiry was held within the timetable set out in the rules.

Tourism

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to ensure that local authority districts in which a large part of the income comes from tourism are not penalised for this in the revenue support grant calculations for 1990-91.

Mr. Chope: In the proposals for revenue support grant for 1990-91, no account is taken of income from tourism in calculating individual authorities' standard spending assessments.

Elderly People

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to exempt from the community charge elderly people who are being looked after in private homes and who would otherwise require residential or nursing care at public expense.

Mr. Chope: No. Any elderly person being looked after in the community will be eligible for community charge benefit in their own right if they meet the income and capital requirements of the benefit scheme. Benefit can cover up to 80 per cent. of the community charge bill, and any elderly person receiving income support will have included in it an amount reflecting the fact that they have to pay the other 20 per cent. Thus, there should be no financial incentive for people caring for elderly relatives to seek to place them in residential or nursing care. We have recently announced changes in the regulations to ensure that people being cared for in the community will receive the same relief from the standard community charge as those in residential care homes.

Satellite Dishes

Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which planning rules apply to the erection of satellite television dishes on blocks of flats; whether he has any intention to change these rules; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Part 25 of the General Development Order 1988 gives permission for up to two satellite antennae up to 90 cm in diameter on blocks of flats over 15 m high, provided the antennae are sited to minimise their visual effect. That permission does not apply in conservation areas, national parks, areas of outstanding natural beauty or the Broads. My right hon. Friend hopes to issue a consultation paper on planning controls over satellite antennas and other telecommunications development within the next 2 months.

Noise Control

Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance he intends to give to local authorities on the control of noise pollution; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: My Department is currently consulting local authorities about the adequacy of their powers to control noise nuisance under the Control of Pollution Act 1974, with particular reference to acid house and similar parties. We have already received helpful responses from the Association of District Councils, the Association of Metropolitan Authorities and the London Boroughs Association. Together with other Government Departments, we shall take whatever action is necessary to strengthen the law in relation to noise nuisance generally. We will also give clear guidance to local authorities about exercising their powers.

College Green

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has authorised the erection of the double-decker media hut on the green opposite the Palace of Westminster; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations he has had, concerning the erection of temporary huts on College green; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Permission was given to ITV and Channel 4 to put up the hut for broadcasting purposes associated with the state opening of Parliament and the experimental televising of the House of Commons. Further permission was given for the hut to remain in place until after the election for the leadership of the Conservative party. It will be dismantled and removed on Thursday 7 December. It is usual to allow the media to put temporary facilities on Abingdon street gardens to cover important events.

European Environment Agency

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the United Kingdom will participate in the proposed European Environment Agency; whether United Kingdom statistics on environmental damage would be made available to East European countries through such an agency and vice versa; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Unanimous political agreement was reached at the Environment Council which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State attended in Brussels on 28 November. There is a firm commitment that the United Kingdom will participate in the agency's work.

The EC regulation, endorsed at the Environment Council, makes specific reference to participation of non-EC countries, such as EFTA and the eastern bloc, in the work of the agency. Participation will be based on agreements drawn up between individual third countries and the agency, requiring unanimous agreement by the Council. Such agreements should allow for United Kingdom statistics on environment damage to be made available to east European countries through the agency and vice versa.

Forestry Industry Committee

184. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the chairman of the Forestry Industry Committee of Great Britain; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend has not held any meetings with the committee, but I have received a copy of its report on "Options for British forestry 1989-1990"; and the recommendations in this are being considered by the Forestry Commission and other relevant Departments.

Mersey Tunnel

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to reply to the Mersey tunnel's case for Government assistance which has recently been sent to him.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 4 December 1989]: I have been asked to reply.

We are considering Merseytravel's request for Government financial assistance. A decision on the case it has presented will be made as soon as we have considered it fully.

THE ARTS

Arts Council and Crafts Council (Merger)

Dr. Glyn: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received about the merger of the Arts Council and the Crafts Council; and if he will take steps to ensure that the balance of funds available to the Arts Council and the Crafts Council will remain the same.

Mr. Luce: I have received many representations on this issue. No decision will be taken until the new year, but I have already given indicative figures of the level of support for the crafts for the next three years, in my grant announcement of 15 November.

VAT

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when serious misdeclaration penalty and default interest for value added tax will be introduced; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: Customs and Excise has been publicising, and traders have been preparing for, the introduction of the final phase of the Keith civil penalty regime from 1 January 1990. In the light of the recent consultation exercise of the VAT (Accounting and Records) Regulations, and of the technical arrangements for introducing the new regime, I have been giving further careful consideration to the timing.

The regulations, incorporating important changes beneficial to business, have been laid before the House today and will come into force as planned on 1 January 1990. As part of the procedures, traders will have the opportunity to make separate voluntary disclosure of their larger errors to Customs, thereby avoiding penalty, rather than, as at present, including them on their VAT returns or adjusting their VAT accounts. In order that all traders may become familiar with the new regime, I have decided that serious misdeclaration penalty and default interest will not be introduced until 1 April 1990.

Employee Share Ownership

110. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the provisions for encouraging employee share ownership in the United Kingdom and in other member states of the European Community.

Mr. Lilley: Major legislation providing tax reliefs to encourage the spread of employee share ownership in the United Kingdom was introduced in the Finance Acts of 1978, 1980, 1984 and 1989. These provisions have been improved or extended in most of the intervening years. By March 1988, they had resulted in more than 1·75 million employees receiving shares or interests in shares with an initial market value of £4 billion. The available information in other European Community countries is limited, but we are aware that Belgium, Denmark, France, the Republic of Ireland and the Netherlands also provide fiscal incentives to promote employee share ownership.

Civil Service (Southend)

111. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many persons are employed in Civil Service duties in Southend-on-Sea; and what was the comparable figure 10 years ago.

Mr. Ryder: At 1 April 1989, there were 3,875 non-industrial civil servants (full-time equivalents) serving in Southend-on-Sea. This compares with a total of 4,924 at 1 April 1979.

Taxation

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total tax burden (including value added tax and indirect taxes) on the average family at the present time; and what was the burden in 1979.

Mr. Lilley: The total tax burden (excluding rates) on a married man with two children on average male earnings is estimated to be about 33 per cent. of gross earnings in 1989-90, compared with around 32 per cent. in 1978-79. The corresponding figures for a married man with no children on average male earnings are about 38½ and 39½ per cent. respectively. If real earnings had remained at their 1978-79 levels, both family types would now be paying a considerably lower proportion of their earnings in tax than in 1978-79: down to 29½ per cent. for the married man with two children, and down to 36½ per cent. for the married man with no children.

Pensions

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans the Government have to review inequalities in occupational pension levels among retired public servants of the same grade or rank who retired in different years.

Mr. Ryder: None.

Interest and Exchange Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what effect he estimates that the increase in interest rates and the exchange rate will have on incomes in the banking sector and in industries wholly or mainly engaged in producing importable and exportable goods.

Mr. Ryder: I have no sectoral estimates of the type requested.

Married Couples (Taxation)

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what provisions he has made in the married couple's allowance to be introduced in April 1990 for those couples who choose to maintain independent financial affairs in marriage.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 4 December 1989]: Under independent taxation, husbands and wives will be treated as individual taxpayers, and their incomes and gains will be taxed independently. The arrangements for giving the married couple's allowance enable couples to maintain independent financial affairs.

Retail Prices Index

Mr. Wray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all the European Community countries which do not include (a) mortgage interest rates and (b) house rent payments in the calculations for their retail prices indices.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 4 December 1989]: Of European Community countries, Germany, France, Italy, the Netherlands, Belgium, Luxembourg, Spain, Portugal, Denmark and Greece do not include mortgage interest payments in their calculation of the retail prices index. Only Portugal does not include house rent payments.

Mr. Wray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what items have been (a) taken out and (b) incorporated into the calculations in the retail prices index, for each year since 1979.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 4 December 1989]: Only minor changes have been made to the coverage of the retail prices index since 1979 the most important of which took place at the beginning of 1987 when, following recommendations of the Retail Prices Index Advisory Committee, the index was restructured to incorporate a number of items on which expenditure was relatively small and which had previously been excluded. The items in question were:

fees paid by households for educational and recreational courses;
subscriptions to trade unions and professional associations;
non-food expenditure on pets;
fees for medical, dental and optical treatment and the provision of spectacles;
premiums for house contents insurance;
expenditure on hobbies not covered by any other section of the index.

In addition housing subsidies, which used to be partly included in the calculation of the retail prices index, were excluded from 1987. At the begining of 1989, the coverage of fees was extended to take account of new charges for eye tests and dental checks, and in April 1989 community charge payments were brought into the retail prices index in respect of Scotland in place of domestic rates.

The methods by which the retail prices index has been compiled have remained essentially unchanged. Price changes are obtained for a selection of goods and services and this selection is continually updated in order to maintain the index as a reliable and representative measure of the change in prices across all the goods and services commonly bought by consumers.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Paice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the extent of United Kingdom manufacturing companies' investment in research and development; and how this has changed since 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 4 December 1989]: Figures for United Kingdom manufacturing companies' investment in research and development from 1978 to 1987 are included in the relevant aggregates of intramural expenditure on research and development carried out in United Kingdom industry which were published in British Business on 3 February 1989, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Figures for 1979 are not available. 1987 is the latest year for which figures are published.

Wealth Tax

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what contribution is made by the annual wealth tax on housing in West Germany and by domestic rates in the United Kingdom in the last year for which figures are available; and what would be the yield of a wealth tax in (a) housing and (b) other assets in the United Kingdom at the rate charged in West Germany.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 30 November 1989]: The latest figures for receipts from the annual taxes on immovable property and on net wealth in West Germany are available in "Revenue Statistics of OECD Member Countries 1965-1988". The net payments of domestic rates in the United Kingdom were £7,553 million in 1987-88.

An estimate of the yield of a wealth tax applied to assets in the United Kingdom using the West German tax rate and system of allowances, exemptions, reliefs and valuation rules could only be provided at disproportionate costs.

Duty-free Allowances

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he is making to the European Economic Community on the future of duty-free allowances for travellers within the European Economic Community; what studies have been carried out by his Department of the costs of benefits of (a) increase and (b) abolition; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 30 November 1989]: The Commission recently proposed transitional increases in the travellers' allowances for goods obtained duty and tax-paid in another EC country. Between 1990 and 1992 limits would rise in three stages from 300 to 600 cigarettes, 1·5 to 3 litres of spirits and from £250 to about £1,000 for goods subject only to VAT.

The Government welcome these proposals and would indeed prefer to see a single early increase rather than three stages; but decisions have not yet been taken by the Council. An immediate increase to the levels proposed would cost about £17 million a year.

The Commission has made no proposals affecting allowances for passengers arriving from outside the EC, where the Government would also like to see higher limits. Nor have proposals been made affecting goods obtained duty—and tax-free within the EC, but the Commission's assumption is that duty-free shopping for intra-EC travel will cease after 1992.

Official Secrets Act (Correspondence)

Mr. Richard Shepherd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer why two letters, dated 30 August and 23 October, from the American Privacy Foundation in Washington DC to the Campaign for Freedom of Information in London, on the subject of the Official Secrets Act and the interception of communications, have been opened for inspection by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 1 December 1989]: Her Majesty's Customs and Excise have powers to require the opening by the Post Office of any postal packet or letter arriving in the United Kingdom. These powers are used only in the pursuit of contraband and especially drugs which are frequently discovered in the mail. Drugs such as heroin, cocaine and LSD are often concealed in flat, apparently innocent, letters and packages.

Detection in these circumstances is extremely difficult and is made no easier by the possibility that packets containing certain drugs may contaminate other mail. Innocent letters and packages may be opened for internal examination, but will be resealed immediately if it is apparent that no contraband is present.

The size of the drug threat in the mail may be judged from the fact that 2,000 seizures of drugs have been made in a single year at one postal depot alone. Attempts to evade customs controls have led drug smugglers to use ingenious and sophisticated methods. They have been known to address a letter or package to a famous or highly respected person or organisation in the hope that it will not be examined, arrangements having been made for it to be extracted from the mail before delivery.

No letters are opened for examination at Customs' request for any other reasons than to discover goods prohibited by law.

Rating Reform

Mr. Gould: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what gain in revenue arises by virtue of the termination under the poll tax rules of the right of self-employed people to claim their rates liability income tax; and what is the estimated average loss to the self-employed.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 1 December 1989]: The introduction of the community charge will not affect the income tax treatment of business rates payable on non-domestic property. These rates will continue to be deductible in computing profits for tax purposes. No deduction will, however, be available in respect of the personal community charge payable by persons who use their homes partly for business purposes, because the charge is not a business expense but is personal to the individual concerned. Information is not available centrally upon which to base an estimate of the additional income tax which may be payable in consequence.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Family Credit

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people in Northern Ireland are currently in receipt of family credit; and, of these, how many were advised in writing to return their books to central benefits branch because of the new regulations issued in October.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The number of families receiving family credit at 23 November 1989 was 14,131.

No family credit recipients were asked to return their order books because of the Family Credit, Housing Benefit and Income Support (General) (Amendment) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1989 which came into force on 1 October 1989 or because of the guidance from the chief adjudication officer issued recently on the interpretation of provisions in the main regulations on the treatment of expenses incurred in self-employed cases.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish the new regulations in respect of family credit applications which came into effect from 1 October, with reference to self-employed persons; and if he will make a copy available in the Library.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Family Credit, Housing Benefit and Income Support (General) (Amendment) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1989 which came into force on 1 October 1989 have been published and a copy is available in the Library. The regulations, which provide for payments of allowances to adopters under approved schemes to be disregarded in the calculation of income, cover but do not specifically refer to self-employed persons. Recent guidance for adjudication officers on the interpretation of provisions in the main regulations which deal specifically with self-employed cases has also been published and a copy is available in the Library.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what were the new regulations formulated in respect of family credit; and, of those whose books were requested for adjustment, how many received (a) an increase and (b) a decrease in allowance.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Family Credit, Housing Benefit and Income Support (General) (Amendment) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1989, which came into operation on 1 October 1989, provide for payments of allowances to adopters under approved schemes to be disregarded in the calculation of income for the purposes of family credit. In addition, the chief adjudication officer recently issued guidance on the interpretation of the Family Credit (General) Regulations (Northern Ireland) 1987, as amended, which provide for the calculation of the net profit of self-employed earners. Only expenses which are wholly and exclusively incurred for the purposes of the self-employment may be allowed in calculating the net profit. No order books have been requested for adjustment as a result of either the new regulations or the guidance.

Detainees

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many persons have been held under the Emergency Provisions Act and the Prevention of Terrorism Act, respectively, in Northern Ireland (a) between 1970 and 1975 and (b) between 1984 and 1989 for periods of less than 48 hours, for periods of between 48 hours and five days and for periods in excess of five days; and of those persons held, how many were subsequently charged with scheduled offences permitting trial before a non-jury court.

Mr. Cope: Readily available information is as follows:

Persons detained under the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Acts 1974, 1976, 1984 and 1989

Notes:

n.a.—Not available.

[1] The Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1974 came into force on 29 November 1974.

[2] Information up to 30 June 1989.

Comprehensive figures on the operation of the emergency provisions Acts are not available before 1975. Between 1984 and 31 March 1989, 3,589 individuals were arrested by the police using powers under section 11 of the Northern Ireland (Emergency Provisions) Act 1978 and detained for a maximum of 72 hours; 18 individuals were arrested by the police under section 13 of the Act; and 638 people were arrested by members of Her Majesty's forces under section 14 of the Act and held for a maximum of four hours (a number of whom were subsequently re-arrested under the PTA). In total, 655 individuals were charged with scheduled offences during the period as a result of these arrests. The powers under section 11 of the EPA were repealed in 1987.

Police and Criminal Evidence Order

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he intends to lay before Parliament the draft codes of practice under the Police and Criminal Evidence (Northern Ireland) Order 1989.

Mr. Cope: Draft codes of practice under article 65 of the PACE (NI) Order 1989 dealing with the exercise of police powers, and the detention, treatment, questioning and identification of persons in custody, were laid before both Houses of Parliament today.

An order bringing the codes into operation on 1 January 1990 will be laid shortly.

It had been the Government's intention to lay at the same time a draft of the code of practice on the tape-recording of police interviews with suspects; but this code will not now be laid in draft until the steering committee set up to implement and monitor the procedures has had an opportunity to evaluate the tape-recording pilot schemes which will get under way in the new year and to assess and consider the arrangements which would be appropriate for Northern Ireland.

When this has been completed the draft code of practice on tape-recording will be laid before Parliament and thereafter an appropriate order will be made placing (subject to parliamentary approval) the Royal Ulster Constabulary under a duty to tape-record interviews with suspects in accordance with the code.

Footpaths (Accidents)

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will list the number of cases (a) of applications made and (b) in which compensation was paid to persons who tripped on a footpath in each of the last three years in each council district, or if more convenient each housing executive district;

(2) what sums have been paid out in compensation by public bodies in Northern Ireland in each of the last three years to persons who alleged they had tripped and hurt themselves on footpaths.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answers 28 November 1989]: Information is not available in the precise form requested. The following table sets out the number of claims made for personal injury and compensation paid out in each of the three years requested.

Patrols

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will state the number of (a) Royal Ulster Constabulary patrols, (b) Regular Army patrols, (c) Ulster Defence Regiment patrols as a percentage of the total number of patrols carried out by the security forces, for each month since November 1985 and (d) Ulster Defence Regiment patrols which were accompanied by the Royal Ulster Constabulary, as a percentage of the total number of patrols conducted by the regiment, for each month since November 1985 and the dates by which he intends to ensure that (i) 70 per cent., (ii) 80 per cent., (iii) 90 per cent., (iv) 100 per cent. of Ulster Defence Regiment patrols will be accompanied by the Royal Ulster Constabulary.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 4 December 1989]: As I told the hon. Member on 23 October at column 305, information is not regularly collected in the form requested and cannot be provided except at disproportionate cost. The Government are committed to increasing the present level of RUC accompaniment of military patrols, especially those which are likely to come into direct contact with members of the community. But the question whether or not a particular patrol should be accompanied by the RUC is an operational matter, and it would not therefore be appropriate for the Secretary of State to lay down firm timetables of the kind envisaged in the hon. Member's question.

Traffic Flows

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will show for the latest available date, the number of vehicles passing along (a) the Ballyrobin road, (b) the Killead road and (c) the Oldstone road per 24 hour period; and if he will indicate the maximum and minimum hourly traffic flows.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Latest traffic survey figures are:

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Breath Testing

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Attorney-General what criteria the Crown prosecution service applies when undertaking the independent legal review of charges brought by police for alleged excess alcohol offences arising from breath tests administered to motorists stopped at random.

The Attorney-General: The CPS applies the criteria set out in the code for crown prosecutors. Accordingly, crown prosecutors must be satisfied that there is admissible evidence sufficient to allow a realistic prospect of a conviction before authorising continuance of the criminal proceedings. For this purpose the matters which it will take into account include the following:

(i) It is lawful for a police officer in uniform acting in the execution of his duty to require the driver of any vehicle on a road to stop.

(ii) A police officer who stops a vehicle on a road with the purpose of investigating whether its driver has alcohol in his body is acting in the execution of his duty.

(iii) It is accordingly lawful for a police officer in uniform to stop vehicles at random with that purpose, provided there is no malpractice such as oppression or capricious conduct on the part of the officer.

(iv) It is lawful for a police officer in uniform to require a driver who has been stopped in such circumstances to provde a specimen of breath for a breath test, provided that the officer has reasonable cause to suspect that the driver has alcohol in his body.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Special Educational Needs

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) at what stage pupils with special educational needs will be tested;

(2) whether special educational needs will be tested at seven, 11 and 16 years regardless of the level or attainment target they are working on at the time.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The national curriculum and its assessment arrangements will apply equally to all but the very small minority of pupils in respect of whom a statement provides otherwise or a statutory exception has been made.

The attainment targets, programmes of study and assessment arrangements are being designed to bring out positive achievement at all levels.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if (a) special schools will be expected to publish results and (b) schools will be expected to publish results of pupils with special educational needs.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Regulations under section 22 of the Education Reform Act concerning the publication of information about aggregate pupils' achievements under the national curriculum will be made in due course. My right hon. Friend will consider nearer the time whether special provision is appropriate for pupils with special educational needs.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will allow more time to be given for preparation of individual programmes for pupils with special educational needs within the national curriculum framework;

(2) if he will consider giving extra time for the disapplication procedures for special educational needs children;

(3) what consideration he has given to the problems of those SEN pupils who require developmental curriculums as opposed to academic ones.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The national curriculum requirements will not apply to pupils with statements of special educational needs until August 1990, one year later than for other pupils. This will allow time for statements to modify or disapply national curriculum requirements and for individual programmes to be prepared. We have no plans to extend the year's delay beyond August 1990.

Under section 18 of the Education Reform Act, a statement may modify or disapply any or all of the requirements of the national curriculum. My right hon. Friend expects statements containing modifications or disapplications to set out the alternative provision to be made. However, where exceptions have been made, maintained schools are still under a duty to ensure that the curricula they offer pupils are balanced and broadly based, in accordance with the requirements of section 1 of the ERA.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will consider a dispensation from the national curriculum for special educational needs children with severe learning difficulties and speech problems from taking a foreign language.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Section 18 of the Education Reform Act already makes provision for the national curriculum requirements to be lifted or modified for pupils with statements of special educational needs. This could include exemption from the modern foreign language requirements; but my right hon. Friend expects the benefits of learning a modern foreign language to be made available to as many children as possible.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what extra resources he is prepared to give to schools to help in teaching the national curriculum to pupils with special educational needs;

(2) what plans he has to allocate extra resources to mainstream schools to enable special needs children to have maximum access to the national curriculum;

(3) what plans he has to allocate extra resources to special schools in order to equip them to offer a broad, balanced curriculum to all children.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The cost of implementing the national curriculum will be met largely from the redirection of existing resources. However, we are giving local education authorities specific grant support for the introduction of the national curriculum. This financial year there will be support for over £100 million expenditure. It is for authorities to decide how much to spend to enable pupils with special educational needs, whether in mainstream or special schools, to have maximum access to the national curriculum and a broad, balanced curriculum.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he intends to take to ensure that when local education authority centrally retained funds are reduced from 10 to 7 per cent. the services provided by the local education authority to special needs children will not be adversely affected.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Under LMS, LEAs will retain the statutory duty to ensure that the requirements of statements of special educational need are fulfilled for those children who have such statements. A number of LEAs believe that the needs of statemented pupils can best be met by delegating resources to schools and have made appropriate proposals in their submitted LMS schemes. Others have indicated that they wish to retain central control of such resources. As LEAs move towards the target of reducing the proportion of funds retained centrally, it will remain for individual LEAs to judge whether the needs of pupils can best be met by delegating or retaining central control over resources and services for those with special needs.

Learning Difficulties

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if national priority training money will be made available to provide national curriculum training for all teachers to enable the most effective response to be made to the needs of children with significant learning difficulties.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Substantial support for training teachers to implement the national curriculum is available through the LEA training grants scheme. This support includes training in respect of national curriculum requirements as they relate to pupils with special educational needs.

Educational Psychologists

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science to what extent he proposes to make additional resources available to meet the extra demands made on educational psychologists in advising on modifications of the national curriculum for some children.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Modification to and disapplications of the national curriculum for children with statements of special educational needs are expected to occur only in exceptional cases. Advice in this area should not place any significant extra demands upon the schools psychological service.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he intends to take to ensure that the demands of statutory work on educational psychologists do not reduce the amount of time available to deal with the psychological interests of children who have the specific learning difficulties in dyslexia.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Local education authorities are responsible for the employment of educational psychologists in the maintained sector of education, and it is for them to ensure that adequate numbers are employed to meet local needs.

Psychological Services

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science under local management of schools what action he will be taking to ensure that psychological services continue to be available to all children and their families.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Under LMS, LEAs may choose whether to continue to manage centrally the provision of educational psychology services or to delegate the responsibility and resources for such provision to schools. LEAs will continue to have the statutory duty to secure the advice of educational psychologists when assessing children for the purposes of statements of special educational needs.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about the setting up of a committee of inquiry into teachers' pay and conditions; and what has been his response.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Professional Association of Teachers has recently suggested to my right hon. Friend that a committee of inquiry into teachers' pay and conditions should be established. My right hon. Friend, in reply, has made it clear that in his view this would not be appropriate.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many salary allowances to teachers have been awarded to teachers for good classroom practice without the acceptance of additional responsibilities since 1986.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Government have stressed from their introduction in 1987 the importance they attach to incentive allowances being used to reward teachers who demonstrate outstanding ability in the classroom. There is some evidence in the 1988 secondary school staffing survey that, in the first year of operation, a significant number of allowances were awarded to teachers for reasons other than the taking on of extra responsibilities.

PhD Students

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his Department's policy towards the recruitment of PhD students into research; and how the proposed changes in the funding of research departments will support this policy.

Mr. Jackson: The main objective of the Department's expenditure on the support of postgraduate research students is to secure an adequate supply of very highly qualified manpower for research in industry and academic institutions. This expenditure is administered by the research councils and the British Academy, which are best placed, in consultation with academic institutions and employers, to assess national needs for PhDs and to maintain the quality of postgraduate education and training.

The new funding arrangements to be introduced through the Universities Funding Council will help to improve management of resources for both teaching and research in universities. This will benefit all students, including PhD students.

Primary Schools (Statistics)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make it his policy to remove the requirement under the Education Reform Act for every primary school to compile comprehensive statistics and replace it with a sampling method.

Mrs. Rumbold: The recent HMI report "The Implementation of the National Curriculum in Primary Schools" pointed to the need for primary schools to pay more attention to the overall planning of time. The annual curriculum return (schedule 1 to the Education (School Curriculum and Related Information) Regulations 1989) will serve as a useful framework for schools in planning their curriculum provision and will also provide information about schools' use of time for local and national monitoring.

Magnet Schools (Bradford)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many visits his officials have made to Bradford during the past year, to date, to discuss magnet schools; and if he will list the names and designation of officials and the dates on which visits were made and the names of Bradford council elected members and officials they met.

Mrs. Rumbold: None.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the names of Ministers, Bradford council members, Bradford council officers and officials of his Department who met on 28 September to discuss Bradford's proposal for development support funding for magnet schools; where the meeting took place; what documents were passed to Ministers by Bradford council members; and if he will place copies of all such documents in the Library.

Mrs. Rumbold: I met Councillor Eric Pickles and Councillor Mike Gaunt at the Department's headquarters in London. It is not accepted practice to name officials of the Department, three of whom were also present. A copy of the document "Magnet Schools: Promoting Quality and Diversity in Bradford" was passed to me, and has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what response he has made to the proposal for development support funding for magnet schools in Bradford outlined in documents passed to his Minister of State by members of Bradford council on 28 September; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: At my meeting on 28 September, I noted with interest the plans being developed by Bradford council for a magnet schools initiative. The council subsequently submitted bids for specific grant and capital funding to support the initiative. The Government's response to these bids is set out in the reply that I have given today to a separate question from the hon. Member on the same subject.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what supplementary bid for local authority training grants scheme support in connection with magnet schools he has received for Bradford council; what is the total amount of this bid; when he expects to reach his decision on this bid; what other bids under other programes, linked to magnet schools, he has received from Bradford council; what is the total amount of all such bids; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: A supplementary bid amounting to £204,000 in 1990-91 has been received from Bradford for funds to enable the local education authority to carry out further training of its staff in preparation for the introduction of a magnet schools programme. The maxima of expenditure by local education authorities that will be supported by grant under the LEA training grants scheme in 1990-91 will be announced shortly. Bradford has already been informed that there was no prospect of the supplementary funds it was seeking being made available as this could only be done at the expense of another authority.

Bids under the education support grant programme for 1990-91 totalling about £1·25 million have also been received from Bradford in respect of the magnet schools programme. These are currently being considered; my right hon. Friend expects to announce ESG allocations for 1990-91 around the end of this year. In addition, Bradford's capital expenditure plans for 1990-91 include £1·5 million for school improvements related to a magnet schools programme. The annual capital guidelines for 1990-91 will be announced shortly.

Earth Sciences Departments

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many jobs are likely to be lost as a result of the rationalisation of earth sciences departments; where these are expected to occur; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Nationally, the rationalisation exercise will result in the creation of some 45 new posts. Implementation is a matter for the Universities Funding Council, in collaboration with the institutions concerned.

HEALTH

Child Care

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the brief provided to the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys for the study of child care needs; and how long he anticipates the research to take before it is completed.

Mr. Freeman: The survey being carried out by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys is designed to obtain a detailed picture of the arrangements parents make for the care of children under eight. The pattern of attendance at day nurseries, nursery schools and classes, primary schools and playgroups will be covered as will the use of child minders, relatives and friends to look after the children, inside and outside the home. Parents will be asked to express satisfaction or dissatisfaction with the arrangements and to say whether the arrangements represent their first choice. The survey will also collect information about the stability of arrangements. Questions will also be asked about attendance at clubs, etc. after school and arrangements made during school holidays.

The pilot survey work was carried out by the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys in October; the main fieldwork stage is planned for October-December 1990, in order to obtain accurate and recent data about the summer holidays. The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys expects to have completed the main part of the analysis about a year after the main fieldwork stage.

I would be happy to give the hon. Member further details, if she considers that would be helpful.

Food (Radiation)

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what checks or monitoring his Department carries out on radiation levels in food imported from eastern European countries, either direct or via other European Community countries, following the accident at Chernobyl; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Port health authorities are continuing to monitor radiation levels in food imports from countries outside the European Community in accordance with the latest European Council regulation (EC 3955/87 of 22 December 1987).

Opting Out (South Yorkshire)

Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the names of the hospitals in south Yorkshire which have shown an interest in opting out.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz) on 29 November at columns 297-300. There is, of course, no question of any hospital "opting-out" of the NHS.

BSE

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on links between bovine spongiform encephalopathy and meningitis.

Mr. Freeman: There are no known links between bovine spongiform encephalopathy in cattle and meningitis in humans.

District Health Authorities (Cuts)

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the number of district health authorities that will be cutting beds and operation lists before the end of the financial year.

Mr. Skinner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the number of district health authorities that will be cutting beds and operation lists before the end of the financial year.

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the number of district health authorities that will be cutting beds and operating lists before the end of the financial year.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We do not hold the information requested centrally. The provision of local health services is the responsibility of local health authorities subject to local needs and priorities.

Catheters

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will add catheters to the list of items exempt from prescription charges.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The present exemptions from prescription charges are for particular groups of people. They do not include exemptions for individual drugs or appliances, other than for contraceptive substances and listed contraceptive appliances. We have no plans to change these arrangements.

Child Abuse

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children were removed from the child abuse register in London in 1987-88.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information from the survey of child protection registers in the year ending 31 March 1988 is published in "Survey of Children and Young Persons on Child Protection Registers Year ended 31 March 1988". Copies are available in the Library.

The number of recorded deregistrations in Greater London in 1987-88 (excluding Greenwich and Westminster) was 2,905.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if each area covered by a social services department maintains a central register of children in the area who have been abused or are at risk from abuse.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Yes.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will break down the £7 million which is used for training of social services staff on child abuse.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The £7 million provided for the training of local authority staff working with children has been allocated as follows: £100,000—to fund the central training group on child sexual abuse, national workshops and other development and review work;

£2,140,000—flat rate allocation of £20,000 to all local authorities in England, except the City of London and Isles of Scilly, for improvements in their training infrastructure; £4,760,000—allocations to all local authorities in England based on the number of staff working with children. Details of allocations to individual local authorities have been placed in the Library.

Training programmes submitted by local authorities indicate that £4·6 million will be spent on general training and £2·3 million on training in child protection work including child sexual abuse.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce special assessment teams, composed of local authority health authority and police officials, to deal with the problem of child abuse.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is for the local authority, health authority and local police force jointly to consider the introduction of specialist assessment teams. The Department's guidance document "Working Together" (1988), copies of which are available in the Library, commends agencies to consider carefully the conclusions and recommendations of the report of the inquiry on child abuse in Cleveland 1987 on this issue.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will meet voluntary organisations concerned with children to discuss the setting up of a national register list of aid for children.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department regularly meets voluntary organisations with responsibilities in the child care field. I refer the hon. Member to my previous response to her of 15 November at column 338.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what services are available to a child or family removed from the child abuse register.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Children removed from the child protection register and their families are eligible for the full range of services provided by local authority social services departments and health authorities. Paragraph 5.29 of the Department's guidance document, "Working Together" (1988), copies of which are available in the Library, states:

> "removal of a child's name from the register should not lead to an automatic withdrawal or reduction in services. The risk of child abuse may have been eliminated or reduced but a variety of services may still be needed by the child and family, and in some cases the child will be in the care of the local authority either on a voluntary or compulsory basis".

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment is being made of the results of the Open university training package for training in recognition of child abuse.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: As the training pack has only been on the market since the end of March, it is too early to provide a full assessment of its impact. Sales of the training pack have been very encouraging; from the end of March 1989 to September 1989, 2,319 student packs and 620 tutor packs were sold. The training pack included an assessment module, and 1,000 students have so far registered to take part in the assessment exercise. Early results indicate that students' knowledge of child abuse is increased substantially after having completed the course.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the number of local authorities providing day nurseries, play groups, child minding, family aides, family centres and other facilities which can support and advise and aid in the prevention of child abuse within families.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Statistical information is collected annually from each local authority about day nurseries, play groups and child minders provided by the local authority. Information is sought about the number of premises/persons, the number of places and, for day nurseries and playgroups, the numbers on the register. Information is also sought about the number of children in voluntary or private play groups or day nurseries or with child minders who are placed and paid for by the local authority. This information is published, together with some details of private and voluntary provision. The most recent publication is "Children's Day Care Facilities at 31 March 1988; England" a copy of which is available in the Library.

Details of expenditure are also collected for each authority; these details cover expenditure on family centres as well as day nurseries, playgroups and child minders.

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many area child protection committees investigating child abuse there were in 1988.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In July 1988, the Department published a guidance document, "Working Together" and an accompanying circular (LAC(88)10/HC(88)38), copies of which are available in the Library, which called for the redesignation of area review committees as area child protection committees covering one local authority area. The process of redesignation continued into 1989, and involved the reorganisation of some larger area review committees into area child protection committees which were conterminous with local authority boundaries. There are currently 108 area child protection committees.

Bradford DHA

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he next intends to visit Bradford to meet the chairman of the district health authority.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has no plans at present to visit Bradford to meet the chairman of the health authority. I hope to visit Bradford in the new year.

NHS Costs

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the rate of increase of costs in the National Health Service in 1987, 1988 and 1989.

Mr. Freeman: Costs in the National Health Service increased by an estimated 7·9 per cent. in 1987-88 and by 10·1 per cent. in 1988-89. An estimate of increased costs in 1989-90 will not be available until after the current financial year has ended.

Disabled People

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy that before the implementation of section 42 of the National Health Service and Community Care Bill, there will have been the full implementation of sections 1, 2 and 3 of the Disabled Persons (Consultation, Representation and Services) Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We have always made it clear that further implementation of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986 could take place only if the necessary resources were available without jeopardising high priority social services. We are currently considering action to identify the resources which would be required to implement sections 1, 2 and 3 of the Act.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set up a statutory committee of voluntary organisations involved in the provision of care services to disabled people, of which disabled people themselves would be members.

Mr. Freeman: Although we have no plans to set up such a statutory committee, we will continue to consult the relevant voluntary organisations as and when appropriate.

Ambulance Dispute

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has visited any ambulance station to talk to ambulance personnel since the beginning of the dispute (a) at West Bridgford ambulance station, (b) in Nottingham and (c) nationally.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Neither I nor my colleagues have visited any ambulance stations since the beginning of the dispute. I have talked with staff from West Bridgford ambulance station at my constituency office.

NHS Reform

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the representations on the White Paper from patients and doctors by the Nottingham health authority.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We cannot identify separately from the information we hold the number of representations received from people living within each individual authority area.

Commercial Activities

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give an estimate for the income generated by each district health authority from commercial activities following the provisions of section 4 of the Health and Medicines Act.

Mr. Freeman: Section 7 of the Health and Medicines Act 1988 gives health authorities the power to generate additional income.

In the current year, we expect £28 million to be generated by the NHS in England. The average amount generated by each district will be about £140,000.

Aging

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how often meetings are held between Ministers and officials from different Government Departments to co-ordinate Government policy on aging and related issues.

Mr. Freeman: Meetings are not held regularly but as and when necessary and in order to consider issues which arise.

Devon (Inward Migration)

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what information the latest statistical forecast of high inward migration to Devon was based.

Mr. Freeman: Estimates of population for local and health authorities in England have been extrapolated forward from 1988 to 1989 and 1990. It has been assumed that recent average changes in each area arising from births, deaths, and migration will be maintained, subject to constraints set by the latest (1988-based) national population projections for England made by the Government Actuary's department. Past estimates of migration have been derived from re-registrations on the National Health Service central register as people move from a doctor's list in one family practitioner committee area to a list in another such area (migration within the United Kingdom), and from results of the international passenger survey (international migration). The net inwards migration levels assumed for 1988-89 and 1989-90 on this basis are less than the levels estimated for each of the previous four years.

Milk

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has received for changing the basis on which welfare milk is paid for; and whether he will make it his policy to ensure that any change does not reduce the incomes of self-employed milkmen.

Mr. Freeman: As part of the Government's initiative to secure value for money in all their purchases, negotiations have been held with representatives of all sectors of the dairy trade about the price paid by the Department for the supply of liquid welfare milk. The results are being closely studied and the interests of all the parties involved will be carefully considered before any decisions are made.

Mental Health Act 1983

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to lay before Parliament the code of practice required under section 118 of the Mental Health Act 1983.

Mr. Freeman: We have today laid the code of practice, and copies have been placed in the Library.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

South Africa

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what meeting has been held since September with representatives of the Government of the Republic of South Africa and the United Kingdom on the arrangements for South Africa to join the nuclear non-proliferation treaty; what other non-proliferation treaty depository states have been involved in such discussions; and what future plans there are for further meetings with South Africa on the non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Maude: There has not been any such meeting since September. However, representatives of the United Kingdom, the United States and the Soviet Union (which are the depositary states of the non-proliferation treaty) are to meet South African representatives in Vienna on 11 and 12 December to discuss the question of South African accession to the treaty.

South Korea

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Government of South Korea to have removed the concrete wall which borders the demilitarised zone.

Mr. Maude: North and South Korea are still technically at war. The choice of defensive measures on their side of the demilitarized zone is a matter for the Government of the Republic of Korea.

Radar Equipment (China)

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why permits were issued for the sale of radar equipment in Chinese fighter aircraft in September; whether such permits were excluded by the Madrid European Community summit declaration; and whether Export Credit Guarantees Department help was given to the Chinese Government for the purchase of such equipment.

Mr. Maude: In accordance with the Madrid declaration we have banned exports to China of weapons, together with any equipment which could be used for the purposes of internal repression, and postponed the examination of new requests for credit insurance. The avionics equipment to be supplied by GEC Marconi falls outside the embargo. It is subject to ECGD export credit cover, but as this was finalised prior to the events of June, it is not covered by the Madrid declaration.

Consular Fees

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much money has been levied in consular fees as a result of misfortunes happening to British citizens abroad who have had to seek help from embassy staff outside working hours.

Mr. Maude: The information requested is not readily available, and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

PRIME MINISTER

Eastern and Central Europe

Q12. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Prime Minister what consultations she has had with European allies concerning the security implications of recent political developments in eastern and central Europe.

The Prime Minister: I discussed recent developments in eastern Europe with my EC colleagues in Paris on 18 November, and will have the opportunity to do so again in Strasbourg on 8-9 December. I was also able to discuss these issues with European and other NATO colleagues at the briefing which President Bush gave yesterday in Brussels on his meetings with President Gorbachev.

Environment

Q27. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a further statement on the proposals in the Gracious Speech relating to the environment.

Q129. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a further statement on the proposals in the Gracious Speech relating to the environment.

The Prime Minister: Our Environmental Protection Bill is further proof of the Government's firm commitment to protecting and enhancing the domestic and international environment. It will encompass a range of innovative and widely welcomed measures to tackle pollution at source. New and more effective controls will be introduced to regulate pollution and waste disposal. Other provisions include strong measures to crack down on litter and improvements to the structure of our conservation agencies.

Education Reforms

Q31. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Prime Minister whether she will make a statement on implementation by local authorities of the Government's education reforms.

The Prime Minister: Local authorities are making satisfactory progress with implementing the Government's education reforms which will increase parental choice in the schooling for their children and increase the say of parents in the way the schools are run. In England and Wales, preparations for local management of schools and colleges are on target and the implementation of the national curriculum is going well. In Scotland, establishment of school boards for education authority schools is proceeding well, and authorities are participating in all aspects of our initiatives on curriculum and assessment for five to 14-year-olds.

Berlin

Q32. Mrs. Currie: To ask the Prime Minister whether she has any plans to visit Berlin.

The Prime Minister: I have no present plans to do so.

Eastern Europe

Q107. Mr. Latham: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the proposals made by Her Majesty's Government to the European Community calling for increased aid and investment in eastern European countries seeking to introduce democracy and a freer market economy; and what progress is being made in that regard.

The Prime Minister: The Government are committed to supporting economic and political reform in eastern Europe, and have played a leading role in encouraging the very positive response of the EC and its member states to the emerging democracies. Nationally, the United Kingdom was first in the field with a know-how fund for Poland, now valued at £50 million. On 29 November, we announced that we would be contributing £15 million to an agriculture project in Poland and that we would make a contribution of $100 million to the stabilisation fund for Poland. For Hungary, a know-how fund, valued at £25 million, will come into operation early next year.

Within the Community we have contributed to a comprehensive assistance package for Poland and Hungary comprising:

- some £210 million for aid projects for both Poland and Hungary in 1990;
- GSP status, bringing reductions in tariffs and levies on industrial and certain agricultural products;
- suspension or abolition of quantitative trade restrictions;
- eligibility for EIB lending.

In addition, the Community has provided £70 million-worth of free food for Poland. We expect to announce soon a further contribution.

Moreover, the EC is establishing a pattern of agreements with the countries of eastern Europe which will encourage trade and investment.

Her Majesty's Government will continue their strong support of the EC's policy of differentiation in favour of those countries which introduce reforms leading to democracy and a free-market economy.

Easenhall, Rugby

Q193. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to make an official visit to Easenhall near Rugby.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Inner Cities

Q210. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a further statement on proposals on the Queen's gracious speech relating to the inner cities.

The Prime Minister: Excellent progress is being made in the regeneration of our inner cities under the Government's action for cities programmes. In developing our policies for the future we will seek to develop a genuine partnership between all those involved in the regeneration of their areas. The Government are working with business, local government, the voluntary sector and local people to build on the progress already made and to ensure that the pace of inner-city regeneration is maintained.

European Free Trade Association

Q223. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the proposal by President Mitterrand and others to permit the United Kingdom to rejoin the European Free Trade Association.

The Prime Minister: There is no such proposal. The United Kingdom is and will remain an active, committed and influential member of the European Community.

Engagements

Q1. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 5 December.

Q2. Mr. Burns: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 5 December.

Q3. Mr. Jessel: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 5 December.

Q4. Mr. McFall: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 5 December.

Q5. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 5 December.

Q6. Mr. Butler: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 5 December.

Q7. Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 5 December.

Q8. Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 5 December.

Q9. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 5 December.

Q11. Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 5 December.

Q12. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 5 December.

Q22. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 5 December.

Q42. Mr. Rooker: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 5 December.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in this House, I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening, I hope to have my regular audience of Her Majesty the Queen.

South Korea

Mr. Parry: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if she raised the question of human rights in South Korea at her recent meeting with the president;

(2) what representations she has made concerning human rights in South Korea; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: During my talks with President Roh on 28 November, I encouraged him to continue to make progress with domestic political reform.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Prime Minister whether she made any representations to the President of South Korea during his recent visit regarding the alleged ill-treatment of dogs and cats prior to their killing for human consumption; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: President Roh is well aware of the strong views of the people of Britain on this issue.

WALES

Schools

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps are being taken to provide quality supply cover in schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The responsibility of the Government is to ensure that there are sufficient qualified teachers from whom LEAs can recruit. This year, total recruitment to the public sector initial teacher training institutions in Wales exceeded recruitment targets by over 17 per cent.

Our education support grant programme to assist teacher recruitment urges LEAs to encourage flexible working practices, including part-time working. This should stimulate the employment of supply teachers. However, the employment and deployment of teachers is a matter for LEAs and schools. It is for them to decide how many supply teachers to appoint. They also have discretion to pay teachers on short-notice contracts at rates they consider appropriate in order to recruit and retain the teachers they need.

Schools

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will indicate the date on which he plans to publish rules for implementation of local management schemes for schools in each of the Welsh county councils.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Sections 33 and 34 of the Education Reform Act 1988 require local education authorities to prepare and submit to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, for his approval schemes for financing county and voluntary schools maintained by them. Advice on the introduction and implementation of the schemes is contained in Welsh Office circular 36/88, a copy of which is in the library.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will state for the latest available financial year for (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools (i) expenditure on books in Wales in total and by local education authority and (ii) average expenditure per pupil on books in Wales and by education authority.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The amounts spent by LEAs in respect of books, equipment and materials for 1987-88 are shown in the following table:

	Expenditure on books and equipment[1]		Expenditure per pupil on books and equipment[1]
	Nursery/ Primary[2] £	Secondary £	Nursery/ Primary[2] £	Secondary £
Clwyd	708,931	1,275,590	19·8	44·5
Dyfed	728,939	1,658,103	24·0	69·3
Gwent	962,194	1,842,706	24·1	60·4
Gwynedd	457,647	1,121,762	23·6	65·0
Mid Glamorgan	1,212,483	2,291,762	22·8	58·1
Powys	298,725	482,177	30·1	58·7
South Glamorgan	811,907	1,445,203	23·6	53·0
West Glamorgan	950,516	1,475,811	28·7	61·5
WALES	6,131,342	[1]1,593,114	23·9	58·2

[1] Expenditure on books only is not available.

[2] Data in respect of primary schools cannot be separately identified.

Doctors

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many doctors have resigned from the National Health Service in Wales since 1 January 1980.

Mr. Grist: Between 2 October 1979 and 1 October 1987, 188 general medical practitioners left the general medical service for reasons other than death, retirement or to enter hospital service. During the same period, 97 practitioners were readmitted to the service.

Information on the resignations of consultants and senior registrars in the hospital service will take some time to extract; I will reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Water

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many water supplies in Wales have aluminium in excess of the terms of the European drinking water directive; and how much investment is currently made to water treatment facilities in Wales.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has accepted undertakings under section 20(5)(b) of the Water Act 1989 and granted relaxations under regulations 4(1)(c) and 4(2) of the Water Supply (Water Quality) Regulations 1989 in respect of aluminium standards at 89 of Dwr Cymru's treatment works. The Prospectus on the Water Share offers, a copy of which has been placed in the Library, shows Dwr Cymru's current estimates of the expenditure required by the K investment programme in the period to 31 March 2000. The estimated expenditure on water treatment (at November 1989 prices) is £265 million.

Kidney Patients

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many lithotripter machines for kidney patients are installed in Welsh hospitals; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many Welsh patients needing lithotripter machine treatment travel to English centres; if he will list those centres; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what plans there are to install lithotripter machines in hospitals in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: There are at present no lithotripter machines in National Health Service hospitals in Wales. Information on the number of Welsh patients referred to centres in England for lithotripter treatment is not held centrally. South Glamorgan health authority has been invited by the Welsh Office to prepare, in association with other health authorities in Wales, a detailed statement of need, appraisal of location options and specification for a lithotripter.

Gower

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many times he has visited Gower since his appointment to his present post.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 28 November 1989]: I have undertaken two engagements in Gower, and a further 13 engagements in the Swansea area.

DEFENCE

War Widows' Pensions

Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the actuarial basis on which war widows' pensions are calculated; whether they are in any way contributory; and whether they represent a percentage of the husband/service man's salary.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: War widows' pensions are not paid by the Ministry of Defence. Provided, however, that they are eligible, service widows may receive special rates of pension under the terms of the armed forces pension scheme if their husband's death is attributable to his service. The special rates are on scales related to the rank held by the husband at the date his service ended. They approximate to 90 per cent. of the pension which he would have earned had he completed the maximum period of reckonable service required for a full career pension, less an adjustment to reflect the difference between the standard rate of war widow's pension and the normal rate of national insurance widow's pension. No direct contributions are paid to secure the benefits of the armed forces scheme, but an adjustment is made by the Armed Forces Pay Review Body, taking into account the value of those benefits as part of the total remuneration package, in determining recommended rates of pay for the armed forces.

Ambulance Dispute

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will call for a report on the suspension and returning to barracks of the staff sergeant acting on 23 November, as Army liaison officer in the control room of the ambulance headquarters at Welwyn Garden City following a fatal road traffic accident on the A505 between Letchworth and Royston; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The individual concerned has not been suspended. He was required in Colchester to brief other medical personnel before returning for a further period of duty in Hertfordshire.

Gibraltar Garrison

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made on restructuring the Gibraltar garrison; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As indicated by my right hon. Friend the Member for Ayr (Mr. Younger) in his statement on 30 January, we have considered the matter in detail and have decided not to retain a resident infantry battalion in Gibraltar after March 1991, when the current tour of the 3rd battalion Royal Green Jackets ends. Some of the tasks currently undertaken by the resident battalion, including ceremonial duties, will in future be performed by the Gibraltar Regiment, the permanent cadre of which will be more than doubled. The establishment of a part-time company and home service force company will allow the regiment to reorganise into an all-infantry force of three rifle companies with the appropriate command and support elements. The Artillery Battery and Air Defence Troop will no longer be required, although the personnel in these units will be given the opportunity to remain in the restructured regiment. The Gibraltar Regiment Corps of Drums will be retained, and in addition a military band will be provided for certain important occasions. Separately, we are also reviewing the arrangements in Gibraltar for logistics support, and for command and control with a view to establishing a joint force headquarters.

PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMISSION

Austin Rover

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chairman of the Public Accounts Commission what was the total sum paid by the National Audit Office to outside auditors involved in producing the report on the sale of Austin Rover.

Sir Peter Hordern: Under the National Audit Act 1983 the operations of the National Audit Office are entirely a matter for the C. and A. G. The Commission does not have any powers in this respect. However I understand that, for the purposes of its examination of the Rover Group sale, the National Audit Office did not use outside auditors. As indicated in paragraph 1.12 of the C. and A. G.'s report, it obtained specialist advice on taxation matters from chartered accountants (Touche Ross) and on the value of surplus sites from chartered surveyors (G. L. Hearn and Partners). It also sought comments on the draft report from an expert on the motor industry (Professor Garel Rhys of the University of Wales).

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Payroll Giving

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many Members take advantage of the payroll giving scheme, either in whole or in part.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: There are currently 49[illegible] Members who have authorised deductions from their parliamentary salaries under the charity payroll giving scheme.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

West Germany

Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects British manufacturing trade to be in balance with (a) West Germany and (b) the rest of the European Economic Community.

Mr. Redwood: The Government are committed to free trade as being in the best interests of the United Kingdom. We cannot expect this to produce a trade balance with every partner; nevertheless, the Government recognise the importance of continuing to encourage and support exports through, inter alia, the activities of the British Overseas Trade Board and ECGD.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the manufacturing trade deficit with West Germany.

Mr. Redwood: In the first nine months of 1989 imports of manufactures into the United Kingdom consigned from the Federal Republic of Germany exceeded United Kingdom exports to that country by £7·4 billion.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give the growth in imports in manufacturing goods from West Germany since 1979.

Mr. Redwood: Imports of manufactured goods from West Germany have risen, at current prices, from £5·3 billion in 1979 to £16·6 billion in 1988, an increase of £11·3 billion.

Balance of Trade

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the countries in the European Community with which the United Kingdom has a trade deficit, giving the amounts in each case.

Mr. Redwood: The information is given in the table.

Manufacturing trade: January to September 1989

	Crude balance £ million
France	−933
Belgium/Luxembourg	−621
Netherlands	−1,705
Federal Republic of Germany	−7,411
Italy	−1,595
Denmark	−153
Portugal	−53

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the deficit or surplus in (a) manufacturing and trade and (b) invisibles in each of the last 10 years with (i) West Germany, (ii) Japan and (iii) the United States of America.

Mr. Redwood: The crude balance of visible trade in manufactured goods and total visible trade for the identified countries is given in the following table. Information on invisible trade is not available.

	West Germany		Japan		United States of America
	Manufactured goods £ million	Total visible trade £ million	Manufactured goods £ million	Total visible trade £ million	Manufactured goods £ million	Total visible trade £ million

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are the figures for exports and imports for each of the last five years between the United Kingdom and (a) Poland, (b) East Germany, (c) Czechoslovakia and (d) Hungary.

Mr. Redwood: Visible trade between the United Kingdom and the countries concerned is given in the following table:

	1984		1985		1986		1987		1988
	Export £ million	Import £ million	Export £ million	Import £ million	Export £ million	Import £ million	Export £ million	Import £ million	Export £ million	Import £ million

Textile and Clothing Imports

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what detailed surveys of the level of imported textile and clothing goods on sale in major high street stores in the United Kingdom he is planning to undertake;

(2) what is his estimate of the level of imported textile and clothing goods on sale in major high street stores in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Redwood: The overall level of imports of textiles and clothing is shown in the trade statistics. I have no plans to survey the level of imported goods in particular stores.

Hosiery and Knitwear Industry

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from the hosiery and knitwear industry in the east midlands regarding the current state of trade; what reply he has sent; and what action he intends to take in this matter.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Department takes a close interest in matters of concern to the knitwear industry and has taken into consideration the many letters and representations received over the past year.

My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Trade met the Knitting Industries Federation on 11 September and more recently the Apparel, Knitting and Textiles Alliance on 4 October to discuss current issues.

The Government will continue to act to defend the knitwear and hosiery industry on trade issues where it is in the United Kingdom's overall economic interest and within the constraints of our EC and GATT obligations.

Internal Market Council

Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will report on the Internal Market Council held on 23 November.

Mr. Redwood: The Council reached agreement on the abolition of the Community transit advice note (TAN), on the reduction of frontier controls for transport (subject to a United Kingdom parliamentary scrutiny reserve) on a "new approach" directive on standards for certain weighing machines, and on the third motor liability insurance directive.

Important progress was also made on the proposed EC merger regulation. The main outstanding issue is a German proposal to allow certain cases to pass to national competition authorities. The Council will discuss the regulation further at the Internal Market Council on 21 December. I refer the hon. Member to the previous answers that I gave on this subject on 24 November 1989 at columns 41-42 and on 29 November at column 291.

The Council discussed proposed directives on public procurement (excluded sectors), rights of residence, gas appliances and life insurance services and made useful progress. All will be discussed again at the December Internal Market Council. The question of tax exemption for temporarily imported vehicles was also discussed, but was not agreed, following concerns expressed by a number of member states.

The Commission reported that it would bring forward specific recommendations based on its analysis of barriers to takeovers in member states by the end of March 1990.

Privatisation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what accountancy firm advised his Department on the sale of (a) Rover and (b) Royal Ordnance plc.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 4 December 1989]: My Department took professional advice on the sale of its shareholdings in the Rover Group from Baring Brothers and Slaughter and May. The privatisation of Royal Ordnance plc is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence.

European Patent Office

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he is satisfied that the European Patent Office is in a fully competitive position with the United States of America and other parts of the world.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 30 November 1989]: The European Patent Office is not in competition with the United States patent and trade mark office and patent offices in other parts of the world. In order to obtain a patent in a state which is a member of the European Patent Organisation (13 European states including the United Kingdom), an application must be made either to the EPO or to the national patent office of the state concerned.

The EPO is very successful and last year attracted more than 50,000 applications—far more than predicted when the office was established in 1977.

Korea (Cruelty)

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy to use trade sanctions in respect of trade in animal products to bring pressure on the Government of Korea to end the inhumane treatment of dogs and cats intended for human consumption in that country.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 30 November 1989]: I condemn the inhumane treatment of animals wherever it occurs, and I view with concern reports that dogs and cats are being treated inhumanely in Korea. I do not believe, however, that trade sanctions are the proper response.

My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary drew the attention of the Korean Foreign Minister to the strong concern which many people in this country feel about this matter during the recent visit to Britain of the president of the Republic of Korea.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Private Nursing Homes

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list, by region, the maximum level of fees for private nursing home care, funded by his Department; and if he will indicate which specific regions have the largest and smallest budgets for such care.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I regret that information in the form requested is not available.

Children

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the cost of bringing up a child to the age of 18 years in Britain at the present time.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: There are no agreed criteria on which such an estimate could be based.

Pensions

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will present the data in the answer to the hon. Member for Birkenhead (Mr. Field) on 15 November, Official Report, columns 313-15, for single pensioner households and two person pensioner households.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Because the equivalence scale does not distinguish between pensioners and other adults, the information requested is the same as that provided in tables 2 and 3 (for one adult and married couple households respectively) of the answer to the hon. Member for Birkenhead on 15 November, columns 313-15. Tables 2 to 6 of that answer illustrate the value that the equivalised average would represent for different households at each level of the income distribution and therefore contain the same information, as fixed multiples of each other, in accordance with the different values assigned to different household sizes by the Department's equivalence scale. They do not, of course, contain information about actual income changes for the household types shown.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether ME sufferers are entitled to be awarded attendance allowance by his Department under the terms of page 61 of his Department's handbook to delegated practitioners.

Mr. Scott: As the Attendance Allowance Board's "Handbook for Delegated Medical Practitioners" makes clear, entitlement to an attendance allowance depends entirely on the need for frequent attention, continual supervision or watching over arising from severe disability. Anyone whose attendance needs satisfy these criteria will qualify for an allowance, irrespective of the precise nature of their illness or disabling condition.

Young People (Benefits)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, further to the oral reply to the hon. Member for Torfaen (Mr. Murphy) of 27 November, Official Report, column 420, if he will indicate the nature and scale of the difficulties faced by 16 and 17-year-olds in claiming benefit and give the numbers of those affected and refused.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Our monitoring has confirmed that our policy operates without difficulty for the vast majority of 16 and 17-year-olds. Such isolated difficulties as have arisen range from a possible misunderstanding of procedures by local office staff to lack of knowledge of the benefit provisions on the part of some young people. To overcome these, we have introduced the administrative changes which I announced on 27 November.

Benefit Records

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many social security offices have had their benefit records transferred to Glasgow; what is his estimate of the cost/benefit of the transfer; and how mistakes discovered in the records will be rectified.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Two London offices, Ealing and Southall, have so far transferred their income support benefit records to the social security centre in Glasgow. Relocation of the income support work of Acton office commenced on 4 December.

Overall the current estimate gives a cost benefit of some £16 million over 20 years for the three social security centres. The fundamental reason for relocation, however, is to improve service to the public.

Benefit records are rigorously examined for accuracy when they are received at the social security centre in preparation for loading onto the income support computer system. Where errors in payment have been made, they will be rectified and arrears due will be paid promptly.

Social Fund

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the money advice training budget for social fund officers in the years 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Mr. Scott: Guidance on money advice forms an integral part of the internal training provided for social fund officers, and there is no separate budget allocated to that part of the training programme.

Money advice training occupies two days in the total training period of three weeks and comprises: the role of the social fund officer in helping clients with financial problems; identification of priority debts; giving advice on budgeting and financial expenditure; interviewing skills relevant to money advice interviews.

Pensioners

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total value of retirement pensions being paid during the current year, or the most recent year for which figures are available, to people resident overseas who emigrated from the United Kingdom and stopped paying national insurance contributions in the United Kingdom before 1960; and what is the total value of the national insurance contributions which were paid by those people.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I regret that this information is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the cost of paying fully uprated state retirement pensions to all British pensioners overseas who are currently not covered by a reciprocal social security agreement to this effect.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to the hon. Member for Oldham, West (Mr. Meacher) on 29 November 1989 at column 253.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will increase the cold weather payments for the coming winter in line with the cost of living.

Mr. Scott: No. We believe that £5 is a reasonable amount to pay towards the extra expenses for heating incurred in each week of very cold weather.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for each social security office the budget surplus or deficit at the end of the winter 1988-89 for cold weather payment provision.

Mr. Scott: Local offices do not have budgets for cold weather payments. Such payments are regulated and consequently are not subject to local budgetary constraints.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list, for the winter of 1988-89, by Department of Social Security office, the amount of cold weather payments that were made.

Mr. Scott: In the winter of 1988-89, a total of 502 cold weather payments totalling £2,510 were paid by the Department's local office at Galashiels. No other awards were made, because the weather last winter was so mild.

Dietary Requirements

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what research is undertaken by his Department into dietary requirements of people in receipt of benefit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: None. There is no reason to believe that dietary requirements of people in receipt of social security benefits are any different from those of corresponding groups not on benefit.

Correspondence

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to reply to the letter from Colin Barlow, a war disabled veteran, which was forwarded to his Department by the hon. Member for South Hams on 26 October.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: My noble Friend Lord Henley replied to my hon. Friend's letter on 30 November.

Care Expenditure

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the sum to be transferred to Scottish local authorities in repect of his Department's care expenditure in the years 1991-92 to 2001-2.

Mr. Scott: The Government will transfer to local authorities the resources which we would have otherwise provided to finance care through social security payments to people in residential and nursing homes. Final decisions will be taken in next year's public expenditure survey following discussions with the local authority associations. Chapter 8 of the recently published White Paper on community care (Cm. 849), a copy of which is in the Library, gives details of the factors that will be taken into account in the calculation of the sums to be transferred.

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will provide a breakdown of board and lodging expenditure for residential care accommodation for Scotland, England and Wales by Department of Social Security region in the years from 1982;

(2) if he will provide a breakdown of board and lodging expenditure for residential care accommodation in Scotland by Department of Social Security local offices during the last financial year;

(3) if he will provide figures for board and lodging expenditure on nursing homes in Scotland, England and Wales by Department of Social Security region in the years from 1982.

Mr. Scott: I regret that reliable estimates for regions and local offices are not available.

Disability

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide estimated figures of disabled people for Scotland by Office of Population Censuses and Surveys disability categories for the years since 1978.

Mr. Scott: I regret that the information is not available. Only the OPCS disability surveys themselves provide information at the level of detail requested, based on data collected between 1985 and 1988.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he is able to give a firm date for the publication of proposals to alter social security benefits for disabled people.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) on 14 November at column 167.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to include social security provision for informal carers in his proposals to change the benefits for disabled people.

Mr. Scott: We have already confirmed our policy to provide extra help for informal carers in the range of measures announced by my right hon. Friend on 25 October. The measures include the introduction of a £10 carers premium in income support and housing benefit for people receiving invalid care allowance; an increase in the earnings rule for invalid care allowance; and the extension of invalid care allowance to those caring for people who will qualify for attendance allowance for the first time as a result of the other measures announced.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish a complete list of all the research commissioned by his Department in connection with the proposals to change benefits for disabled people.

Mr. Nicholas Scott: The information is as follows:

1. Office of Population Censuses and Surveys (OPCS) surveys of disability in Great Britain—six reports published between September 1988 and July 1989.
2. Department of Social Security study, based on the family expenditure survey, to compare the financial circumstances of households with and without a disabled person.
3. Social policy research unit (SPRU), university of York study of 12 to 20-year olds' transition to adulthood.
4. IFF Research Limited market research report on occupational sick pay schemes published in June 1988.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security in what form his proposals for changes to social security benefits for disabled people will be presented to Parliament.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) on 28 November at column 217.

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what discussions have taken place in connection with proposals to alter social security benefits for disabled people with voluntary organisations of disabled people and their families.

Mr. Scott: Discussions have taken place with a number of organisations representing disabled people including the Disability Benefits Consortium which represents over 250 disability organisations. We will be meeting the Consortium again shortly. We have also received a large number of comments from individuals and organisations as a result of the OPCS surveys of disability.

Interpreters

Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he plans to expand the scheme employing interpreters in his Department's local offices in Leeds and Bradford to other offices of his Department serving areas with large non-English speaking populations.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We have no plans at present to extend the Leeds and Bradford service to other similar areas. In the meantime, of the Department's local offices where 10 per cent. or more of callers have little or no English, over three quarters maintain lists of staff who are willing and able to act as interpreters for ethnic minority customers.

Family Credit

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the latest available figures for the number of families in receipt of family credit in Wales, and what percentage this constitutes of the total number eligible for family credit.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The latest information is for September 1989, when the number of families receiving family credit who were living in Wales at the time their award was made was 22,000.

Information about the total number of families eligible for family credit can be obtained only for Great Britain, and only retrospectively, from family expenditure survey data.

Income Support

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the latest available figure of the number of persons in receipt of income support in Wales and the percentage this constitutes of the total number eligible for income support.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The latest available estimates are that 246,000 claimants were in receipt of income support in Wales at May 1989. Information about the total number of people eligible for income support can be obtained only for Great Britain, and only retrospectively, from family expenditure survey data.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, how many people who have been in receipt of attendance allowance at (i) the higher rate and (ii) the lower rate have had their attendance allowance reduced in each year since 1983.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 27 November 1989]: I regret that not all the requested information is available. The available information is in the table.

Attendance allowance: number of awards reduced and terminated 1984-89

Year	Awards[1]	Awards[2] terminated
1984	2,572	21,774
1985	2,705	22,985
1986	2,886	23,701
1987	2,671	22,717
1988	3,107	25,141
[3]1989	2,602	20,563

[1] Reduced from higher-rate to lower-rate.

[2] Includes higher-rate and lower-rate awards which were terminated other than on expiry of the award or on death of the recipient.

[3] To 30 September 1989.

SCOTLAND

Chernobyl

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what checks or monitoring his Department does for radiation level in food imports from eastern European countries since the accident at Chernobyl; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Responsibility for checking food imports rests under the Imported Food (Scotland) Regulations 1985 with district and islands councils. EC regulation 3955/87 currently sets down the maximum permissible levels of radioactivity in imported foods. My Department has received no reports of these levels being exceeded.

Boarding Schools

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many boarding schools in Scotland have school boards.

Mr. Lang: The only wholly residential schools under education authority management are six special schools. One of these has a school board following the first round of elections.

Civil Servants

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many civil servants have been attached to his Department in each year since 1970.

Mr. Rifkind: Information in respect of the staff in post in the Scottish Office, Scottish prison service and state hospital at 1 April each year is set out in the table. Part-time staff are counted as half units and casual staff are excluded.

The figures take account of the following transfers of staff arising from machinery of Government changes:

Date	Number
July 1975	155	Staff from Department of Trade and Industry
April 1978	501	Staff from Property Services Agency
April 1980	107	Staff from Property Services Agency
March 1984	448·5	Staff to state hospital
November 1984	96	Staff from Department of Trade and Industry
April 1985	51	Staff from the then Department of Health and Social Security
October 1985	162	Staff to Royal museums of Scotland
March 1986	169·5	Staff to Royal botanic garden
July 1987	52	Staff to Scottish legal aid board
April 1988	61	Staff to Crofter's Commission/Red Deer Commission
Total	+17	staff (net)

	Scottish office	Prisons	State hospital	Grand total

Alcohol

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will consider instigating a Government-funded campaign to publicise the danger to health of excessive drinking in the light of evidence of increased incidence of alcohol abuse.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government attach high priority to tackling the problem of alcohol misuse and public education on this topic forms one of the Scottish health education group's major programmes. The next stage of the alcohol education media campaign developed by the group will be launched early in 1990.

The Government also provided financial support for the Scottish Council on Alcohol's "Drinkwise" campaign in February 1989.

Prisoners

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each year since 1974 (a) the number of prisoners in Scottish penal institutions for fine default, (b) the total number of convicted prisoners and (c) ([illegible]) as a percentage of (b).

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is set out in the table.

[1] Provisional.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the number of convictions in Scotland for murder, attempted murder, culpable homicide, rape and crimes of violence, respectively, in each year from 1977.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is given in the table.

Persons with a charge proved for crimes of violence[1] in Scotland

[1] Comprises group 1 (non-sexual crimes of violence) and the sexual assault category from group 2 (crimes of indecency) of the Scottish Home and Health Department's classification of crimes and offences.

[2] Statutory culpable homicide is the crime of causing death by dangerous or reckless driving.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the cost of supporting the spouses and families of men and women in prison in Scottish penal institutions.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is not held centrally and could not be obtained without disproportionate cost.

Hypothermia

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of deaths in Scotland where hypothermia is mentioned as the cause of death; and what is his estimate of the total number of deaths where hypothermia is a proximate cause of death.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The number of deaths in Scotland since 1984 mentioning hypothermia or showing hypothermia as the underlying cause are shown in the table:

Deaths from hypothermia (any mention), Scotland, 1984 to 1989

Care Expenditure

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will produce figures for local authority expenditure on residential care in Scotland from 1979-80 to 1988-89, broken down by social work authority;

(2) if he will provide figures for local authority expenditure on domiciliary care in Scotland between 1979-80 and 1988-89, broken down by social work authority.

Mr. Lang: The information for 1988-89 is not yet available. Figures for the other years are set out in the tables. A number of changes in accounting practice over the period result in the annual figures not being strictly comparable.

Drink-Driving

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what criteria procurators fiscal apply when considering reports from the police for alleged drink-drive offences following breath tests administered to motorists stopped at random.

Mr. Rifkind: I am advised by my noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate that there is no code of practice in this area, but procurators fiscal will take into account the following matters:

(i) It is lawful for a police officer in uniform acting in the execution of his duty to require the driver of any vehicle on a road to stop.

(ii) A police officer who stops a vehicle on a road with the purpose of investigating whether its driver has alcohol in his body is acting in the execution of his duty.

(iii) It is accordingly lawful for a police officer in uniform to stop vehicles at random for that purpose, provided there is no malpractice such as oppression or capricious conduct on the part of the officer.

(iv) It is lawful for a police officer in uniform to require a driver who has been stopped in such circumstances to provide a specimen of breath for a breath test, provided that the officer has reasonable cause to suspect that the driver has alcohol in his body.

Procurators fiscal must be satisfied that there is sufficient evidence to merit prosecution in the public interest before instituting proceedings.

Judicial Appointments

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he intends to make any proposals relating to judicial appointments in the supreme courts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: I have already announced that, in the light of responses to my consultation paper, "The Legal Profession in Scotland", I propose to extend the conditions for appointment to the office of senator to include solicitors who have exercised full rights of audience in the Supreme Courts or who have served as sheriffs principal or sheriffs, in each case for a minimum period of five years. Following the report of the review body chaired by the hon. Lord Maxwell on the use of judicial time in the supreme courts in Scotland I have decided to introduce new provisions relating to the appointment of temporary judges. Following consultation with the Lord President, I propose that the new eligibility criteria for appointment to the office of senator shall apply equally to the office of temporary judge: that vacancies in the inner house of the court of session shall be filled by the appointment of a Lord Ordinary nominated by the Lord President and the Lord Justice Clerk: that when under existing statute the Lord President directs any three judges of the court to sit as an extra division of the inner house, the Lord President shall direct which of them is to preside: and that the appointment of a Lord Ordinary to act as Lord Ordinary in exchequer causes shall be made by the Lord President without the need for it to be recorded in delegated legislation.

Water Supplies

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimates his Department has of the costs (a) to local authorities and (b) to central Government of bringing Scottish water supplies up to European Community standards; what equipment or capital plant is involved; and what sources of funds are available to complete this work.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 4 December 1989]: Latest estimates from water authorities put the cost of bringing Scottish water supplies fully up to EC standards at approximately £100 million a year on average over a period of up to 15 years. However, authorities will shortly be required to prepare more detailed costed programmes of necessary works. The programmes will involve the construction of new improved water treatement works and the replacement and renovation of much of the distribution system.

It is largely for authorities to determine the sources of funds used within the capital expenditure rules set by Government. Grants for the improvement of rural water supplies are available to water authorities under the rural water supplies and sewerage Acts 1944-70.

Scottish Homes

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if Scottish Homes has any plans to sell off vacant houses to private landlords or other housing agencies and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 4 December 1989]: One of Scottish Homes objectives is to increase housing choice in Scotland, and more specifically to encourage owner occupation. In pursuing this objective Scottish Homes will consider the opportunities provided by vacant houses in their stock including sale to its own tenants under its portable discount scheme, in the light of local needs and circumstances.

Under the terms of Section 2(3A) of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1988 as introduced by Section 179 of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 Scottish Homes power to dispose of land may be exercised only with the consent of the Secretary of State.

Woodlands

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he is taking to ensure that the bulldozing of woodland for agricultural purposes is avoided.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Forestry Commission operates a presumption against the conversion of woodland to agriculture and will not normally grant felling permission for this purpose.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Food Safety

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what will be the estimated capital and revenue costs of establishing and running the food safety directorate.

Mr. Maclean: It is not possible to identify separately all the costs of the new Food Safety Directorate in 1989-90 because some parts of the organisation are not subject to decentralised budgetary control. From 1990-91 the directorate's budget will be fully decentralised and the allocation, which is now being finalised, will be published in the Supply Estimates.

Toxic Farm Chemicals

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to arrange for the collection of out-of-date toxic farm chemicals at no cost to the farmer.

Mr. Maclean: No. Purchasers of toxic chemicals are responsible for the safe disposal of surpluses and should think about disposal before they buy. Disposal costs can be reduced by co-ordinating collection. In the case of pesticides manufacturers and distributors have provided low-cost disposal arrangements when it has been necessary for Ministers to withdraw statutory approval for use. And I am pleased to note that the National Farmers Union is taking the initiative in making arrangements for the safe disposal of products not covered by industry schemes.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has on the amount of out-of-date toxic farm chemicals held on farms for which no safe disposal site is available.

Mr. Maclean: Safe disposal, off-farm, is available for any toxic chemical which cannot be used. There is no reliable information on the quantity or location of such waste, but the HSE's agricultural inspectorate does from time to time find unapproved pesticides in store. Anyone still holding unapproved pesticides should without delay ensure that it is stored in a safe condition and clearly labelled as not for use and make arrangements for a reputable specialist waste disposal contractor to collect the material for safe disposal.

Food Safety Bill

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what basis he has calculated that the additional costs for local authorities arising from the Food Safety Bill will be £30 million; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Officials in the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and the Department of Health have held consultations with interested parties in order to assess the resources local authorities will need in order to enforce the Food Safety Bill. The estimate that the additional cost for local authorities is likely to be of the order of £30 million was based on the information supplied.

Food Committees

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to increase representation from (a) consumer groups (b) enforcement agencies on food committees or working parties.

Mr. Maclean: The Food Advisory Committee has two members drawn from enforcement backgrounds and three members who have experience in consumer activities. All members of the committee are, however, appointed for their personal expertise and do not represent any particular interest. The new consumer panel will have nine ordinary consumer members nominated by various consumer organisations. I keep the membership of both committees under review and can where appropriate adjust the emphasis of the membership.

Meetings

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) on what dates within the last 12 months he met representatives of Trusthouse Forte; what matters were discussed; and if he plans any future meetings;

(2) on what dates within the last 12 months he met representatives of Sainsburys; what matters were discussed; if he plans any future meetings; and if he will make a statement;

(3) on what dates within the last 12 months he met representatives of Tesco; what matters were discussed; and what future meetings are planned;

(4) on what dates within the last 12 months he met representatives of Safeway; what matters were discussed; and what future meetings are planned;

(5) on what dates within the last 12 months he met representatives of Marks and Spencer; what matters were discussed; and what future meetings are planned.

Mr. Curry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave him on Tuesday, 28 November 1989 at column 192.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met a representative for Eli Lilly; what was discussed; and if has plans for any future meetings.

Mr. Maclean: So far as I am aware, no incumbent Minister has had such a meeting. However, in February 1988 my right hon. Friend the then Minister of State met company representatives to discuss matters relating to the licensing of veterinary medicines. There are no plans for further meetings.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last met a representative from Monsanto; what matters were discussed; if he plans any further meetings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: So far as I am aware, neither my right hon. Friend nor his predecessors have had such a meeting. However, my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Secretary met company representatives on 15 November to discuss matters relating to the licensing of veterinary medicines. There are no plans for further meetings.

Microwave Cooking

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the risk to consumers of using microwave for primary heating of food products if the manufacturer's instructions are followed.

Mr. Maclean: My Department's primary concern has been with the performance of microwave ovens in reheating already cooked food. As far as cooking from raw is concerned, the Ministry has not undertaken an assessment of oven performance compared with manufacturers' instructions but users can apply exactly the same tests to ensure that food is fully cooked as they do when using other means of cooking.

EC Surpluses

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the current situation concerning distribution of European Community surpluses to the elderly.

Mr. Curry: I assume that the question refers to the European Community's surplus food scheme. This requires member states to distribute surplus stocks of certain foods to the most needy in the community (defined in the United Kingdom as those on income support or family credit or people living in welfare hostels or of no fixed abode), not simply to the elderly.

The United Kingdom has some 3,000 tonnes of butter and 3,000 tonnes of beef available for distribution under the scheme, and all of this produce has been released from intervention stores. Distributions to eligible recipients have been taking place for some time now and I expect that most of the produce will have been distributed before the end of 1989, but the timing of distribution is a matter for the designated organisations to decide according to local needs and their own capacity.

Veterinary Laboratories

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the names and locations of all Government veterinary laboratories closed in the last 10 years, together with their date of closure.

Mr. Curry: The information requested is as follows:

Location	Date of closure
Weybridge	31 December 1980[1]
Cardiff	4 April 1986
Chester	4 April 1986
Gloucester	30 June 1986[1]
Leeds	30 June 1986
Northants	30 June 1986

[1] Veterinary investigation centre only.

The laboratories at Lasswade and Liverpool transferred to Roslin and Barton Hall in April 1986 and October 1986 respectively.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Burt: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give details of expenditure in 1988-89 and 1989-90 by the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce and the Agriculture Departments on market regulation under the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Gummer: Details are given in the table of the outturn for 1988-89 and the latest forecast of outturn for 1989-90.

	1988-89 (Actual Outturn)	1989-90 (Forecast Outturn)

Annual premium on ewes	130·7	117·0
Payments to producers giving up some milk production	74·1	64·2
Beef special premium scheme (Northern Ireland)	—	10·1
Total	244·6	292·8
Grand Total	1,156·0	998·1

Some of the expenditure shown benefits consumers and trade interests rather than United Kingdom producers.

The figures for the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce are net of various receipts treated as negative expenditure. Receipts from levies on the production and storage of sugar and isoglucose and on third country exports, which are regarded as Community own resources, are excluded.

Of the estimated outturn for 1989-90, £1,292·8 million is expected to be financed from the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund (EAGGF); in 1988-89, £1,506·0 million was thus financed. However, because the United Kingdom is a net contributor to the European Community budget, the whole of this expenditure is attributable to the Exchequer. Receipts from the European Community do not always relate to expenditure in the period.

The individual figures may not add up to the totals due to roundings.

Mr. Burt: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give details of expenditure in 1988-89 and 1989-90 by the Agriculture Department on agricultural grants and subsidies excluding market regulation under the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Gummer: Details are given in the table of the outturn for 1988-89 and the latest forecast of outturn for 1989-90.

Some of this expenditure attracts contributions from the European Community. These are mainly received in the following year. In 1989-90, £66·3 million is expected to be received from the Fund compared with £44·9 million in 1988-89.

The individual figures may not add up to the totals shown due to roundings.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoners (Mental Illness)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the numbers of inmates of British gaols who were transferred to psychiatric units or mental hospitals in each of the past five years.

Mr. John Patten: Sentenced and unsentenced prisoners in England and Wales may be transferred to psychiatric hospitals for treatment under sections 47 and 48 of the Mental Health Act 1983 respectively. The numbers transferred to hospital under those provisions between 1984 and 1988 were as follows:

	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988
s. 47	108	100	107	130	120
s. 48	47	41	53	77	85
Total	155	141	160	207	205

Acid House Parties

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he proposes should be taken to deal with the problems caused by illegal acid house parties.

Mr. Waddington: The law needs to be strengthened to punish more effectively the organisers of such events. It is already an offence to provide music and dancing as a public entertainment or, if the relevant statutory provision has been adopted by the local authority, at a private entertainment promoted for private gain without a licence obtained in advance from the local authority, or in breach of any terms, conditions or restrictions to which such a licence is subject. But the penalties for these offences are so light in comparison to the profits to be made from acid house parties that the organisers can afford to ignore the law.

I have therefore concluded that magistrates should in future be empowered to impose fines of up to £20,000 or imprisonment for up to six months, or both, on people convicted of these offences. This will require changes to the London Government Act 1963, the Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1982 and the Private Places of Entertainment (Licensing) Act 1967. In addition, my right hon. Friend intends to give magistrates power to order the confiscation of profits made by those convicted of organising illegal parties or allowing their land or premises to be used for them.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment is today announcing the forthcoming provision of guidance to local authorities to tackle effectively the problem of noise nuisance at such events.

Skeleton Car Keys

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about the sale of skeleton car key sets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We have received a large number of representations from members of the public and Members of Parliament, including the hon. Member, about a "skeleton car key set" being offered for sale by Westway Locksmiths, formerly MB Locksmiths. As the hon. Member is aware, criminal proceedings against MB Locksmiths are in progress and, in the circumstances, it would not be appropriate to comment further.

Broadcasting

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received any representations from Scottish broadcasting or community organisations about quality measurements of television franchise bidders arising from his most recent proposals for reform of broadcasting.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received any representations from Scottish broadcasting and community organisations about quality measurement of television franchise bidders arising from his most recent proposals for reform of broadcasting.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received any representations from Scottish broadcasting and community organisations about quality measurement of television franchise bidders arising from his most recent proposals for reform of broadcasting.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received any representations from Scottish broadcasting and community organisations about quality measurement of television franchise bidders arising from his most recent proposals for reform of broadcasting.

Mr. Mellor: A number of the responses to the broadcasting White Paper made by the Scottish ITV companies and by Scottish local and regional authorities have commented on the safeguards for quality contained in our proposals for allocating Channel 3 licences.

Mr. John Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to ensure the continuation of a regional framework for Independent Television; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: As the Broadcasting White Paper made clear, the Government are committed to maintaining a regionally-structured Channel 3 (or ITV). We are proposing that there should be statutory requirements on regional Channel 3 licensees to provide regional programmes, some of which must be produced within the region, and regional news. The precise geographical structure of the Channel 3 regions will be a matter for the Independent Television Commission to determine, but the Government have noted the statement of the chairman designate of the ITC that he would see advantages in retaining the existing regions.

Ex-prisoners

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners were discharged from prison without permanent accommodation in which to live during the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. John Patten: This information is not collected centrally. The prison and probation services promote various initiatives to provide accommodation for homeless discharged prisoners. The Home Office allocates £5 million a year to provide 4,500 bedspaces in some 350 accommodation schemes.

Pub Bombings

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met Lord Denning to discuss the case of the Birmingham Six.

Mr. G[illegible]cott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met Lord Denning to discuss the case of the Birmingham Six.

Mr. Waddington: I have not met Lord Denning to discuss this case.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many officers of the West Midlands serious crime squad who were recently transferred to non-operation duties were involved in the Birmingham pub bombing investigation.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On 26 October in response to a question from the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon) my right hon. Friend the Member for Witney (Mr. Hurd) replied that one member of the serious crime squad, which was disbanded in the summer, was involved in the investigation. I regret that this was incorrect. Further inquiry has established that a total of four officers who were members of the serious crime squad when it was disbanded had been involved in interviewing those convicted of the Birmingham pub bombing.

Police Manpower

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the proportion of police to public in Essex; and what is the comparable figure for other counties.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information on population per police officer is as follows:

Force	Population per police officer[1]
Avon and Somerset	460
Bedfordshire	508
Cambridgeshire	544
Cheshire	512

[1] The figures are calculated on the basis of mid-1988 population figures and authorised establishments of forces at 1 April 1989.

Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on manpower levels in the South Yorkshire police; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On 31 October there were 2,944 officers on the strength of the South Yorkshire police. This is 384 more than when the Government took office 10 years ago. My right hon. and learned Friend has approved a further 20 police posts for the force establishment, raising it from 2,978 to 2,998, subject to the police authority's confirmation that it is prepared to meet its share of the costs.

Betting

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had recently with the Horse Race Betting Levy Board on allocation of income.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is not the practice for us routinely to discuss with the levy board the allocation of its income in pursuance of its statutory duties. The purposes for any additional levy income featured in the submissions on the 28th levy scheme which my right hon. Friend the Member for Witney (Mr. Hurd) discussed with representatives of the Board and the Bookmakers' Committee on 14 February. My right hon. and learned Friend plans to meet the chairman of the board on 6 December, when the general question of the financing of racing is likely to be discussed.

Litter

Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were fined under the Litter Act 1983 in 1988; and what proportion of these received the maximum sentence of £400.

Mr. John Patten: The number of persons fined under the Litter Act 1983 in 1988 was 1,551. Of these 0·1 per cent. (two defendants) received the maximum sentence of £400.

Violence

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he plans to take to curb the increase in crimes of violence and sexual attacks.

Mr. John Patten: Measures to prevent these offences include tougher maximum penalties for violent offences (carrying firearms and knives); increases in police manpower; targeting of high crime areas by police; measures to deal with alcohol-related disorder; education, research and crime prevention. Further action, including new measures to tackle domestic violence, are being taken forward by the ministerial groups on crime prevention and on women's issues. Some of the recorded increase in violent crime and sexual offences is due to increased reporting by the public and recording by the police.

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of violent offences against the person consists of incidents of domestic violence.

Mr. John Patten: The results of a recent ad hoc survey of offences of violence recorded by the police indicated that one in eight offences of violence against the person involved domestic violence. Some results from this study are published in Home Office Research Bulletin No. 27, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Drugs

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures police forces are taking in conjunction with local education authorities to warn pupils of the dangers of drug taking.

Mr. Mellor: Drugs education in schools is the responsibility of local education authorities and of the schools. We encourage police forces to develop a wide programme of police/schools liaison in consultation with the local education authorities and with individual schools. This may include contributing to education about drugs as part of personal and social education in schools.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the full costs of the drugs raid on Broadwater Farm, including the full time costs of the officers employed, the processing costs of dealing with the prisoners, the opportunity costs and the administrative on-costs.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: As I stated in answer to the hon. Member on 6 November 1989 at column 429, the additional overtime costs were about £42,500. Full costs are not available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many seizures of illicit drugs have been made by police and customs in 1989 to date; and what is the estimated value of drugs seized.

Mr. Mellor: In the period 1 January to 6 November 1989 Customs report a provisional total of 6,830 seizures of controlled drugs. It is estimated that these would have had an equivalent street value of some £230 million. Comprehensive figures are not yet available for police seizures in 1989; the latest information is for 1988 when police made 32,947 seizures and customs 5,288 seizures of controlled drugs.

Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on plans for the next phase of the national drug misuse prevention campaign.

Mr. Mellor: The Health Department's final plans for the next phase of the national drug prevention publicity campaign will be considered at the next meeting of the ministerial group on the misuse of drugs. The campaign is planned to start early in the new year. In addition my right hon. and learned Friend has announced the setting up of drug prevention teams from April 1990, initially in nine local areas, to stimulate and harness community involvement in the prevention of drug misuse.

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many drug searches in Her Majesty's prisons have resulted in finds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Information is not available in the form requested by my hon. Friend. But up to 14 November, some 3,000 finds of substances believed to be drugs had been reported by prison establishments in England and Wales during 1989. Some 92 per cent. of these involved cannabis.

Safer Cities Initiative

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cities in the north west of England are covered by his Department's safer cities initiative; and what plans he has to extend the programme.

Mr. John Patten: Of the 16 projects established in the first two years of the safer cities programme, three are located in the north-west of England—at Rochdale, Salford and Wirral. We plan to set up four more projects in the financial year 1990-91, but the areas have not yet been selected.

Probation Officers

Mr. A. MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy towards the call of the Association of Chief Officers of Probation for a review of social security provisions to ensure that benefits policy supports criminal justice aims.

Mr. John Patten: The Government continue to monitor the effects of the recent changes in social security provision. As part of this monitoring the Home Office maintains close liaison with the Department of Social Security. We are also considering carefully the findings of the recent research carried out for the Association of Chief Officers of Probation by the university of Lancaster.

As a result of the monitoring arrangements my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary for Social Security recently announced (27 November 1989 at columns 420-21) a number of procedural improvements which are designed to ensure that claims for income support from young people, including young offenders, are dealt with more effectively and sympathetically. These changes demonstrate the Government's willingness to act when areas of genuine difficulty are identified.

The Home Office has already issued guidance to the probation service on the effects of the Social Security Acts 1988 and 1989. Further guidance is being prepared to explain what benefits are available to offenders and ex-offenders.

Firearms

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the implementation of new controls on gun clubs.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Consideration is being given by my right hon. and learned Friend to the implementation of the new tighter controls on gun clubs in the light of advice received from the firearms consultative committee.

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what further steps are proposed, in the light of recent incidents in Greater Manchester and elsewhere, to impose tighter controls on gun clubs.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: As my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary announced recently, he is minded that in future his approval will not be granted to any club operating a "day membership" scheme or offering any form of temporary membership facility. Visiting membership for full members of other approved clubs will be permitted. An applicant for probationary membership will have to be sponsored by two full members of the club, both of whom are themselves firearm certificate holders. Probationary members must be constantly supervised when in possession of a firearm or ammunition, either by the range master or by a full member of the club who personally holds a firearm certificate. Probationary members must be given a course of instruction in the safe and proper use of firearms. The number of probationary members of an approved club must not exceed the number of full members. The police will be able to use their powers under section 15(5) of the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988 to enter and inspect club premises to ensure that clubs are complying with the provisions of the Secretary of State's approval. We will continue to make clear to clubs that the exemption under section 15 of the 1988 Act from the requirement to hold a firearm certificate covers only target practice and does not extend to competition. Consideration is being given by my right hon. and learned Friend, to the implementation of these proposals in the light of advice received from the Firearms Consultative Committee.

Charities

Mr. Bell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had about the level of Government support to charities.

Mr. John Patten: Ministers and officials have frequent discussions with a range of individuals and groups about Government support to charities and other matters affecting the voluntary sector. On 17 October my right hon. and noble Friend the Earl Ferrers, my noble Friend the Paymaster General and I met members of the Council for Charitable Support to discuss a number of issues relating to charity.

Adoption

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many children have been allowed into the United Kingdom, for adoption by United Kingdom citizens, from each of the countries which do not have the same laws and procedures on adoption as exist in the United Kingdom, during each of the past five years; and what is the average length of time it takes for inquiries to be carried out into prospective adoptive children from such countries.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information is not available in the form requested, as the statistics collected on passenger admissions do not separately identify children who come to the United Kingdom for adoption. However, the available information is shown in the table. Corresponding information for 1984 and 1985 could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Adoption orders made by the courts in certain designated countries are recognised as valid for the purposes of United Kingdom law. Some 63 countries are designated for this purpose under the Adoption (Designation of Overseas Adoptions) Order 1973. There is no provision in the immigration rules for the admission of children adopted in non-designated countries. However the Secretary of State may exceptionally exercise discretion to allow a child to come here for adoption if he is satisfied that this is appropriate in the particular case.

Information on the average length of time required for inquiries to be carried out into prospective adoption cases is not available; the time varies according to the circumstances of the particular case.

[1] This order designates those countries whose adoption orders are recognised as valid for the purposes of United Kingdom law.

[2] 1987 figures may not be entirely complete.

[3] Number from each country in these year(s)

East Germany

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, since the opening of the borders of East Germany, any East German citizens have applied for entry to the United Kingdom as residents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Citizens of the German Democratic Republic require visas to enter the United Kingdom and neither of the British posts in Berlin has received any applications for visas for settlement in this country since the opening of the border between east and west Berlin on 9 November. There have been no reports from any other quarter of any East German citizens seeking entry to reside in the United Kingdom.

Police Operations (Ethnic Minorities)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of civilian employees from the ethnic minority community in the employ of the Greater Manchester police authority.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand from the police authority that there are 31 civilian staff, including traffic wardens, from the ethnic minorities employed by the Greater Manchester police authority.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of police officers recruited from the ethnic minority community in the Greater Manchester police force; what has been the number of applications from ethnic minorites during each of the past five years; and how many ethnic minority police officers have left the force during the same periods of time.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: On 27 November 1989, 102 members of the ethnic minorities were serving as police officers in the Greater Manchester police. The other information requested is given in the following table:

1985	128	4
1986	90	4
1987	142	2
1988	90	6

[1] To date.

Police Operations (Media Presence)

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he proposes to meet the Association of Chief Police Officers to discuss the presence of media personnel on police operations.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans to meet the Association of Chief Police Officers to discuss this matter.

Political Refugees

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reason an identity card was removed by United Kingdom immigration authorities when Navaratnasingham Vathanan was ordered back to Sri Lanka, having applied for entry to the United Kingdom as a political refugee.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that Mr. Vathanan's identity card was taken in order to obtain a travel document for him from the Sri Lanka High Commission. I regret the fact that it was lost. Pages had been removed from the passport on which he had arrived.

Parole

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many prisoners are currently beyond parole eligibility date awaiting a decision; and what has been the number in each of the last 12 months;

(2) what has been the average delay beyond parole eligibility date for each of the four prison department regions in each of the last six months.

Mr. Mellor: Information is not available in the form requested. About three quarters of cases are decided on the basis of local review committee recommendations alone. There are now no general delays in these cases, compared with the position in the summer of this year when one quarter of them were delayed by an average of about one month beyond PED. The delay in parole board cases, which exceeded three months in the summer, has now been reduced to about two-and-a-half months beyond PED. There is no evidence of any significant regional variation in the delays.

Further and more rapid improvements should follow the administrative changes my right hon. and learned Friend announced in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Burton (Mr. Lawrence) on 30 November at column 396. The aim is to eliminate completely the present delays by March next year.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the longest period beyond parole eligibility date that a prisoner is currently waiting.

Mr. Mellor: Information in this form is not readily available from central records.

West Midlands Police

Mr. Wall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the chief constable of the West Midlands; and what was discussed.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the chief constable of the West Midlands; and what was discussed.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last discussed the pub bombings case with the chief constable of the West Midlands.

Mr. Waddington: I have had no meetings with the chief constable of the West Midlands since I took office as Home Secretary.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) on how many occasions in 1989 a member of the Home Office inspectorate has visited the dog toxicology unit at Huntingdon research centre; or how many occasions the conditions in which animals were housed and cared for were found to be satisfactory and in line with the Home Office code of practice for the housing and care of animals used in scientific procedures;

(2) on how many occasions in 1989 a member of the Home Office inspectorate has visited Huntingdon research centre;

(3) on how many occasions in 1989 a member of the Home Office inspectorate has visited the rodent toxicology unit at Huntingdon research centre; and on how many occasions the conditions in which the animals were housed and cared for were found to be satisfactory and in line with the Home Office code of practice for the housing and care of animals used in scientific procedures.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: It is not our practice to disclose this information in relation to individual establishments. For 1988, the last year for which figures are available, inspectors paid 7,354, mainly unannounced, visits to departments within the 375 places designated under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. The Home Office code of practice for the housing and care of animals used in scientific procedures (1989; HC 107) was published in February this year. Establishments which were not already complying with it in every detail are expected to do so within a realistic time scale.

Young Recidivists

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in how many cases young recidivists have re-offended in the years 1986-87 to 1988-89.

Mr. John Patten: Statistics are not readily available in the form requested. Information on the sentencing of young offenders reconvicted within two years of discharge from prison service establishments in England and Wales is published annually in Prison Statistics (tables 9.7 and 9.10 of the latest volume, for 1988, Cm. 825), copies of which are available in the Library. Of an estimated 28,800 young persons discharged from prison service establishments in 1985, 18,300 were reconvicted within two years of discharge, of whom 10,600 were recommitted to custody.

Chief Constables (Talks)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what issues were discussed at his Department's last meeting with representatives of chief constables.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 4 December 1989]: My right hon. and learned Friend last met representatives of the Association of Chief Police Officers on 10 November. They discussed a number of matters including police appointments and the organisation of the police service.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who instructed the immigration and nationality department to resolve applications for political asylum from those believed to be members of, or to have links with, the Pakistan People's party, without interview; when the instruction was issued; how many applicants, to date, have had their applications resolved without interview; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 28 November 1989]: In April my right hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Sussex (Mr. Renton) and my right hon. Friend the Member for Witney (Mr. Hurd) approved special case-working arrangements for resolving a backlog of about 900 asylum applications from Pakistani nationals. The great majority of the asylum claims were based on links with the Pakistan People's party. Following the death of President Zia in August 1988 the democratic process was reinstated in Pakistan; the Pakistan People's party participated freely in party politics at national and provincial level, and, following the elections in November 1988, became the governing party nationally. In all the circumstances it was decided that applications based solely on Pakistan People's party connections could be refused without interview. Applicants raising other matters continue to be dealt with in the normal way and would be interviewed before a refusal decision was taken. All those who are refused without interview have a right of appeal, exercisable in this country, against refusal of leave or deportation.

Our statistical records do not distinguish between refusals with and without interview. It is known, however, that some 483 asylum applications from Pakistani nationals have been refused so far in 1989.

Pornography

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to ban all pornographic material dealing specifically with sexual violence towards women and children.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 27 November 1989]: Among other measures, the Obscene Publications Act 1959, the Indecent Displays (Control) Act 1981, the Video Recordings Act 1984 and the duties of the broadcasting regulatory bodies (which will be re-affirmed in our Broadcasting Bill) provide controls over pornographic material in its various forms. We have made it plain that we should favour a stronger test of obscenity to replace that in the 1959 Act. We have no other proposals at present.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will convene a meeting between representatives of groups objecting to the sale of pornography and retailers to discuss current retailing practice.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 27 November 1989]: No. We have drawn the strength of feeling represented to us about the availability of certan publications to the attention of major newsagents, and it is open to those who object to the sale of what they regard as pornography to protest directly to the retailers.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what studies his Department conducted, has commissioned or is aware of concerning the link between pornographic material and sexual violence towards women and children; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 27 November 1989]: We have not conducted or commissioned specific studies into any possible link between pornography and sexual violence towards women and children, but we are aware of numerous studies on the impact of pornography. These have not, to our knowledge, shown definitely either that there is or that there is not such a link. We are planning a review of the available evidence.

TRANSPORT

Ports

109. Mr. Janman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of progress which has been made in British ports since the abolition of the dock labour scheme towards increased competitiveness and the attraction of new business; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: The former scheme ports have responded with impressive enthusiasm and energy to the new opportunities opened up by the possibility of eliminating overmanning and restrictive practices. Business inquiries are at a high level. The way is now open for new industrial developments in dock areas and for the larger of these ports to win back some of the deep-sea trade that is routed through ports on the continent.

Leaded Petrol

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the number of cars that have converted back to leaded fuel in the last 12 months.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have been asked to reply.

We have no statistics on the number of cars converted back to leaded petrol.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what percentage of heavy goods vehicle journeys were checked for excessive weights in each of the past six years; and what percentage of (a) British and (b) foreign vehicles were found to be over the weight limits.

Mr. Atkins: It is estimated that in 1984-85 about 0·04 per cent. and 1987-88 about 0·05 per cent. of HGV journeys were checked for excessive weight. Figures for other years are not available.

The percentages of British and foreign vehicles from those checked found to be over the weight limits were as follows:

Year	British Per cent.	Foreign Per cent.
1984-85	23·4	27·6
1985-86	25·8	25·1
1986-87	24·2	27·6
1987-88	22·0	25·0
1988-89	18·5	24·9

The statistics relate to those vehicles weighed by Department of Transport and local authority trading standards enforcement staff. The police also weigh vehicles but no information on the numbers weighed is available.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has passed to the chairman of British Rail the representations from hon. and right hon. Members to consider all alternative proposals for the high speed rail link to the Channel tunnel.

Mr. Portillo: Yes. However, as I said in my answer to the hon. Member for Waveney (Mr. Porter) on Monday 4 December, I accept that now that BR and Eurorail have announced their preferred route through Kent and terminal in London it will not be practicable for them to devote great efforts to examining other proposals.

Cyclists

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to remove the potential danger to road users of the use by cyclists of personal stereos; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: There is no clear evidence that personal stereos are causing accidents. However, all road users—and vulnerable ones in particular—should make sure that they are able to concentrate fully on driving or riding. They should avoid unnecessary sources of distraction. The highway code for young road users, produced by the County Road Safety Officers Association and sponsored by General Accident, advises cyclists not to wear a personal stereo and we are considering adding similar advice to the highway code.

Vehicle Emissions

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what further steps he is taking to reduce vehicle emissions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Draft amendments to the construction and use regulations were published on 1 December.

The new regulations will mean that virtually all new cars from 1992 onwards will be fitted with catalysts. They set for the first time in the United Kingdom, specific requirements for the user of a vehicle to keep the engine in tune and any emission control equipment in working order.

Cars and lorries need to be designed to meet much tighter emission limits. It is equally important for drivers to recognise their responsibility to keep vehicles properly tuned to keep emissions down. These new regulations will make this responsibility clear.

Road Lighting

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many miles of motorway there were in 1988, 1978 and 1968; and what proportion of each were lit.

Mr. Atkins: The information requested is as follows:

	Miles	Percentage lit
1968	493	5
1978	1,261	20
1988	1,577	27

These figures relate to motorways in England for which the Secretary of State is the highway authority. The figure for the percentage lit in 1988 is an estimate based on latest available data.

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will specify the research known to his Department to have been conducted into driver reaction times in changing from lit to unlit conditions; and if he will place copies of the research in the Library.

Mr. Atkins: The research in question is detailed in "The Effect on Vision of Terminations of Isolated Lengths of Fixed Lighting", published by the Australian Road Research Board in 1973. A copy has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what criteria he uses to determine whether or not a stretch of motorway or trunk road should be lit.

Mr. Atkins: The criteria are published in "Appraisal of New and Replacement Lighting on Trunk Roads and Trunk Road Motorways", the Department's highways and traffic advice note TA 49/86. A copy is in the Library.

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what evidence he has that lighting on motorways can reduce night-time accidents by 30 per cent., and if he will place copies of that evidence in the Library.

Mr. Atkins: The Department's current assessment that the provision of lighting on motorways can lead to a 30 per cent. reduction in night-time accidents is based on international research. That research has been studied by the transport and road research laboratory. It confirmed the Department's assessment. Details of this study are given in "Light on Motorway Accident Rates", an article published by the Institution of Highways and Transportation in 1987. A copy has been placed in the Library.

A20

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to make a decision on the route of the eastern section of the A20 extension into Dover.

Mr. Atkins: Following public inquiries last year into draft proposals for the Court Wood to Dover section of the A20, my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Transport and for the Environment are announcing their joint decisions tomorrow. I have arranged for my hon. Friend the Member for Dover (Mr. Shaw) to receive a copy of the decision which is being sent today to all those who submitted objections and representations to the draft proposals and to those who attended or were represented at the inquiries.

Freight Railway Lines

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many freight railway lines have been opened to passenger traffic under the Transport Act 1962 (Amendment) Act 1981; and if he will list these with mileages of track, dates of opening and whether they remain open to passenger traffic.

Mr. Portillo: Fifteen stretches of freight line have been opened or re-opened by British Rail to passenger traffic under the Transport Act 1962 (Amendment) Act 1981. The details are as folows:

Line	Year	Approximate mileage
Penistone-Barnsley	1983	7·5
Newbridge Junction-Bathgate	1986	10·2
Kettering-Corby	1987	5·5
Dore Curve (Derbyshire)	1987	0·25

Walsall-Hednesford	1989	9·75
Thornton West Junction-Thornton South Junction (Fife)	1989	0·25
Altrincham-Stockport	1989	8·0

Note:

All these lines remain open to passenger traffic.

EMPLOYMENT

Health and Safety

17. Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals he has to improve health protection and safety conditions in the workplace.

95. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals he has to improve health protection and safety conditions in the workplace.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Commission's "Plan of Work for 1989-90 and Beyond" published in May 1989 set out the Commission's priorities for improving health and safety at work. As my right hon. Friend announced, the Health and Safety Commissions' request for additional funding has been met in full for the third year running. This will allow for a real growth in activity.

30. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how he plans to extend health and safety protection at work.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Durham, North-West (Ms. Armstrong) earlier today.

Labour Statistics

18. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the change in unemployment levels during the last year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fowler: In the 12 months to October 1989 seasonally adjusted unemployment in the United Kingdom has fallen by about 484,000 or 22·4 per cent. The percentage fall in unemployment has been larger, nationally and in the majority of regions, in the past year than in either of the previous two years.

82. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the current number of people in employment in the United Kingdom, and in other Overseas Economic Community Development countries.

Mr. Nicholls: In June 1989 the United Kingdom civilian workforce in employment stood at 26,035,000—12 per cent. higher than in June 1983. The following table shows civilian employment in other Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries, where the information is available, over the same period.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for the years 1968, 1978 and 1988 the number of employee and self-employed workers divided into manual and non-manual, male and female, adult and juvenile, and full-time and part-time.

Mr. Nicholls: Data for each of the groups requested is only available on a comparable basis from the labour force survey (LFS). Estimates from the 1988 and 1979 LFS (the earliest year for which comparable estimates are available) are shown in the table.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the total number of employed and self-employed people in Britain.

Mr. Eggar: In June 1989, the latest date for which figures are available, there were 21,932,000 employees in employment in Great Britain and 3,050,000 self-employed.

98. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current number of registered unemployment in Bexley and what was the figure for 1988 and 1987.

Mr. Nicholls: In October 1989, the number of unemployed claimants in the local authority area of Bexley was 3,661 compared with 4,866 in October 1988 and 6,603 in October 1987. These figures are slightly affected by the change in benefit regulations affecting under-18-year-olds in September 1988.

88. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the current level of unemployment.

104. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the unemployment change since June 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: In October 1989, the level of unemployment, seasonally adjusted, in the United Kingdom was 1,674,000, compared with 3,130,200 in June 1986, a fall of 46·5 per cent. Unemployment has now fallen for 39 months running, and is now at its lowest for nine years.

77. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many travel-to-work areas, on the most recent date for which figures are available, in south-east England, have an unemployment rate (a) over 10 per cent., (b) between five per cent. and 10 per cent. and (c) below five per cent.

Mr. Nicholls: Of the 39 travel-to-work areas in the south-east, 33 had an unemployment rate of less than 5 per cent. in October 1989 and the remainder had rates of between 5 and 10 per cent.

75. Mr. Donald Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current unemployment rate in the United Kingdom and in other European Community countries; and if he will make a statement.

91. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the current unemployment rate in the United Kingdom and the average in the European Community.

Mr. Nicholls: In September 1989, the latest comparable date, unemployment in the United Kingdom was 6·3 per cent. compared to an EEC average of 9·1 per cent. The following table shows a full comparison. Over the past two years the unemployment rate in the United Kingdom has fallen faster than in any other major European country.

69. Mr. Neale: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were employed in the United Kingdom in May 1983 and October 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is not available for the months requested. The work force in employment in the United Kingdom was 23,613,000 in June 1983. It increased by 2,730,000 to stand at 26,343,000, the highest level ever, in June 1989.

57. Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current level of male unemployment in the Bassetlaw constituency.

Mr. Nicholls: In October 1989 the number of male unemployed claimants in the Bassetlaw parliamentary constituency was 2,283.

55. Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the current level of employment in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nicholls: In June 1989 the work force in employment in the United Kingdom stood at 26,343,000, the highest level on record. This represents an increase of 479,000 or 1·9 per cent. since June 1988. The rising trend has now continued for six years.

56. Mr. Brando-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were unemployed in the United Kingdom in May 1983, September 1983, March 1986 and October 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The table shows the levels of unemployment, seasonally adjusted, in the United Kingdom for May 1983, September 1983, March 1986, and October 1989. The level of unemployment in October 1989 is the lowest for nine years.

October 1989	1,674,000	5·9

[1] Number of unemployed as a percentage of the estimated total workforce.

47. Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were unemployed in June 1987 and October 1989; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: In October 1989 the level of unemployment, seasonally adjusted, in the United Kingdom was 1,674,000 compared with 2,857,200 in June 1987, a fall of 41·4 per cent. Unemployment is now at its lowest level for nine years.

31. Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about the current level of unemployment in the north-west region.

40. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the reduction of unemployment in the north-west since June 1986.

Mr. Nicholls: In October 1989 the level of unemployment seasonally adjusted, in the north-west was 245,500 compared with 427,400 in June 1986, a fall of 181,900 or 42·6 per cent.

24. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the unemployment rate in the United Kingdom and in other Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries.

Mr. Nicholls: In August 1989, the latest comparable date, the rate of unemployment in the United Kingdom measured on the agreed international basis was lower than in Canada, France, Italy, Belgium, the Netherlands, Spain, Denmark, Greece and Ireland. Over the past two years the United Kingdom unemployment rate has fallen faster than the rate in any other major industrialised country.

25. Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when the seasonally adjusted unemployment figures last showed an increase in the number of people out of work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The seasonally adjusted unemployment figures last showed an increase in July 1986. Since that date unemployment has fallen by about 1½ million or 47 per cent. This is the longest and largest sustained fall on record, and unemployment is now at its lowest level for nine years.

22. Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the number of people in employment in the United Kingdom and in the other member countries of the European Community.

Mr. Nicholls: In 1987, the latest year for which comparable information is available for all European Community countries, there were 24·8 million people in civilian employment in the United Kingdom. This represents a growth of over 6 per cent. since 1983; more than three times greater than the growth rate in the rest of the EC countries combined.

50. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide the latest unemployment figures for Sheffield expressed as a percentage; and what is the national average.

Mr. Nicholls: In October 1989, in the Sheffield travel-to-work area the number of unemployed claimants expressed as a percentage of the total workforce was 8·6 per cent. This compares to a rate of 5·8 per cent. in the United Kingdom.

51. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are currently unemployed in the Liverpool travel-to-work area.

Mr. Nicholls: In October 1989, in the Liverpool travel-to-work area there were 64,235 unemployed claimants.

52. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will list the towns in England and Wales which now have 3 per cent. or less unemployment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The table shows the travel-to-work areas in England and Wales where the number of unemployed claimants expressed as a percentage of the work force was three per cent. or less in October 1989. In the last three years the rate of unemployment has nearly halved in the United Kingdom and this improvement is seen at local level throughout the country.

Job Opportunities

19. Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has received on the job opportunities provided through employment training to trainees; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: A recent pilot survey of employment training (ET) leavers shows that over half of the people (53 per cent.) who completed their training went into jobs or self-employment. These encouraging early results provide further evidence of the programme's continuing success in helping large numbers of unemployed people back into work.

Older Workers

20. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of the population aged 55 years and over is expected to remain economically active during the course of the next 10 years; and what plans he has to combat discrimination on the grounds of age by employers.

Mr. Nicholls: My Department's latest projections which are largely based on past trends, show the proportion of people aged 55 and over who are economically active remaining in the range of 22 per cent. to 24 per cent. over the next 10 years.

We are constantly emphasising to employers that age discrimination is not in their interests, particularly as numbers of young people decline.

Training and Enterprise Councils

21. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many training and enterprise councils have received funding in the east midlands and eastern region; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend approved applications for development funding from five employer groups in the east midlands and eastern region.

90. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many training and enterprise councils have received development funding in the north-west region; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend has approved applications for development funding from eight employer groups in the north-west.

78. Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many training and enterprise councils have received funding in the Yorkshire and Humberside region; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend has approved applications for development funding from four employer groups in Yorkshire and Humberside.

73. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current progress on setting up training and enterprise councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I have been very encouraged by the excellent response from employers throughout the country to our invitation to form training and enterprise councils (TECs).

Over 50 groups of senior employers in England and Wales have applied for development funding; the table lists the areas from which we have had applications and indicate their status.

96. Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many training and enterprise councils he expects will have been established by the end of 1989.

Mr. Eggar: At present over 40 training and enterprise councils have had development funding approved.

58. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many training and enterprise councils have received funding in the south-east; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend has approved applications for TEC development funding from seven groups of employers in the south-east.

33. Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many training and enterprise councils have received development funding in the south-west; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend has approved applications for development funding from four employer groups in the south-west.

Child Care

23. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to encourage the provision of child care facilities in the workplace.

Mr. Nicholls: The Government believe that child care is a matter for parental choice and that it is best left to employers and employees to decide which arrangements for combining work and family responsibilities best suit their individual needs and resources. Workplace child care is not always the most practicable solution.

Youth Training

26. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the youth training scheme.

67. Mrs. Currie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to promote improved training for young people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fowler: Since the introduction of the youth training scheme in 1983 well over 2 million young people have benefited from the programme. Over 85 per cent. of young people who complete their training programme now go into jobs, further education or training, and 64 per cent. gain a vocational qualification.

YTS has been a great success, but we now need to build on that success to meet the higher level skills that the economy will need in the 1990s and to enable training and enterprise councils to make the maximum impact in developing arrangments for youth training which will lift the skills and qualifications of young people in their areas. I have therefore decided to introduce new arrangements to promote training for young people to be known as youth training.

The central aims of the new arrangements will be to move to a situation where all young people are either in full time education or a job with training and have the opportunity to develop their potential, qualifications, and skill to the full.

All young people on YT will be offered training and vocational education leading to qualifications equivalent to, at a minimum, level 2 in the framework established by the National Council for Vocational Qualifications. Targets will be set annually for major and progressive increases in the skills to be reached, both generally and at craft and technician levels.

The Government's guarantee will continue. All young people up to the age of 18 who are in the labour market but without a job will be offered a training place on youth training.

There will continue to be a strong emphasis on health and safety and on equal opportunities for young people. There will be appropriate arrangements for identifying and providing for young people who are disabled or who have special training needs.

Disabled Persons

27. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what additional measures he will introduce to enable disabled persons to participate fully in the workforce.

Mr. Eggar: The adequacy of current measures to enable people with disabilities to participate fully in the workforce is being considered in the review of services for people with disabilities which my Department has been undertaking. A consultative document covering the conclusions reached in the review will be published as soon as possible.

Age Discrimination

28. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps his Department is taking to help reduce age discrimination in employment practices by employers in the public and private sectors.

Mr. Nicholls: The Government believe that older workers are a valuable resource. Unfair age discrimination both hurts individuals and damages businesses. We are putting across that message to employers through various media, particularly in the context of publicity about demographic change. In addition, jobcentre staff have been instructed to query all upper age limits on notified vacancies. I am encouraged that a growing number of public and private employers are adopting positive policies on recruitment and retention of older workers.

YTS

29. Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest information available to him on the percentage of YTS leavers in the Dacorum borough council area going on to (a) full-time employment, (b) part-time employment and (c) full-time education.

Mr. Nicholls: The latest available figures show that 76 per cent. of YTS leavers entered full-time employment, 2·3 per cent. entered part-time employment and 2·6 per cent. entered full-time education in the Dacoram borough council area.

100. Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of YTS trainees secure jobs within six months of completing their training course; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: A total of 84 per cent. of young people were in employment shortly after completing their YTS training.

65. Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people have participated in YTS since its inception; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Over 2½ million young people have participated in YTS since its inception in 1983.

Tourism

32. Mr. Amos: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans his Department have to encourage regional tourism for European tourism year in 1990.

Mr. Nicholls: The British Tourist Authority is co-ordinating and orchestrating the United Kingdom's plans for European Tourism Year, a major theme of which is to encourage tourists to visit different regions. The plans embrace events throughout the country including the Gateshead garden festival.

80. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action is taken by his Department, in conjunction with local authorities, to ensure that tourist development is not permitted to spoil existing environmental amenity; and what specific action in that regard he is taking relating to the county of Rutland.

Mr. Nicholls: One of the aims of the English tourist board (ETB), which receives funding from my Department, is to ensure that tourism activities do not work to the detriment of the environment. In September 1988, the ETB launched in conjunction with the Rural Development Commission a publication "Visitors in the Countryside". This sets out how tourism developments can be undertaken whilst preserving or enhancing the environment in rural areas. The publication emphasises the key role played by local authorities in encouraging the development of tourism projects in keeping with this aim. My Department has not singled out the county of Rutland for any specific action in this regard.

42. Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the level of investment in tourism projects in the south-west following the suspension of section 4 grant aid.

Mr. Nicholls: The most up-to-date figures published by the English tourist board show that the value of tourism projects (worth £0·5 million or more) which were completed during the period January to June 1989 in the region covered by the West Country tourist board was £33 million. Further projects to a value of £155 million were still under construction on 30 June.

Collective Agreements

34. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals he has to encourage the conclusion of collective agreements for those at work.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has no such proposals.

Women Workers

35. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to encourage the participation of women in full time employment.

Mr. Nicholls: The Government are taking a number of steps to facilitate the re-entry of women to the labour market—through training and through drawing employers' attention to the need to adopt flexible working practices. Childcare initiatives by the ministerial group on women's issues which are aimed at the voluntary and private sectors will also assist, but whether a woman chooses to work full-time or part-time or to stay at home to look after her family must be entirely a matter for her.

Parental Leave

36. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to introduce statutory parental leave, available equally for mothers and fathers.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has no such plans.

Manufacturing Industry

37. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the average working week in manufacturing industry in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Nicholls: It is estimated from the 1988 labour force survey (LFS) that in spring 1988, the average number of hours usually worked (including paid and unpaid overtime but excluding meal-breaks) by persons in employment in the manufacturing industries in Great Britain, was 42·3 hours per week.

Bradford

38. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he next intends to visit Bradford.

Mr. Fowler: I have no immediate plans to visit Bradford.

Social Charter

39. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has been able to secure any changes to the draft European Community social charter.

Mr. Eggar: Following discussions with all member states, the French Presidency of the Community has submitted a revised version of the European Commission's proposal for a decision on adoption at the European Council in Strasbourg.

Training

41. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of those people who leave the employment training scheme find jobs; and if he will make a statement.

60. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of employment training participants secure jobs after completing their training; and if he will make a statement.

81. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make a statement on the pilot survey of the employment training scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: A recent preliminary survey of employment training leavers shows that 53 per cent. of the people who completed their training went into jobs or self-employment. Of those who did not even complete their training as many as 46 per cent. got jobs or went into self-employment. These encouraging early results provide further evidence of ET's continuing success in helping large numbers of unemployed people back into work.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people for each year since 1975 were on (a) the training opportunities programme, (b) the wider opportunities programme, (c) the job training programme in its original and revised forms and (d) employment training.

Mr. Nicholls: The table shows the numbers of people who started on each scheme from 1974-1975 to 1988-89. The figures include those who started for a second or subsequent time.

[1] Employment training started in September 1988. The figure shown is cumulative starts for the period September 1988 to March 1989.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current size of the client group for employment training.

Mr. Nicholls: It is not possible to estimate the total number of people in the employment training client group. However, in October 1989 some 812,000 claimants aged 18 to 60 had been unemployed for more than six months.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action he intends to take in response to the Confederation of British Industry's proposal for giving every 16-year-old a £1,600 cash credit a year towards training.

Mr. Nicholls: There are many issues to be considered before any decision is reached on the recommendation in CBI's task force report in favour of training credits. The Government are examining the report's recommendations with interest.

103. Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the provision of training places by employers.

Mr. Nicholls: Employers are making a vital contribution to the succcess of both the youth training scheme and employment training through their provision of training places. Employer placements give trainees an opportunity to develop and demonstrate skills in a realistic work environment; ensure that there is a relevant and realistic occupational focus to their training and offer them the best chance of securing a permanent job or self-employment opportunity.

85. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are currently participating in the employment training programme.

Mr. Nicholls: The latest figures show that over 210,000 people are on employment training.

79. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are currently enrolled in employment training.

Mr. Nicholls: The latest figures show that over 210,000 people are on employment training.

72. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are participating in employment training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The latest figures show that over 210,000 people are on employment training. This clearly reflects the programme's outstanding success in attracting unemployed people to take advantage of the help it offers them to get jobs and skills.

66. Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the progress of employment training in Cumbria.

Mr. Nicholls: Employment training in Cumbria, as nationally, continues to make excellent progress. It is currently helping nearly 1,500 unemployed people to obtain the skills and experience they need to get jobs.

54. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will revise the level of supplementary grant payable for employment training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: There are no plans to revise the level of supplementary grants payable for employment training (ET).

The Government believe that the level and number of supplementary grants currently payable is sufficient to provide training of good quality.

In future training and enterprise councils will be able to vary both the structure and level of payments to ET training managers.

Training Credits

43. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will introduce a pilot scheme to provide young people with training credits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: There are many issues to be considered before any decision is reached on the recommendation in CBI's task force report in favour of training credits. The Government are examining the report's recommendations with interest.

Enterprise Allowance Scheme

44. Mr. Grylls: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have now participated in the enterprise allowance scheme; and if he will make a statement.

86. Mr. Carttiss: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have participated in the enterprise allowance scheme since its inception; and if he will make a statement.

87. Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many jobs have been created by the enterprise allowance scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Since its inception in 1982, over 480,000 people have started up in business through the enterprise allowance scheme. Survey evidence shows that in addition to those receiving the allowance, for every 100 businesses still operating at the three-year stage 114 additional jobs have been generated.

Machine Tool Manufacture

45. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are employed in machine tool manufacture; what was the figure five years and 10 years ago; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is as follows:

Employees in employment
Unadjusted, Great Britain
Metal-working machine tools and engineers tools (Group 322)[1]

September 1984	76,299

Youth Unemployment

46. Mr. Bevan: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current youth unemployment rate (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) in other European Community Countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: In September 1989, the latest comparable date, the unemployment rate in the United Kingdom amongst under 25-year-olds was under half that of the EEC average. The following table shows a full comparison.

EC Institutions

48. Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the implications of the social charter with regard to the extension of the power of European Community institutions to initiate and carry through legislation.

Mr. Eggar: The social charter would not itself extend the powers of the European Community institutions to initiate and carry through legislation. It might however be seen by those institutions, including the European Court of Justice, as a commitment to the principles embodied in it.

Minimum Wages

49. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to increase minimum wage levels.

89. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures he is undertaking to increase minimum wage levels.

93. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what measures he is undertaking to increase minimum wage levels.

Mr. Nicholls: Pay generally is a matter for employers and their employees to decide for themselves in the light of all the relevant circumstances. A national minimum wage would destroy jobs.

Benefit Fraud (Construction Sites)

53. Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will report on progress in tackling benefit fraud on construction sites; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Construction sites are regularly included in benefit fraud investigations by this Department. Exercises on these sites often prove successful in identifying fraudulent claimants. For example, a recent exercise in the Kent area investigated 592 construction site workers, resulting in 177 claims to benefit being withdrawn with a net benefit saving of £167,000. We will continue to investigate benefit fraud within the industry.

Private Employment Agencies

59. Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any proposals for laying down basic standards for private employment agencies.

Mr. Eggar: Basic standards are already laid down in the Employment Agencies Act 1973 and the Associated Conduct Regulations (S.I. 1976, No. 715).

Maternity Rights

61. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans his Department has to improve maternity rights.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has no such plans. The Employment protection legislation already gives substantial rights in respect of maternity.

Employment Rights

62. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how he intends to extend employment rights to all those in work.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has no current plans to extend the employment protection legislation.

Small Businesses

63. Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will make a statement on the effective liaison and subsequent achievements of his Department, in helping small businesses over the last 12 months.

Mr. Eggar: My Department has close ties with the small business sector and since I was appointed Minister for Small Firms last July, I have made it my business to meet a wide range of organisations representing and providing services to small firms.

To assist with small firms development, my Department operates a number of programmes which includes the small firms service which provides a comprehensive information and advice service, as well as particular measures to help ease access to finance. An indication of how these measures have fared over the past 12 months is as follows:

In 1988-89, the small firms service answered over 281,000 inquiries (an increase of 6 per cent. on 1987-88), handled over 30,000 new counselling cases (an increase of 12 per cent. on 1987-88), and conducted over 43,000 counselling sessions (an increase of 10 per cent. on 1987-88);

This year, the number of small businesses to benefit from the loan guarantee scheme which underwrites unsecured loans for small businesses, was 2,292, an increase of 1,058 over the previous year;

In addition, the number of entrants to the Training Agency's enterprise programmes, the business enterprise programme and the enterprise training element of employment training, increased by 22 per cent. from 43,489 in 1987-88 to 53,003 in 1988-89, The number of entrants to the graduate enterprise programme, which helps graduates take the first steps to setting up businesses on their own, rose from 155 in 1987-88 to 1,150 in 1988-89;

My Department also provides financial assistance through the enterprise allowance scheme, and makes substantial grants to Business in the Community, local enterprise agencies and the Prince's Youth Business trust, amongst others.

Self-employed Statistics

64. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are currently self-employed in each region of the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The number of self-employed in the United Kingdom is estimated to be higher than ever before. The following table shows self-employment in each region for June 1989:

Self-employed in the United Kingdom

Industry Training Boards

68. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether the successor bodies to the industry training boards will be eligible for funds from the European social fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: As my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State told the House during the debate on the Employment Bill on 8 November, we are discussing this matter with the European Commission with a view to allowing the successor bodies to industry training boards the same access to the European social fund as the existing boards. I shall keep the hon. Member informed of the outcome of these discussions.

Employment Service Staff (Assaults)

71. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of notified incidents of assault on members of employment service staff during 1989.

Mr. Eggar: Between 1 January and 17 November 1989 there were 126 notified incidents of actual physical assault on members of staff in the employment service. In the same period there were 821 reported cases of threatening behaviour and verbal abuse.

Construction Industry Training Board

74. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he next plans to meet the chairman of the construction industry training board.

Mr. Nicholls: On 9 November I wrote to the chairman of CITB informing him of our plans for future training arrangements for the construction industry and detailing the priorities for the new board. I have no current plans to meet the chairman at this time, but Training Agency officials have already met CITB officials to discuss how priority work can be taken forward.

97. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to make the payment of the construction industry training board levy voluntary for small builders and construction firms.

Mr. Nicholls: The Government have asked the board to devise new levy-grant arrangements which exclude more small firms from the levy and have the effect of extinguishing the levy liability of the better training employers.

Employment Training Agencies (Abuse)

76. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received about abuses by employment training agencies in the west of Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The operations of training agents and training managers in the west of Scotland, as in the country overall, are regularly monitored. I have no evidence of abuse and robust control is exercised to ensure contractual obligations are met.

Vocational Training

83. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to encourage those in work to have an opportunity to continue vocational training throughout their working lives.

Mr. Nicholls: This must be primarily the responsibility of individuals and their employers. The training and enterprise councils will help employers to undertake investment in people. They will be closely involved in an action programme on investing in people that I have asked the national training task force to join with the CBI and other business and training organisations in developing.

Industrial Relations

84. Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to improve industrial relations in 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: My Department's aims include promoting a positive environment for work, in which industrial relations continue to improve. We shall continue to promote good practices, such as those connected with employee involvement described in the recently published booklet "People and Companies", and to review and reform industrial relations and trade union legislation as necessary to establish a fair balance under the law. We shall also continue to support the independent Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service, which is charged with the general duty of promoting the improvement of industrial relations.

Business Growth Training Scheme

92. Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the response to the business growth training scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: Business growth training was launched in April, to help small businesses improve their competitiveness and profits through training. So far the response to business growth training has been encouraging with over 30,000 firms taking advantage of the options available under the initiative.

Trade Unions

94. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals he has to encourage workers to join trade unions.

Mr. Nicholls: None. As stated in our White Paper "Employment for the 1990's" (Cm 540), the Government believe that people should be free to choose for themselves whether or not they belong to a trade union.

Annual Leave

99. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to introduce annual leave for working people as a statutory right.

Mr. Nicholls: None. Terms and conditions of employment are a matter for employers and employees to determine.

Part-time Workers

101. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to extend the protection of part-time workers.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has no such plans.

Equal Opportunities

102. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how his Department intends to encourage equal opportunities in the workplace.

Mr. Nicholls: Employment Department Ministers take every opportunity to emphasise to employers the importance of equal opportunities in the workplace and the need to treat people on their merits regardless of their race, colour, sex, age, disability, etc.

My Department's jobcentres and the Training Agency make equal opportunities a priority. Jobcentres have an important role both in advising people who feel they have suffered discrimination of their right to complain to an industrial tribunal and in challenging employers who notify potentially discriminatory vacancies to jobcentres.

The Training Agency's recent publication "Defusing the Demographic Time Bomb" which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State launched on 24 October will help to promote the need to develop all the work force.

The Training Agency also provides special training for ethnic minorities and for women to encourage them to enter industries and occupations in which they are under-represented, and part-time and flexible training courses which can be particularly helpful to women returning to work after time at home looking after their families, lone parents and disabled people.

My Department's race relations employment advisory service provides a free advisory, consultancy and training service to help employers implement effective equal opportunity policies within a multi-racial work force. Priority is advising on the CRE 1984 code of practice's recommendations to employers on the implementation of equal opportunity policies and promoting the use of the positive action provisions of the Race Relations Act.

Low Pay

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what he is doing to tackle the problem of low pay in the east midlands.

Mr. Nicholls: Pay in the east midlands, as elsewhere, is generally a matter for employers and employees to decide for themselves in the light of all the relevant circumstances. Any unnecessary intervention by Government could only be harmful to business and to prospects for jobs.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what response he has received from the business community about the establishment of training and enterprise councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: I have been very encouraged by the excellent response from employers throughout the country to our invitation to form training and enterprise councils (TECs).

More than 50 groups of senior employers in England and Wales have applied for development funding; the table lists the areas from which we have had applications and indicates their status.

Claimants

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average length of the permitted period given to unemployed claimants making a fresh claim for unemployment related benefits; and how many claimants are not given a permitted period, by region.

Mr. Eggar: The information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Job Interview Guarantee Scheme

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which areas of Newcastle have been targeted for the job interview guarantee scheme; how many agreements with employers have been made; and how many unemployed people have been assisted.

Mr. Eggar: The job interview guarantee pilot in Newcastle is being targeted on long term unemployed residents of the Cruddas Park and Loadman Street estates. Employers who participate can be drawn from any area within reach of jobseekers from these estates. The pilot was formally launched at the start of November. No agreements with employers have yet been signed, although many employers have already indicated their interest in participating.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 6 December 1989.

ENVIRONMENT

Regional Directors

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the frequency with which regional directors of the Department of the Environment have met together on a formal basis since 1984; what is the frequency with which full or partial meetings of the regional emergency committees are held; and if he will place minutes of the meetings in the Library.

Mr. Chris Patten: In addition to any ad hoc meetings that may be required, the regional directors meet regularly, about once a month, to discuss departmental business. The regional emergency committees meet as required, at the discretion of the chairmen.

It would not be appropriate to make available the minutes of either type of meeting.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the annual weight and volume of the waste sent to Drigg for each of the years 1980 to 1988 inclusive; and what are his estimates for the years 1989 to 2000.

Mr. Trippier: This is a matter for British Nuclear Fuels plc.

Water Distribution, London

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the leakage levels from the London water distribution system.

Mr. Howard: This is a matter for Thames Water. It is referred to in the first paragraph of page 415 of the prospectus for the water share offers, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Water Leakage Control

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) when he expects to publish the next leakage control policy and practice report;

(2) if he will place a copy of the appendix to the 1985 leakage control policy and practice report in the Library.

Mr. Howard: A copy of this report, together with its appendices, has been placed in the Library. There are no plans to publish a further edition.

Tendering

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what assessment he has made of the cost of tendering for public sector contract work under the Local Government Act 1988, in terms of time and resources; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what is the proportion of local authority contracts won by (a) the private sector and (b) direct labour organisations in (i) catering, (ii) refuse collection, (iii) vehicle maintenance, (iv) street cleaning, (v) grounds maintenance, and (vi) building cleaning.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No figures are available at present. An in-depth research project is currently being carried out on behalf of the Department to assess the impact of competition policy and this will examine costs incurred as well as savings made. We expect the first phase of the project to be completed next May. Local authorities have been asked to complete a questionnaire which will provide information on the number of contracts awarded to DSOs and private contractors. I hope that the results will be available early next year.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance he gives to local authorities on the practice of using the schedule of rates in seeking competitive tenders from private contractors.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Advice issued by my Department in its circulars 10/81, 6/82 and 19/83 has encouraged the use of schedules of rates by local authorities. The Department has not issued guidance about the use of schedules but has, in those circulars, referred local authorities to guidance and practical advice produced by bodies such as the Association of Metropolitan Authorities, the National Federation of Building Trades Employers (now the Building Employers Confederation), the Society of Chief Quantity Surveyors in Local Government, the Institution of Municipal Engineers and the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy.

Mr Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the Audit Commission's estimate of the savings to be made through compulsory competitive tendering.

Mr Heathcoat-Amory: The Audit Commission's occasional paper "Preparing for Compulsory Competition" published in January indicated that local authorities can obtain savings of 20 per cent. or more in contract price irrespective of whether work has been won by the private sector or by authorities' own work forces.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to encourage local authorities to provide sufficient information to enable private firms to tender competitively for contract work.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Under the competition provisions of the Local Government Act 1988, authorities are required to prepare and make available a detailed specification of the work for which tenders are being invited. Any failure to include adequate information might be regarded as anti-competitive and lead to the exercise of the Secretary of State's sanction powers.

House Prices

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what has been the average annual percentage rise in house prices in (a) England and (b) Wales since 1968; and what information he has on the annual average building society interest rate for depositors since 1968;

(2) what has been the average annual percentage rise in house prices in Scotland since 1968; and what information he has on the annual average building society interest rate for depositors since 1968.

Mr. Chope: The information is as follows:

	Year to year percentage change in Building Society mix-adjusted Price index[1]			Building Society average net (UK) share rate[2]
Year	England Percentage	Wales Percentage	Scotland Percentage	Percentage
1968	n/a	n/a	n/a	4·37
1969[3]	5	5	7	4·82
1970	8	7	7	4·94
1971	14	13	7	4·95

[1] Based on 5 per cent. building society mortgage survey which began in the second quarter of 1968. Figures for the fourth quarter of 1989 are not available.

[2] Net share rates from Council of Mortgage Lenders/Building Societies Association.

[3] Percentage change in index between last three quarters of 1968 and same period for 1969.

[4] Percentage change in index between first three quarters of 1988 and same period for 1989.

[5] Average rate paid at the end of June 1989 by largest 20 societies.

Relocation

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list all office relocations of his Department's staff since May 1979, stating in each case the location of origin and the location to transfer, together with the numbers of staff transferred;

(2) what relocations of his Department's staff, or agencies relating thereto, are curently being considered; and what are the numbers of staff affected.

Mr. Chris Patten: Approximately 60 posts in the Crown Suppliers were moved from central London to Bootle in 1982. The Department's Eastern Regional Office, comprising some 70 posts, was moved from London to Bedford in 1988. This year, the newly established Historic Royal Palaces Agency, with 20 posts, was transferred from central London to Hampton Court palace. The Department's rent charges unit, with 11 posts, has recently been moved from central London to the Department's north-west regional office in Manchester.

In April this year, the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission, for which the Department is responsible, moved its office dealing with properties in care in the northern region, with 20 posts, from central London to Newcastle upon Tyne.

Around 38 per cent. of the Department's staff of approximately 6,000 (excluding the Property Services Agency) are already located outside London, 24 per cent. outside the south-east. All other posts have been assessed for relocation potential, and some 1,350 posts have been identified for detailed investigation. Studies covering 320 posts are complete, leading to proposals to move some 90 posts out of London. These proposals—which include the relocation of the Historic Royal Palaces Agency and rent charges unit—are now being implemented. Studies covering the other posts will be carried out over the next two years or so, as operational requirements allow.

Seventy per cent. of the PSA's staff of 22,400 (including the Crown Suppliers) are already located outside London, 45 per cent. outside the south-east. The agency is being restructured in preparation for commercialisation. The scope for further relocation is being examined through the business planning process.

Methane

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to ensure that, wherever possible, methane from landfill sites and oil fields will be collected or flared efficiently.

Mr. Trippier: All those involved in landfill management have been urged to consider appropriate systems of monitoring and control for landfill gas in accordance with the technical memorandum in waste management paper No. 27. The Department of Energy is responsible for the control of gas from oilfields.

Global Warming

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the Government are taking measures to ensure that international exchange of data on global warming is not impeded by commercial considerations in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Trippier: The House of Lords Select Committee on Science and Technology has similarly suggested the need for unimpeded exchange of data relevant to global climate change in the sixth report. The Government will respond to this and other conclusions of the Committee in due course. Much data generated by global monitoring programmes will be available on the same basis as is currently the case for world meteorological data. Arrangements are in hand to provide data from the ERS1 satellite to suitably equipped and qualified universities and institutes groups. Discussions under way on data dissemination in the longer term will take into account the recommendations of the Select Committee.

Greenhouse Effect

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what consideration he has given to the conclusion contained in the Select Committee on Science and Technology report on the greenhouse effect about the Government's abandonment of research into fast reactor technology; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what consideration he has given to the conclusion contained in the Select Committee on Science and Technology report on the greenhouse effect about the United Kingdom's commitment to the proposal for a successor satellite to ERS1 (ERS2); and if he will make a statement;

(3) what consideration he has given to the conclusion contained in the Select Committee on Science and Technology report on the greenhouse effect about the Government's commitment to the ocean drilling programme beyond 1991; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The Government will be responding in due course when full consideration has been given to all the conclusions and recommendations of the House of Lords Select Committee on Science and Technology's sixth report.

Research and Development

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what funds the Government intend to allocate in 1990 and 1991 to finance research and development into the field of fuel use and emissions control in road transport.

Mr. Trippier: Projected Government expenditure (by financial year) on research and development into fuel use and emissions control covering the period in question is as follows:

Financial year 1990-91: £2·015 million
Financial year 1991-92: £1·150 million

Climate Modelling

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to develop better facilities for climate modelling at the Meteorological Office and if he will offer generous access to those facilities to relevant university research departments.

Mr. Trippier: As the Prime Minister announced in her speech to the United Nations General Assembly on 8 November, the Government intend to establish a new centre for climate prediction. It will build on the existing expertise at the Meteorological Office, which is of the highest international repute. An important function of the centre will be to identify research work including that done in universities, of relevance to climate prediction and to encourage and facilitate its incorporation into improved predictive modelling. International collaboration with other centres of expertise will be a fundamental aspect of the centre's work.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much grant his Department will make available in the next financial year to fund the United Kingdom centre for the prediction of climate change.

Mr. Trippier: Establishing a centre for climate prediction is expected to cost over £5·5 million in 1990-91.

Hazardous Waste (Imports)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many tonnes of (a) special waste, (b) toxic waste and (c) radioactive waste have been imported through Newhaven for each of the last three years.

Mr. Trippier: The Department's records do not differentiate between toxic waste and special waste which is also classified as toxic waste. In 1986-87 23 tonnes were imported through Newhaven, and in 1987-88 48 tonnes. We have no record of any imports in 1988-89. Radioactive waste is not imported into the country.

Landfill Sites

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any proposals to increase the frequency of visits by inspectors of Her Majesty's inspectors of pollution to landfill sites; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: No. A primary role of Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution is assessing the performance of the waste disposal authorities. This involves visiting a selection of landfills to assess standards and performance. Sufficient landfills are inspected for the inspectorate to reach a balanced view on how well the waste disposal authority discharges its statutory duties.

Homelessness

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the homelessness situation in Britain.

Mr. Chope: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the statement by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment, on 15 November, on the conclusions of the Government's review of the homelessness legislation. A copy of the full report is in the House Library.

Litter

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to enable local authorities to take more severe action against those responsible for dropping litter.

Mr. Trippier: We propose to empower all district and borough councils to operate fixed penalty schemes for littering, similar to that currently operated by Westminster city council. In addition, we propose to increase the maximum fine for littering in England and Wales under the Litter Act 1983 from £400 to £1,000.

Radioactive Substances Act 1960

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what responses he has received to the consultation document on the proposed amendments to the Radioactive Substances Act 1960 and for a cost recovery charging scheme.

Mr. Trippier: Organisations responded to the consultation document issued jointly by myself with my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales, for Scotland and for Northern Ireland, and the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. A list of these has been placed in the Library of the House: copies of individual responses may be obtained through the Library. Respondents gave a broad welcome to the proposals put forward in the paper.

In particular, there was enthusiastic support for the proposal to establish practicable de minimis levels of radioactive material and waste. Many comments were received on the section regarding the disclosure of information concerning possibly contaminated land and our proposals have been amended to clarify this section taking into account the suggestions made.

The proposal to introduce a cost recovery charging scheme attracted many comments with only a small minority objecting to the principles of charging. In developing the scheme we will take into account the helpful suggestions and comments received as a result of the current consultation exercise.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response his Department received to the questionnaire sent to local authorities on 3 May about their progress in implementing the new community charge arrangements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: A total of 267 out of 366 local authorities in England responded to this questionnaire. The picture which emerged was generally reassuring. All authorities which responded were implementing the new arrangements and all confirmed they would meet the requirement to send community charge register entries to their residents by 1 December 1989. A report on the results of the questionnaire has been placed in the Library of the House.

Nature Conservancy Council

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the organisations which have (a) supported him and (b) criticised in writing to him his proposals for changes in the Nature Conservancy Council; and what representations he has had from Mr. Derek Ratcliffe on the future of science in the Nature Conservancy Council.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 4 December 1989]: My Department has received a large number of representations about the proposals to reorganise the Nature Conservancy Council. It is not possible to allocate these in a meaningful way to the categories requested. A number of representations contained elements both of support and of criticism. A letter from the former chief scientist of the NCC, Mr. Ratcliffe, made a thoughtful contribution on the need for cohesive operational strategies, the maintenance of high standards in conservation science, evaluation and practice and on maximising the use of scarce resources. We took account of all the points made in the representations received in formulating the Government's proposals (announced on 23 November) to establish a statutory joint committee of the new country agencies to maintain scientific standards and take responsibility for the scientific aspects of nature conservation issues which have a Great Britain or international dimension.

Pollution

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the planned level of inspection of factory discharges into rivers by National Rivers Authority officials over the next 12 months; and what percentage of factory discharges this is estimated to represent.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 4 December 1989]: I understand that the National Rivers Authority is currently reviewing its monitoring programmes, including the level of inspection of discharges by factories to rivers and other controlled waters.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many persons who inspect factory discharges are employed by the National Rivers Authority.

Mr. Howard [holding reply Monday 4 December 1989]: I understand that approximately 430 officers are engaged in pollution control duties in the field. They are involved in inspecting all forms of discharge, including those from factories.

TRANSPORT

M11 Extension Inquiry

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all those who have been excluded from the proceedings of the M11 extension inquiry; and if he will give the reason for exclusion in each case.

Mr. Atkins: The exclusion and readmission of individuals at the current inquiry into the A12 Hackney to M11 link road are matters for the independent inspector.

Several people have been excluded to prevent further disruption of proceedings. Their names are not known to the Department.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the proceedings of the M11 extension inquiry to be concluded; and what assurances he has received that all points of view will be properly aired and fully considered during the inquiry.

Mr. Atkins: The inquiry will conclude when the independent inspector is satisfied that he has heard all statutory objectors and those others with material points who, at his discretion, he chooses to hear. The inspector has already announced that this will mean the continuation of the inquiry in the new year.

It is for the inspector to decide whether representations made to him are appropriate to the specific purposes of this inquiry.

Relocation

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list all office relocations of his Department's staff since May 1979, stating in each case the location of origin and the location of transfer, together with the numbers of staff transferred.

Mr. Atkins: Following is the information requested by the hon. Member:

Unit	Location of origin	Location of transfer	Number of staff
Air Accidents Investigation Branch[1]	London	Bramshott[2]	40
HM Coastguard Training Centre[1]	Brixham	Christchurch	8
London Marine Office	London	Orpington	30

[1] Then part of the Department of Trade and Industry.

[2] Bramshott (1982), and then to Farnborough (1984).

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what relocations of his Department's staff, or agencies relating thereto, are currently being considered; and what are the numbers of staff affected.

Mr. Atkins: It is planned to relocate the headquarters of the Driving Standards Agency from London to Nottingham in mid-1990. About 100 posts are involved. The location of certain other London headquarters directorates is being reviewed: up to a further 430 posts are involved.

Traffic Accidents (Children)

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many children of school age have been injured in traffic accidents in the last 12-months'; and how many have been killed.

Mr. Atkins: In 1988, 47,429 children aged between five and 16 were injured in road traffic accidents and 440 were killed.

This is the most recent 12-months-period for which full data are available.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many children of school age have been injured in traffic accidents involving designated school buses in the last 12 months; and how many have been killed.

Mr. Atkins: The information requested is not available.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many people in the last 12 months have been injured in traffic accidents; and how many have been killed.

Mr. Atkins: In 1988, 317,253 people of all road users were injured in road traffic accidents and 5,052 were killed. This is the most recent 12-months period for which full data are available.

Provisional estimates for the 12 months up to June 1989 show 320,576 injured and 5,082 killed.

School Buses

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of statutory regulations for operators of designated school buses which require standards of safety to be met (a) in the other member states of the European Community and (b) elsewhere; and what assessment he has made of their comparable figures for accidents involving children of school age and designated school buses.

Mr. Atkins: I have considered what we can learn from the statutory regulations applicable to school buses, so far as we are aware of them, in other European countries and elsewhere.

Some European countries require a special sign showing two children in silhouette on a yellow background to be displayed on school buses. We think that this simple, cautionary sign has much to commend it and as I told the House on 14 November, we shall shortly circulate for comment proposals along these lines.

In Japan all minibuses, buses and coaches, except those providing a local bus service, are required to be fitted with seat belts on every seat. I have received many representations requesting similar legislation in the United Kingdom. At present we are prevented from enforcing legislation while the European Community seat belt directive specifies that no seat belts need be fitted to minibuses and coaches. We shall continue to press for change, but the view of most of the other member states is that coaches and minibuses are so safe that seat belts would not be worth while except on the front seats. This we have already required. We believe that seats themselves can give a measure of protection in a frontal accident, but seat belts generally prevent ejection and can thus reduce death and injury in a roll-over accident.

We have no figures for accidents involving children of school age using buses either in the United Kingdom or in other countries. Our own figures show that in 1988 409 children were killed and 7,923 were seriously injured on the roads in all.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of traffic accidents involving designated school buses where children of school age have been injured or killed; and what consideration he has given to (a) the state of the road, (b) the type of vehicles involved and (c) the time of year as contributory factors.

Mr. Atkins: It is our established practice to make a detailed investigation covering every possible contributory factor leading to a spectacular and major crash. This applies equally to crashes involving buses carrying children of school age as to other vehicles.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he has given to the need for an additional adult to be carried on designated school buses to ensure proper safety procedures are followed.

Mr. Atkins: Supervision is a matter for education authorities and schools. We encourage them to ensure that adequate arrangements exist.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what regulations exist to ensure that drivers of designated school buses are trained in first aid.

Mr. Atkins: There is no regulation requiring any driver to be trained in first aid.

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what safety requirements exist for transport operators of school project trips; and if he will ensure that any new safety standards imposed on designated school buses must also be met on school project trips.

Mr. Atkins: The public service vehicle regulations apply equally to all bus operators. We will indeed propose that any new safety requirements for buses used to carry children between home and school shall also apply to school project trips.

Civil Aviation Authority

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport why he decided to allow the Civil Aviation Authority to delay by one year its response to his predecessor's request for advice on airports policy; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: My right hon. Friend acknowledged, when he sought advice on the adequacy of United Kingdom airport capacity through to 2005, that he had given the authority a testing undertaking. We recognise the need to carry forward airports strategy, but it is important that this is based on fully researched and considered advice. We respect the authority's judgment that it needs to carry out further work before responding.

Airports (Slot Allocation)

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will list those sections of the relevant United Kingdom and EEC statutes which relate to the precedence of allocation of slots between charter and scheduled services at United Kingdom airports; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what examination of the validity under EEC law of his powers to make airport traffic rules has been undertaken; what are his powers to give preference in slot allocation to scheduled carriers over competing charter carriers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Section 31 of the Airports Act 1986 empowers my right hon. Friend to make traffic distribution rules which may, inter alia, specify classes or descriptions of air traffic that are permitted under the rules to use any of the airports concerned, and impose prohibitions or restrictions in relation to the use of any of those airports by air traffic of any class or description specified in the rules.

Section 33 of the 1986 Act empowers my right hon. Friend to require the Civil Aviation Authority to prepare for his approval a slot allocation scheme for airports at which a limit on movements has been set under section 32, or at which he judges that demand exceeds capacity, or is likely in the near future to do so. No such schemes have been made, and slot allocation at United Kingdom airports is carried out either by the airport operator or by the airport scheduling committee. Such committees are composed of representatives of airlines operating at the airport, and work in accordance with guidelines established by the International Air Transport Association.

The relevant EC legislation is Commission regulation (EEC) No. 2671/88. Article 1 exempts from article 85(1) of the treaty of Rome agreements between undertakings in the air transport sector, decisions by associations of such undertakings and concerted practices between such undertakings which have as their purpose slot allocation and airport scheduling in so far as they concern scheduled international air services between airports in the Community. Article 5 states that this exemption applies only if any rules of priority established are neither directly nor indirectly related to carrier identity or nationality or category of service and take into account constraints or air traffic distribution rules laid down by competent national or international authorities.

Car Insurance (Disabled People)

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will hold an inquiry into the cost of car insurance charged to disabled people; and if he will take steps to ensure that disabled drivers are not prevented from driving their cars by high insurance.

Mr. Atkins: No. It is for insurance companies to set premiums in the light of their own underwriting experience. I welcome the initiative the Association of British Insurers have taken to make available a dossier of insurance advice for disabled drivers and their offer to look into any individual difficulties.

British Rail

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last discussed (a) possible expansion of the network; (b) possible closure of passenger lines and (c) possible passenger fare increases with the chairman of British Rail.

Mr. Portillo: My right hon. Friend discusses a wide range of railway issues at his regular meetings with the chairman of British Rail. He has recently discussed with the chairman the objectives he proposes to set for the next three years. He hopes to publish them shortly.

British Rail (Chairman)

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will announce the appointment of the next chairman of British Rail.

Mr. Parkinson: I am very pleased to announce the appointment of Mr. Bob Reid to take over the chairmanship of British Rail next year. His distinguished career as a senior manager in private industry will bring valuable experience to bear on the challenges and opportunities which British Rail will face in the next decade.

At the same time, I pay warm tribute to Sir Robert Reid's achievements as chairman over the last six years. He has led British Rail to a new, more commercial approach, with a massive investment programme and more customer-orientated structure. The Government, and the travelling public, owe him a large debt of gratitude.

Mr. Reid's appointment will be for a five-year term, at a salary of £200,000 a year. Mr. Reid will join the board from 1 January as chairman-designate and for a period from 1 April until his responsibilities at Shell come to an end in October, he will be non-executive part-time chairman.

I am also pleased to announce the appointment of Mr. Derek Fowler as deputy chairman for a six-month period next year, and am grateful to him for agreeing to take on this important role. Mr. Fowler, at present vice-chairman and finance member, will become deputy chairman in April to provide continuity and to support Mr. Reid as non-executive chairman. Mr. Fowler has made a valuable contribution throughout his long service on the board, and this extension will make a fitting final stage in his career, to the benefit of British Rail.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Market Research

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many market research and sample surveys were carried out by or for his Department in the last 12 months; what was the cost of each; what was the total cost; how many were carried out in-house; how many were carried out for his Department by outside organisations; and what percentage of the total expenditure was paid to outside organisations.

Mrs. Rumbold: A total of nine individual ad hoc surveys were carried out by outside organisations at a cost respectively of £114,110, £10,626, £10,243, £230,630, £25,650, £33,732, £4,550, £4,300 and £100,000 making a total of £533,841 in the 12 months ending 30 November 1989. All these surveys were funded by the Department.

In addition, the Department has carried out three in-house sample surveys at an estimated total cost of £45,000. The percentage of total expenditure paid to outside organisations, therefore, was 92 per cent.

Relocation

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list all office relocations of his Department's staff since May 1979, stating in each case the location of origin and the location of transfer, together with the numbers of staff transferred.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department transferred 30 posts from London to its Darlington office in 1988. Only two of the staff transferred with the work.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what relocations of his Department's staff, or agencies relating thereto, are currently being considered; and what are the numbers of staff affected.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department is proposing to relocate a further 50 posts from London to its Darlington office during 1990. In addition, a senior official of the Department is about to undertake a study of the long-term location requirements of the Department in the light of the Government's policy on relocation. The study will consider various possibilities, including the handling of some functions regionally. It is not at present possible to say how staff will be affected.

PhD Students

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps are being taken by the Government to encourage PhD students into university research departments.

Mr. Jackson: Approximately 60 per cent. of full-time PhD students are supported from Government sources, primarily through grant in aid from the Department of Education and Science to the research councils and the British Academy. Three thousand nine hundred and ninety six new research studentships were awarded by these bodies in 1989, an increase of 134 over 1988. The postgraduate award-making bodies are better placed than Government to assess national needs for PhDs and to determine the optimum distribution of these studentships between different departments and subjects.

Energy Conference

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what departmental representation there was at the fourth international energy conference of the Royal Institute of International Affairs, on 4 and 5 December.

Mr. Jackson: I understand that attendance at the conference was by invitation. I am not aware that the Department of Education and Science received an invitation, and therefore the Department was not represented at this conference.

Disabled Children

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many disabled children are currently in special schools within the South Yorkshire area; and what steps he has taken to ensure that for each child, the local education authority is issuing a statement of needs in accordance with the law.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The number of children in special schools within the southern Yorkshire area in January 1989 was 2,807. LEAs have a duty under the 1981 Education Act to identify special education needs and issue a statement when appropriate. It is for each authority to decide on their own local policy.

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what estimates he has of the true cost of supporting disabled children in main stream education; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Department does not collect data on spending on children with statements of special educational needs in ordinary schools.

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the extent of in-service teacher training on disability awareness; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: No information is collected centrally on the extent of awareness training on disability. The Government provide substantial support, through the local education authority training grants scheme, for training to meet special educational needs, which include certain disabilities. Five categories of training in respect of special educational needs are currently designated as national priorities, eligible for support at the higher rate of grant under the scheme. In the current financial year, grant is available to support expenditure of £6·6 million in these areas. In addition, authorities are free to draw on the grant available to them under the scheme at the lower rate, in support of further expenditure at their discretion on training on aspects of disability.

Greenhouse Effect

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much money is currently allocated by the Government for the funding of the study at universities of the behaviour of greenhouse gases in the atmosphere; and how much it plans to allocate for this purpose in 1990 and 1991.

Mr. Jackson: I understand that in 1989-90 the NERC has allocated £155,000 to higher education institutions for research into the chemistry and physics of greenhouse gases. This basic work is included in the £890,000 that the NERC is providing overall in 1989-90 for research in higher education institutions related to climate change and its impacts. It will be for the research councils to decide their future priorities for specific research areas, within the overall totals allocated. My right hon. Friend will shortly receive the ABRC's advice on the allocation of the science budget for 1990-91, and his decisions after receiving that advice will be announced in due course.

Climate Change

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what funds the Government intend to allocate for the United Kingdom's participation in the WCRP's global energy and water cycles experiment to place a lidar on one of the polar platform satellites in the late 1990's.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend has requested the ABRC's advice on what further allocation is appropriate for earth observation instruments, particularly on polar platforms, in addition to the minimum £6 million recently announced for an instrument associated with the proposed earth remote sensing satellite (ERS2). His decisions after receving that advice will be announced in due course. It will be for the research councils to decide, within the overall totals allocated, their priorities for specific research areas.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what funds the Government are making available in 1990-91 to ensure the maintenance in the United Kingdom of an independent national research programme into global climate changes.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend has requested the ABRC's advice on the allocation of the science budget for 1990-91. His decisions after receiving that advice will be announced in due course. It will be for the research councils to decide, within the overall totals allocated, their priorities for specific research areas. Global climate change is necessarily a problem on an international scale, and the strength of United Kingdom research enables our scientists to make key contributions to important international collaborative programmes.

Local Authority Bids

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his policy on the treatment of local authority supplementary bids for (a) education capital expenditure in 1990, 1991 and 1992, (b) education support grant in 1990-91 in respect of training for school governors, (c) education support grant in 1990-91 and (d) local authority training grants scheme support in 1990-91 where such bids are being made to support the development of magnet schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend is willing to consider any bids for grants within his responsibility which are submitted by local education authorities as being consistent with the objectives of the grant and the arrangements for its allocation, and are designed to support worthwhile developments. He is currently considering the bids submitted by LEAs for education support grant funding, including those for school governor training, and for LEA training grant scheme funding in 1990-91; the allocations for all LEAs will be announced around the turn of the year.

Annual capital guidelines are assessed in accordance with well-established criteria which are familiar to local education authorities. My right hon. Friend expects to make an announcement about annual capital guidelines for LEAs in 1990-91 shortly before Christmas.

Magnet Schools (Bradford)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what the minute of the meeting between his Minister of State and members of Bradford council on 28 September records as the statement of the policy which his Department would operate in relation to a supplementary bid for local authority training grants scheme support in 1990-91 in relation to magnet schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The statement of policy given at my meeting on 28 September was as set out in the reply that I have given today to a separate question from the hon. Member on the same subject.

Training Grants (Bradford)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what view was expressed in the letter from J. W. Whitaker of his Department, to Mr. Nils Purser, assistant director 13-plus, Bradford education directorate, dated 19 October, following a meeting between the Minister of State and elected members at Bradford council, about the availability of resources under the local authority training grants scheme support in 1990-91.

Mrs. Rumbold: The letter said that the Department could not offer any prospect of making available the significant additional funds the authority was seeking for 1990-91 from within the LEA training grant scheme, since the grant is allocated to LEAs on a formula basis and it was likely that resources would be fully committed on the lines indicated by the indicative allocations, which had been set out in DES circular 20/89. The letter went on to say that LEAs' expenditure is monitored at the end of each calendar year and spare resources resulting from projected underspending are reallocated for use in the final quarter of the financial year.

Medical Research Council

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has received the annual report of the Medical Research Council for 1988-89; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The annual report of the Medical Research Council for 1988-89 has been submitted to me under the requirements of the Science and Technology Act 1965. A copy has been laid before the House, and the report is being published today. I was most interested to study the report and, in an eventful year for the Council, I was particularly encouraged to note:

(i) Exciting fundamental research in such fields as neurobiology and molecular, cell and developmental biology offering the prospect of practical advances in diagnostic and therapeutic techniques and of commercially important developments. Examples include the work on protein function and design, on antibody engineering, on pre-implantation diagnosis of genetic disease, and on the role of neurotransmitters in the brain.

(ii) The establishment of the Council's human genome mapping project.

(iii) Promising research on the factors that influence susceptibility to coronary heart disease, and the trial of anti-coagulants in reducing the risk of thrombosis following myocardial infarction.

(iv) The continued build-up of the Council's broad programme of research on AIDS which includes work on vaccines and drugs, epidemiological studies, and a new joint Anglo-French clinical trail of zidovudine for patients who are infected with HIV but have not yet become ill.

(v) A major programme of breast cancer screening trials to determine: the optimum frequency of screening; the proportion of deaths which could be prevented by mammographic screening of women under 50; and the best way of detecting cancers by mammography. This is being funded jointly by the Medical Research Council, the Department of Health and the Cancer Research Campaign.

(vi) A wide range of work of direct relevance to the health services, particularly studies: of vision screening in infancy; of the care of asthma patients; of determinants of re-attendance at accident and emergency departments; of procedures for identifying elderly people at risk of hip fracture; of cervical screening procedures; and of the care of terminally ill cancer patients.

Economic and Social Research Council

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has received the annual report of the Economic and Social Research Council for 1988-89; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Macgregor: The annual report of the Economic and Social Research Council has been submitted to me under the requirements of the Science and Technology Act 1965, and a copy is being laid before the House today.

I was most interested to read about the council's achievements in a challenging year in which its headquarters moved to Swindon. I was particularly interested to note:

(a) the continued good progress in improving the communication of its research to a wider audience;

(b) the establishment of interdisciplinary research centres in micro social change at the university of Essex and in human communication at the universities of Edinburgh and Glasgow; and

(c) the priority given by the council to improved training in research methods.

I congratulate the council on these and its many other achievements and anticipate reading of further progress in next year's report.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

House of Fraser

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Attorney-General if the serious fraud squad has now completed its investigations into the implications of the House of Fraser report.

The Attorney-General: No. I frequently discuss the investigation with both the Director of Public Prosecutions and the director of the Serious Fraud Office. It is our joint intention that it should continue to be pressed forward with all dispatch and speedily concluded. The remaining inquiries, which are current, relate to matters outside the United Kingdom's jurisdiction.

Westway Locksmiths Ltd.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Attorney-General whether criminal proceedings are to be brought against Westway Locksmiths Limited relating to the sale and fraudulent advertising for sale of skeleton car keys; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Crown prosecution service has received no reports from the police concerning Westway Locksmiths. However, I understand that criminal proceedings brought by Tameside trading standards department are pending before Manchester Crown court. In the circumstances, it would not be appropriate to comment further.

Land Registry, Plymouth

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Attorney-General what was the average delay in replying to inquiries to the Land Registry in Plymouth in (a) November 1989 and (b) November 1988.

The Attorney-General: The great majority of urgent pre-contract and pre-completion applications are now completed within four days. The percentages of such applications taking longer than that are set out in the table.

	(a) November 1989 Percentage	(b) November 1988 Percentage
Searches of the whole of a registered title	0	1
Searches of part of a registered title	1	8
Searches of the index map	6	16

Note: Overall averages for the time taken to deal with such applications are not available.

THE ARTS

Community-based Arts

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he has any plans to give financial assistance to community-based arts organisations.

Mr. Luce: I fund the arts at arm's length. It is a matter for the Arts Council and the regional arts association to decide on the funding of such organisations.

Performing Arts (East Anglia)

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on the performance arts in East Anglia for the financial years 1987 to 1990.

Mr. Luce: During this period, the performing arts in East Anglia have expanded as in the country as a whole. Audience attendance figures and levels of self-generated income have generally increased. Particular successes have included the Cambridge festival, Wingfield arts and music, and the Norfolk and Norwich triennial festival. For more detailed information, the hon. Member may care to write to David Cargill, the Chairman of Eastern Arts, which is the regional arts association with responsibility for East Anglia. The RAA's address is: Eastern Arts, Cherry Hinton Hall, Cherry Hinton Road, Cambridge, CB1 4DW.

SCOTLAND

Babies (Special Care)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each year since 1981 the number of babies born weighing under 1,500 grams.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The total number of babies born weighing less than 1,500 grams in Scotland in the years 1981-87 is as follows:

Year	Number
1981	649
1982	622
1983	650
1984	719
1985	664
1986	705
1987	684

British Medical Association

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he next plans to meet representatives of the British Medical Association (Scotland).

Mr. Michael Forsyth: My right hon. and learned Friend and I are regularly in contact with representatives of the British Medical Association in Scotland about a wide range of matters.

Sheriff Courts

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will publish the research funded by his Department and carried out by Dr. Carol Jones of the centre for criminology and the social and philosophical study of law at Edinburgh university, which was undertaken in 1987 into the study of the sheriff courts in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Dr. Carol Jones's report on contested cases in the Scottish sheriff courts has not yet been submitted in final form. The question of publication will be considered after it has been received.

Nature Conservancy Council

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Monro), Official Report, 28 November, columns 188-89, how many of the 179 respondents expressed (a) an unconditional welcome for the proposed NCC-CCS merger and (b) the need for a strong science base or co-ordination of standards, research and matters of British or international significance, and (c) the need for sufficient resources.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Development Department's consultation paper invited comments on the Government's proposals to bring forward legislation to merge the Countryside Commission for Scotland and the proposed Nature Conservancy Council for Scotland to form a natural heritage agency for Scotland. Of the 179 respondents, 159 expressed a view on his proposal and, of these, 98 in principle supported it. Almost all respondents commented on a range of issues including science and resources, or sought assurances that the Government would address particular issues before finalising their proposals. As a result, the responses are not capable of analysis in terms of the questions posed.

In connection with co-ordination on science issues, I refer to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment on 23 November, at columns 16-17.

A file containing a copy of all the responses, except the few which were submitted in confidence, is available for inspection in the House of Commons Library.

Playground Supervision

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received in response to consultation on draft regulations on playground supervision; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Sixty-four representations have been received from education authorities, teachers' associations and a wide range of other organisations and individuals representing parental and other educational interests.

There has been widespread support for the proposals in the draft regulations which would (a) put a statutory duty on education authorities to take reasonable care for the safety of pupils under their charge; and (b) introduce a specific statutory duty to provide adult supervision of primary school playgrounds in breaktimes.

Respondents also made a number of specific suggestions for improvement of the regulations, and the Government will be taking account of these in bringing revised regulations before Parliament. The revised regulations will require that the duty to provide playground supervision should extend to special schools as well as to primary schools. We will also provide for primary schools with fewer than 50 pupils to be exempt from the duty to have an adult supervisor in the playground except where circumstances require it. And we will require a clear definition to be made locally of what area is covered by the term "playground".

We regret that education authorities felt unable to meet the proposed timetable for implementation in January 1990. In the interests of smooth introduction of the new arrangements we now intend that the regulations should come into force in April 1990, although I will be encouraging local authorities to provide playground supervision before then if possible.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Disabled People

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will list the projects concerning the rehabilitation of people with disabilities which his Department is currently funding in developing countries; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what action he takes to consult organisations of people with disabilities in the countries concerned before making grants for projects concerning rehabilitation of people with disabilities in developing countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The following projects concerning the rehabilitation of people with disabilities are being funded from ODA's bilateral programmes in 1989/90:

Country and Project

Bangladesh—Rehabilitation Institute and Hospital for the Disabled: Orthopaedic Surgeons.
Fiji —Disabled Children in the Community
Speech Therapist, Bailey Clinic.
India —Assistance to Spastic Societies in Bombay, Calcutta and Delhi.
Consultancies to Formulate Projects to Assist Various Disabled Groups.
Sri Lanka —Cleft Lips and Palates.

Zimbabwe: provision of orthopaedic technicians, equipment and training for a hospital in Harare (recently completed). These Government-to-Government programmes result from official requests received by Her Majesty's Government; consultation with local groups is usually a matter for the recipient countries' authorities though in some cases officials, including specialist health advisers in ODA will have direct contact with beneficiary groups at an early stage.

Under the joint funding scheme, ODA also provides grants to United Kingdom non-governmental organisations operating in developing projects for the partial funding of their countries. JFS projects are normally executed by local organisations working with the United Kingdom NGOs. ODA is currently financing the following JFS projects:

Agency/Country and Project

Action on Disability and Development
Africa
Employment of Development Officer
India
Development and Training Group of People with Disability
Orthopaedic Workshop, Bangalore
Training Course and Extended Orthopaedic Workshop
Sudan
Orthopaedic Workshop, Nyala Society for Disabled
Tanzania
Development Programme for Disabled People
Uganda
Regionalise Management/Support, National Union Disabled People
Zimbabwe
Income Generation for Disabled People

British Red Cross Society
Papua New Guinea
Special Education Centre
Uganda
Mulago Hospital Orthopaedic Project

Help the Aged
India
Rehabilitation of Handicapped in Rural Areas
Kenya
Refracting Service

Impact Foundation
India
Leprosy Disability Prevention and Limitation

Leonard Cheshire Foundation
Ethiopia
Medical Education and Rehabilitation Centre
Malaysia
Far East Region Training Programme
Video Training

Richmond Fellowship
India
Bangalore Pilot Project, Mental Health Rehabilitation

Royal Commonwealth Society for the Blind
Bangladesh
Community Based Rehabilitation
Manpower Development Programme and Primary Eye Care
Malawi
Ophthalmic Assistants Training
Solomon Islands
Eye Care Services in the Pacific

Further assistance for the rehabilitation of people with disabilities is provided through the heads of mission gift scheme, the heads of mission small projects scheme and the British volunteer programme; a list of these is not readily available.

The overseas aid programme will continue to respond positively to requests to provide assistance for the rehabilitation of people with disabilities. It will also continue to support programmes aimed at combating tropical diseases which result in disabling conditions.

Sri Lanka (Aid)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, further to his reply of 29 November to the hon. Member for Rugby and Kenilworth, what is his forecast for aid for Sri Lanka for 1990-91; what type of projects in Sri Lanka are likely to attract British overseas aid; and what additional aid will be made available to Sri Lanka following the damage and injury caused by civil disturbance.

Mr. Maude: Britain supports a wide range of projects in Sri Lanka in the education, power, roads and natural resources sectors. Last year a grant of £20 million was signed for reconstruction aid, including the provision of vehicles, railway track, hospital and educational equipment, and support for NGO programmes. The grant has not yet been fully allocated to specific uses, and projects under consideration with the Sri Lankan Government include road rehabilitation and forestry. Britain is also considering providing balance of payments support as part of an economic reform programme which the Sri Lankan authorities are discussing with the IMF and IBRD. Aid expenditure in 1990-91 is uncertain at this stage, and will depend upon a number of factors, including any delays caused by civil disturbances.

Market Research

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many market research and sample surveys were carried out by or for his Department in the last 12 months; what was the cost of each; what was the total cost; how many were carried out in house; how many were carried out for his Department by outside organisations; and what percentage of the total expenditure was paid to outside organisations.

Mr. Sainsbury: No market research or sample surveys have been undertaken in house in the past 12 months. In this period, one sample survey was carried out by an outside organisation at a cost of £10,470·75.

Public Appointments

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many persons above the age of (a) 60, (b) 65 and (c) 70 years he has appointed to public bodies in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Sainsbury: The information is not immediately available, and I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Immigration Service Union

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why his Department decided not to recognise the Immigration Service Union or to deduct membership contributions for its members seconded from the Home Office to his Department.

Mr. Sainsbury: Immigration service officers serving in Foreign and Commonwealth Office posts overseas remain members of the Home Civil Service. Any negotiations on pay and conditions of service of Immigration Service Union members overseas are conducted by the Immigration Service Union with the Home Office and/or Treasury as appropriate. The question of formal Foreign and Commonwealth Office recognition therefore does not arise.

South Africa

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Government of South Africa about the need to treat all British citizens equally with regard to visa requirements.

Mr. Maude: We would of course be concerned if evidence was presented of discrimination against a British citizen on grounds of colour by any country in the operation of their visa regime.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will set up an inquiry into the working of the United Kingdom's visa treaty with South Africa.

Mr. Maude: The United Kingdom has no visa treaty with South Africa.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received regarding the South African Government's guidelines for British citizens who travel to that country of (a) European and (b) not pure European descent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has received no such representations.

Poland and Hungary

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the amount and types of economic assistance currently being given to Poland and Hungary; and what is the planned future level and types of such assistance.

Mr. Maude: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, gave my hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, North-East (Mr. Kirkhope) on 29 November, at column 318. With regard to future amounts and types of assistance, the know-how funds for Poland and Hungary are expected to continue for five years: it is not possible at this stage to say whether additional assistance will be made available in the future.

Hong Kong

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many orphans there are at present in the camps in Hong Kong; how they are to be repatriated; and what measures he will entake to ensure a satisfactory result.

Mr. Maude [pursuant to the reply, 4 December 1989, c. 26]: No figures are available for the number of orphans in the camps in Hong Kong, but there are estimated to be about 1,000 unaccompanied minors. The Hong Kong Government are discussing with the UNHCR the establishment of special procedures under the comprehensive plan of action for dealing with unaccompanied minors, with the aim of identifying the most humane and appropriate course in each individual case. This might mean repatriation where the child's parents or closest relatives are in Vietnam, or resettlement where the nearest family ties are overseas.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Personal Debt

115. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the estimate of the current level of personal debt in the United Kingdom.

116. Mr. Cunliffe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the estimate of the current level of personal debt in the United Kingdom.

117. Mr. George Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the estimate of the current level of personal debt in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Ryder: Figures for personal sector debt are given in "Financial Statistics" table 14·4. The amount outstanding at end June 1989, as shown in the November issue, was about £378 billion. An analysis of the greater part of this debt using an alternative instrument classification and showing the amount regarded as consumer credit is given in "Financial Statistics" table 9.3.

Exporters

118. Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment his Department has made of the effect upon exporters of current Government policies on interest rates and the pound sterling exchange rate.

119. Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if his Department has assessed the effect upon exporters of current Government policies on interest rates and the pound sterling exchange rate.

120. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment his Department has made of the effect upon exporters of current Government policies on interest rates and the pound sterling exchange rate.

Mr. Ryder: A forecast of exports for 1990 is given in the Autumn Statement.

Manufacturing Investment

121 Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by what amount investment by manufacturing industry in the north-west increased during 1988.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Regional information for 1988 is not yet available. Net capital expenditure by manufacturing industries in the north-west in 1987 was £1,204 million, compared with £1,000 million in 1986. The corresponding figures for the United Kingdom as a whole are £9,754 million and £8,705 million. These figures are expressed in current prices. Constant price estimates are not made, because regional price indices are not compiled.

House Purchase

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate at 1989-90 income levels the cost to the Exchequer of (a) raising the ceiling on mortgage interest relief from £30,000 to £50,000 and (b) raising the ceiling for exemption from stamp duty on land and buildings from £30,000 to £60,000.

Mr. Lilley: (a) The direct revenue cost at 1989-90 income levels of raising the ceiling on mortgage interest relief from £30,000 to £50,000 is estimated to be about £900 million. This estimate makes no allowance for any consequential change to the distribution of outstanding mortgages. It is based on a projection of the 1987-88 survey of personal incomes, and is therefore provisional.

(b) An increase in the stamp duty threshold for land and buildings from £30,000 to £60,000 is estimated to cost about £210 million at forecast 1989-90 levels.

Third World Debt

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will indicate what general guidance is given to banking institutions in the United Kingdom about the total proportion of Third world debt which would be appropriate for them to consider as irrecoverable for taxation purposes, as defined in his answer of 15 November, Official Report, column 330, when writing off amounts of such debt in any one year.

Mr. Lilley: The Inland Revenue issued a statement of practice on 25 January 1983, a copy of which is in the Library, setting out the general principles which it regarded as applying in law to the tax treatment of sovereign and commercial debt. As to the amount, the Bank of England has issued a matrix to the banks to assist them in the process of setting provisions for supervisory purposes; the Inland Revenue has indicated that this should provide relevant material for considering the extent to which specific provisions are properly deductible for tax purposes.

Market Research

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, how many market research and sample surveys were carried out by or for the Central Office of Information in the last 12 months; what was the cost of each; what was the total cost; how many were carried out in-house; how many were carried out for the Central Office of Information by outside organisations; and what percentage of the total expenditure was paid to outside organisations.

Mr. Ryder: One hundred and forty-four separate research projects were undertaken by COI on behalf of various Government Departments in 1988-89. The total cost of these, including VAT, was £2·3 million. Interviewing, data analysis and the majority of report preparation was undertaken for COI by specialist commercial organisations, usually appointed on tender: some 70 per cent. of the above cost was paid to those outside organisations. The details of each project is a matter for the Department which commissioned the research.

Income Tax

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, what research has been conducted into the effect of the ending of all personal income tax allowances and in particular the effects on the poverty trap; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: All options for reforming the tax system are kept under review.

VAT

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total repayment of value added tax to local authorities for the last complete period.

Mr. Ryder: Total value added tax repaid to local authorities in the last financial year, 1988-89, was £1,479 million and in the current financial year, up to the end of October, was £1,030 million.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to review the repayments of value added tax to local authorities.

Mr. Ryder: There are no plans at present for a review of the provisions of section 20 of the VAT Act 1983.

Relocation

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all office relocations of his Department's staff since May 1979, stating in each case the location of origin and the location of transfer, together with the numbers of staff transferred.

Mr. Ryder: No relocations of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer's Department's staff have taken place since May 1979.

Married Couples (Taxation)

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much the married couple's allowance, which is to be introduced in April 1990, will be worth as a proportion of the current available personal allowances.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 4 December 1989]: The value of the married couple's allowance in 1989-90 terms is £1,590, equivalent to the different between the present single person's and married man's allowances. My right hon. Friend will announce the level of allowances for 1990-91 in the usual way, in next year's Budget.

Mortgage Interest Relief

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate at 1989-90 income levels the level to which the ceiling on mortgage interest relief could be raised if the annual cost to the Exchequer were limited to (a) £0·25 billion, (b) £0·5 billion, (c) £1 billion and (d) £2 billion.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 4 December 1989]: Provisional estimates of the costs of increasing the ceiling for mortgage relief above £30,000 are given in the table. All estimates exclude behavioural effects which, for the higher ceilings quoted, would be substantial.

Direct revenue cost at 1989-90 income levels

£ million	Ceiling (£)
250	34,000
500	38,000
1,000	54,000
2,000	no limit

Retail Price Index

Mr. Wray: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what items are included in the calculations for the retail price index of (a) Japan, (b) West Germany, (c) France, (d) the Netherlands, (e) Denmark, (f) Sweden, (g) Canada, (h) the United States of America and (i) the United Kingdom.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 4 December 1989]: Each national survey office includes a great number of items in its retail price index, details of which are published in national statistical sources. Copies of the relevant material have been placed in the House of Commons Library. The information requested for the United Kingdom was published by the Department of Employment in the Employment Gazette for April 1989.

Manufacturing Industry

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the change in manufacturing output in (a) 1964 to 1970, (b) 1970 to 1974, (c) 1974 to 1979 and (d) 1979 to the latest date available; and what was the change in manufacturing output for (i) West Germany, (ii) Japan, (iii) USA, (iv) France, (v) Italy, (vi) Benelux countries and (vii) Spain during the same periods.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 4 December 1989]: Following is the information requested.

(annual average percentage change)

	1964-70	1970-74	1974-79	1979-88
United Kingdom	2·8	2·2	−0·6	0·8

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Soft Loan Facility

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the future of the aid and trade provision soft loan facility.

Mrs. Chalker: In 1986, a soft loan facility within the aid and trade provision of the overseas aid programme was established for an initial period of five years, ending March 1991. It has enabled ATP grant funds to support long-term loans to developing countries, at concessional rates of interest, provided by private banks and guaranteed by ECGD, for agreed sound development projects. This complemented the existing mixed credit instrument by which ATP grants are provided normally in association with export credits to help finance the capital costs of sound development projects.

A review of the soft loan facility has now been completed. It has been agreed that the facility should be extended beyond March 1991. The method of ATP support will, however, be changed so that ATP funds used to reduce the rate of interest to the borrower, will be provided over the construction period of the project and during the drawdown period of the loan, rather than as at present over the full life of the loan.

The proposed new method of funding will enable us to dispense with the need for separate allocations of ATP funds for mixed credits and soft loans. This will enable us to respond more flexibly to individual circumstances using whichever financing mechanism is the more cost effective. The level of the overall ATP allocation within the aid programme is a matter for Ministers to review annually, but no significant future changes are seen at present from current levels of ATP project support.

WALES

Sheep

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many lowland sheep farmers in each of the Welsh counties have 500 breeding ewes or over; and what were the corresponding figures for each of the last five years.

Mr. Peter Walker: The number of holdings outside the less favourable areas with 500 breeding ewes or over is shown in the following table:

At June:

	1986	1987	1988
Powys	[1]3	[1]3	4
Gwynedd	40	40	41
Dyfed	22	27	28
Clwyd	35	34	33
South Glamorgan	7	6	9
Mid Glamorgan	3	4	5
West Glamorgan	3	4	3
Gwent	15	17	17

[1] Where fewer than 3 holdings are involved the precise number has been withheld in order to protect individual farmers' confidentiality.

Corresponding figures for earlier years are not available.

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on (a) the average size of sheep flocks in Wales and (b) comparable sheep flocks in the rest of the European Economic Community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: (a) At June 1988 the average size of a sheep flock in Wales was 587 (head).

(b) the latest comparable information available is in respect of 1985 and is shown in the following table:

Average size of sheep flock

Nursery Factories (Ceredigion)

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what action has been taken in the current year to build nursery factories in Ceredigion; and what further action is proposed.

Mr. Peter Walker: The Development Board for Rural Wales's factory construction programme for 1989-90 does not contain any proposals to build nursery factories in Ceredigion. I am currently considering the board's proposed factory construction programme for 1990-91 and expect to make an announcement in the new year.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what actions were taken by his Department to establish the causes of food poisoning in Wales between the publication of the annual notification rate for 1985 and April 1989;

(2) what steps were taken by his Department between the publication of the 1985 returns for notification of reported cases of food poisoning in Wales and April 1989 to establish whether rises in the number of cases were linked to changes in food handling in the home;

(3) what steps were taken by his Department between the publication of the 1985 returns for notification of reported cases of food poisoning in Wales and April 1989 to establish whether rises in the number of cases were linked to changes in food production;

(4) what steps were taken by his Department between the publication of the 1985 returns for notification of reported cases of food poisoning in Wales and April 1989 to establish whether rises in the number of cases were linked to changes in agriculture;

(5) what steps were taken by his Department between the publication of the 1985 returns for notification of reported cases of food poisoning in Wales and April 1989 to establish whether rises in the number of cases were linked to changes in food technology;

(6) what steps were taken by his Department between the publication of the 1985 returns for notification of reported cases of food poisoning in Wales and April 1989 to establish whether rises in the number of cases were linked to changes in food distribution;

(7) what steps were taken by his Department between the publication of the 1985 returns for notification of reported cases of food poisoning in Wales and April 1989 to establish whether rises in the number of cases were linked to changes in retailing practices;

(8) what steps were taken by his Department between the publication of the 1985 returns for notification of reported cases of food poisoning in Wales and April 1989 to establish whether rises in the number of cases were linked to changes in catering.

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave on 30 November at column 342. The notifications to the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys and the analyses by the communicable disease surveillance centre will not necessarily indicate the point in the food chain where contamination might have occurred.

The purpose of the Food Safety Bill is to strengthen food law and improve controls across the whole of the food chain in order to minimise the incidence of food poisoning.

Area Health Authorities

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) chairpersons and (b) members of area health authorities in Wales he has appointed since June 1987, by reference to each authority area.

Mr. Grist: The information is shown in the following table:

Authority	Chairmen[1]	Members
	All re-appointments	New appointments[2]	Re-appointments[2]
Clwyd	2	4	2
Dyfed	1	2	4
Gwent	—	4	—
Gwynedd	—	6	—
Mid Glamorgan	1	4	4
Pembrokeshire	—	1	4
Powys	—	1	4
South Glamorgan	1	5	3
West Glamorgan	—	6	1
	5	33	22

[1] The Chairman in Clwyd has been reappointed twice during the period in question.

[2] Three people were appointed and later reappointed during the period in question and appear in both columns.

Community Psychiatric Nurses

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many community psychiatric nurses are employed in each area health authority in Wales; and how many vacancies currently exist for such nurses.

Mr. Grist: Information on community psychiatric nurses in post is shown in the following table. Information on vacancies is not available centrally:

Community psychiatric nurses in post as at 30 September 1989 (whole-time equivalents)

	Mental illness	Mental handicap
Clwyd	49·1	13·0
East Dyfed	21·1	4·4

"Working For Patients"

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received on the White Paper, "Working for Patients"; how many were in favour of the proposals; and how many were against.

Mr. Grist: The Department has received several hundred representations on this White Paper from MPs, MEPs, professionals and other representative bodies, trade unions, health authorities and the general public. A detailed analysis could be undertaken only at disproportionate cost.

Therapists

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many students are attending colleges and universities in Wales which will lead to qualifications entitling them to practise as (a) speech therapists, (b) occupational therapists, (c) physiotherapists and (d) sign language interpreters.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The number of students undergoing training in Wales is shown as follows:

	Number
Speech therapists	54
Occupational therapists	76
Physiotherapists	95

Speech therapy training is provided at the South Glamorgan institute of higher education. The occupational therapist and physiotherapist students are receiving their training at the combined training institute in Cardiff. A further 43 people are attending an in-service occupational therapy course administered by the Mid Glamorgan district health authority on behalf of the Health Service in Wales.

No information is held centrally about students training as sign language interpreters.

Community Care

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to provide training for social workers and other local authority staff who may be responsible for the community care programme.

Mr. Grist: The primary responsibility for training local authority staff in community care rests with local authorities. The Department has provided additional help through its service initiatives for particular client groups and is, for example, spending £436,000 this year on training within the all-Wales mental handicap strategy. Further steps to enhance training in the community care field, in particular in relation to management and to services for elderly people, are currently under consideration.

GP Budgets

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has received any notification from any doctor's practice in Wales to apply for its own budget pursuant to the proposal contained in the White Paper, "Working for Patients."

Mr. Grist: No.

Hospitals

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has received any notification from any hospital in Wales that it would seek to apply for a national health hospital trust.

Mr. Grist: No.

EMPLOYMENT

Textiles and Clothing Industries

122. Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on job losses in the United Kingdom textile and clothing industries.

123. Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on job losses in the United Kingdom textile and clothing industries.

123. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statment on job losses in the United Kingdom textile and clothing industries.

Mr. Nicholls: Estimates of employees in employment in the textile and clothing industries in Great Britain from June 1984 to June 1989 are set out in the table which follows. Estimates for the United Kingdom are not available.

Training Credits

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the proposals for training credits for young people.

Mr. Nicholls: There are many issues to be considered before any decision is reached on the recommendation in the CBI's task force report in favour of training credits. The Government are examining the report's recommendations with interest.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many training and enterprise councils in Wales have received development funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend has approved applications for development funding from five groups of employers in Wales.

Employment Training

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which London boroughs participate in employment training; and how many places each of them has.

Mr. Nicholls: The London boroughs which are employment training training managers and the number of places each has contracted for are given in the following table. Boroughs may also participate through providing practical training placements or directed training (at their colleges) to other training managers. Information is not kept centrally on such involvement.

Employment Training
London boroughs: contracted places September 1989

Borough	Places
Enfield	300
Brent	250
Harrow	150
Kingston upon Thames	150
Hounslow	400
Hillingdon	100

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many persons in the Barnsley, East constituency are currently registered on the employment training scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: Information on the numbers on employment training is not available for the Barnsley, East constituency. On 24 November 1989, the latest date for which information is available, there were 1,752 trainees on employment training in Barnsley, which includes the Barnsley, East constituency.

British Coal (Disabled Employees)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has as to what percentage of the work force employed by British Coal are registered as disabled.

Mr. Eggar: As at 1 June 1988, 0·4 per cent. of the work force of British Coal were registered disabled, as published in the Employment Gazette in May 1989. Figures for 1989 will be published early in the new year.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans to designate employment training as an approved training scheme in 1990-91.

Mr. Nicholls: My Department has no plans to designate employment training as an approved training scheme.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans to make refusal of a place on employment training evidence that a claimant is not actively seeking work.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend has no such plans. Employment training offers a valuable route back into work which all long-term unemployed people would do well to consider. Well over 500,000 people have already benefited from training on the programme.

Restart

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans to make restart courses compulsory.

Mr. Eggar: There are no such plans, but conditions attached to restart courses are kept continuously under review.

Football Grounds (Safety)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment on what dates (a) Rochdale football club, (b) Manchester United football club, (c) Manchester City football club, (d) Stockport County football club, (e) Oldham Athletic football club, (f) Bury football club and (g) Bolton Wanderers football club were last inspected by the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Nicholls: The information requested is given in the table.

Club		Date of last inspection
(a)	Rochdale Football Club	14 February 1977
(b)	Manchester United Football Club	9 May 1984
(c)	Manchester City Football Club	No inspection visits made
(d)	Stockport County Football Club	No inspection visits made
(e)	Oldham Athletic Football Club	23 November 1977

	Club	Date of last inspection
(f)	Bury Football Club	No inspection visits made
(g)	Bolton Wanderers Football Club	8 June 1988

Inspections of football clubs by the Health and Safety Executive are restricted to the health, safety and welfare of employees. Enforcement of the Safety of Sports Grounds Act 1975, which covers spectator safety, is the responsibility of local authorities.

Relocation

Mr. Jim Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list all office relocations of his Department's staff since May 1979, stating in each case the location of origin and the location of transfer, together with the numbers of staff transferred.

Mr. Eggar: On 2 August 1989, my right hon. Friend announced that 1,100 jobs from my Department's headquarters in London, Watford and Reading will be moved to Runcorn (800) and Sheffield (300) over the next two to three years.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what relocations of his Department's staff, or agencies relating thereto, are currently being considered; and what are the number of staff affected.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 6 November 1989 at columns 471-72 to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood).

BAT Factory (Liverpool)

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will estimate the overall effect on unemployment in Liverpool of the proposed closure of the British American Tobacco factory.

Mr. Nicholls: It is not possible to estimate the overall effect that the proposed closure will have on unemployment in Liverpool. The company has announced that 476 jobs will be lost at the Liverpool site.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if his Department was informed of the proposed closure of the British American Tobacco factory in Liverpool; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The company sent my right hon. Friend an advance copy of the press release which it issued on 24 November.

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the number of applications to industrial tribunals under section 58 of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978 in the period of 1984 to 1988 and indicate how many were complaints under section 58(1)(a) and (b) compared with the number under section 58(1)(c); and if he will give the outcome of these cases under the two separate categories and indicate (a) the number of Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service conciliated settlements, (b) withdrawal, not via Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service, (c) successful at tribunal hearing, (d) dismissed at tribunal out of scope, (e) dismissed at tribunal hearing, other reasons and (f) disposed of otherwise.

Mr. Nicholls: The information, which is available in the form requested only from 1985 onwards, is set out in the tables:

582 = Complaints under Section 58 (1)(c).

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will give the number of applications to industrial tribunals under section 27 of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978 recorded in the period 1979-88 and indicate of those (a) the number of Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service conciliated settlements, (b) withdrawal not via the Advisory, Conciliation and Arbitration Service, (c) successful at tribunal hearing, (d) dismissed at tribunal out of scope, (e) dismissed at tribunal hearing, other reasons and (f) disposed of otherwise, respectively.

Mr. Nicholls: Most of the information is not available in the form requested, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Such information as is available is set out in the tables:

CBI Skills Report

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received about the Confederation of British Industry report "Towards a Skills Revolution—A Youth Charter"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 4 December 1989]: There are many issues to be considered before any decision is reached on the recommendation in the CBI's task force report in favour of training credits. The Government are examining the report's recommendations with interest.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Cholecystokinin

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the veterinary products committee has considered an application for an animal test certificate in respect of cholecystokinin.

Mr. Maclean: No.

Spanish Fishing Vessels

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the number of Spanish fishing vessels registered as British in 1985, 1986, 1987, 1988 and the latest available month of 1989, the number of such vessels prosecuted for fishing offences in each year and the present location of Spanish vessels whose British registration was withdrawn under the Merchant Shipping Act.

Mr. Curry: Definitive annual figures are not available, but our current estimate is that the number of fishing vessels on the British register which were beneficially owned abroad (mostly in Spain) rose from about 43 in 1985 to about 140 at the time the new registration provisions of the Merchant Shipping Act came into effect on 1 April 1989. At present no vessel can be registered as a British fishing vessel unless its owners are resident and domiciled in the United Kingdom and the vessel's operations are directed and controlled from this country. The information on prosecutions of vessels believed to be beneficially owned in Spain is as follows:

Year	Number
1985	2
1986	0
1987	14
1988	7
1989 (to end March)	26

No comprehensive information is available on the location of vessels which ceased to be registered as British fishing vessels on 1 April. A number are laid up in this country; others are understood to be in Spain.

Liriomyza Trifollii

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will ban the importation of plants from Holland in order to control the spread of Liriomyza trifollii among plants;

(2) what compensation is proposed for those growers compelled to destroy crops inflicted with Liriomyza trifollii;

(3) what has been the incidence of Liriomyza trifollii in plants over the last 10 years: and what steps are being taken by his Department to counter this problem.

Mr. Curry: Between 1979 and 1988 there were about 350 confirmed Ministry findings of the North American leafminer, Liriomyza trifollii, on plants. The Ministry has maintained a policy of eradication of this pest and has so far succeeded in ensuring that it has not become established in this country. No compensation is given by the Government to growers who are compelled to destroy crops infested with the pest. However, we are operating eradication measures which are designed to limit the loss suffered by producers to the minimum necessary to secure eradication and in practice this often now means the destruction of plants can be avoided. We have recently reached agreement with the Dutch authorities on a wide range of measures necessary to combat the threat from the South American leafminer, Liriomyza huidobrensis. We are watching the situation very carefully and will not hesitate to take further action if necessary.

Porcine Somatotropin

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on how many occasions the veterinary products committee has considered the issue of porcine somatotropin; and whether they have reached any conclusion.

Mr. Maclean: The VPC twice considered an application for an animal test certificate for porcine somatotropin product in 1987 and recommended that it should not be granted.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether any current animal test certificates exists in respect of porcine somatotropin.

Mr. Maclean: No.

Sulphadimidine

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will review the clearance given to sulphadimidine; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Licensed veterinary medicines containing the active ingredient sulphadimidine are in the process of being reviewed as part of a general exercise to ensure that licensed products meet current standards of safety, quality and efficacy. Decisions on the granting or revocation of licences are being taken on a product-by-product basis.

Intervention Stocks

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish details of all those commodities for which an intervention regime exists, held in store, giving in respect of each, by volume and value, the current stocks and the level at the appropriate time in 1988.

Mr. Curry: Stocks levels in 1988 and 1989 of commodities for which an intervention regime exists are held in the Library of the House. Valuation figures may vary according to the age of the stock and are shown in the table for the United Kingdom (comparable figures for the European Community are not available).

[1] = No Stocks

Sheep Dips

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research his Department is conducting into alternatives to organophosphorous sheep dips; and if he plans to alter the regulations relating to such chemicals.

Mr. Maclean: The Department is currently funding research at Bristol university into fly control on sheep, with preference given to the use of non-organaphosphorous compounds. I have no plans to change the controls which apply to sheep dips under the Medicines Act.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement about the use of organophosphorous sheep dips.

Mr. Maclean: Sheep must be dipped to an approved standard under the terms of the Sheep Scab Order 1976, and the sheep dips authorised for this purpose under the Medicines Act have all been subject to a stringent review of their safety, quality and efficacy. Instructions and conditions of use are required to be specified on the product labels.

Relocation

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list all office relocations of his Department's staff since May 1979, stating in each case the location of origin and the location of transfer, together with the numbers of staff transferred.

Mr. Curry: Full details of all office relocations over the period in question are not readily available. The following blocks of work have been or are being relocated away from the London area since May 1979:

Date	Work Unit	Number of posts	Location of origin	Location of transfer
1981	Finance (travel claims section)	32	Inner London	Alnwick
	Office Services (publications section)	20	Pinner	Alnwick
1987	Office Services (stationery section)	4	Pinner and Inner London	Alnwick
April 1988	Statistics (census and prices)	20	Inner London	Guildford
April 1988	Information Technology Directorate	5	Inner London	Guildford
August 1988	ADAS Cartographic Unit	11	Inner London	Gloucester
May-October 1989	Establishments (General) (Superannuation Section)	28	Inner London	Exeter
	Food Science Laboratory	20	Inner London	Norwich

About 70 per cent. of the Ministry's staff are currently located outside London.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what relocations of his Department's staff, or agencies relating thereto, are currently being considered; and what are the numbers of staff affected.

Mr. Curry: Officials of my Ministry are currently considering the potential for further relocation of headquarters' work away from the south-east, and a relocation concerning work of the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce is also under consideration. It is too early to say what numbers of posts may be affected. A decision has already been taken to relocate the Ministry's central science laboratory, involving about 400 posts, to a site in the midlands. A decision has also been taken to relocate the Ministry's records review work, currently being undertaken at Chessington, to Alnwick during the first half of next year. This work will replace that now being done by staff at Alnwick, but its transfer will not result in any redundancies in either location.

Aplastic Anaemia

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence he has of the link between the development of aplastic anaemia and lindane and pentachlorophenol.

Mr. Maclean: The Health and Safety Executive is currently reviewing lindane and is looking at the available evidence for a link between lindane and the development of aplastic anaemia. The Advisory Committee on Pesticides will be advising Ministers of the results of this review. I know of no evidence of a link between aplastic anaemia and pentachlorophenol.

Genetically Engineered Organisms

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has any proposals for the regulation of the use of genetically engineered organisms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: I have been asked to reply.

Yes. As envisaged in the Queen's Speech, my Department intends to introduce an environmental protection Bill this parliamentary Session, which will include appropriate provisions. These will augment existing legislative controls over the use of genetically engineered or modified organisms to provide additional protection against any risks to the environment arising from the import, containment or release to the environment of such organisms.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Transport

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he has taken to ensure that subsection (6)(a) of the Road Traffic, Transport and Roads (N.I.) Order has been fully complied with when making the Road and Railway Transport 1989 Statutory Rule No. 400 in respect of the Level Crossing (Coleraine Bushmills Road) Revocation Order (Northern Ireland) 1989.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The provisions of that subsection did not apply to the making of the order.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefits Take-up

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his latest estimate of the number of (a) elderly people, (b) sick and disabled people, (c) unemployed people, (d) one-parent families, (e) others and (f) total who are not claiming benefit to which they are entitled, giving the date to which his estimates apply.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Our latest estimates show that 90 per cent. of income-related benefit to which people are entitled is claimed.

The detailed information requested is as follows:

Numbers of eligible non-recipients for income related benefits

Thousands

	Supplementary benefit 1985	Housing benefit 1985 (1)(2)	Family income supplement 1985-86 (2)(3)
Pensioners	380	760	1
Sick and disabled	50	[2]—	1
Unemployed	330	[2]—	1
One-parent families	20	[2]—	2
Others	60	[2]—	2
Total	840	1,610	190(6)

[1]—not applicable.

[2]—not available.

Notes:

1. Figures refer to those eligible for standard HB only as non recipients of certificated Housing benefit will already be included as non recipients of supplementary benefit. In total, approximately 1·8 million households are eligible and not receiving standard or certificated HB.
2. Figures exclude families where the head or spouse is in full-time self-employment.
3. Based on pooled FES data for reasons of sample size.
4. FIS was paid to working families with children whose gross weekly income was less than a 'prescribed amount' determined by the number of children.
5. Although two years' survey data are pooled the number of sample cases are still small and insufficient to provide reliable estimates of these figures.
6. This figure will include some families who are also shown in column two as non recipients of HB.
7. Estimates are based on the Family Expenditure Survey.

Family Credit

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will review the working of the family credit regulations to ensure that low-income self-employed families do not lose their entitlement to assistance because of the interpretation of the authorities that they must abide by cash movement rules, rather than normal accountancy treatment of overhead costs and stock fluctuations.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We believe that a trading profit arrived at by normal accountancy practices is not an appropriate basis for arriving at the income to be taken into account in calculating family credit. The cash-flow basis was introduced when family credit replaced family income supplement in 1988 as being more appropriate for this purpose, and we have no plans to review it at this stage.

Income Support

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to reform the income support transitional provisions as they relate to families with children in care who return on home leave; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We intend, shortly, to bring forward amending regulations so that transitional additions are not reduced when children in local authority care return home temporarily on leave. Until they are in place, extra-statutory payments will be available.

Child Support

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will update to April 1990 the information provided in the reply of 28 November 1988 to the hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett), Official Report, columns 93-94, relating to child support, giving figures in columns (g) and (h) in September 1989 prices.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Although upratings of benefit are calculated by reference to the movement in the index of retail prices to September, comparisons in the value of benefits are more meaningful if made at general uprating dates. The figures requested as at April 1989 were given in the reply of 6 November 1989 to the hon. Member for Sunderland, North (Mr. Clay) at columns 459-60.

Community Care Grant

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, further to his reply of 27 November, Official Report, column 154, who is responsible for setting his priority of community care grant clients' needs.

Mr. Scott: The Secretary of State's general guidance on priorities and priority groups is in the social fund manual, a copy of which is in the Library. As I explained in my previous reply, local office managers give social fund officers further guidance on priorities taking account of local circumstances. Guidance is not binding on social fund officers. Each case must be considered on its merits. A social fund officer may decide, for example, that an item normally classed as of low priority should, in the light of the applicant's circumstances, be treated as high priority.

Dietary Requirements

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what guidance is issued to social fund officers about the dietary requirements of (a) adult men, (b) adult women, (c) children and (d) those persons aged 16 and 17 years when considering a claim for a crisis loan or income support under severe hardship rules.

Mr. Scott: Social fund officers are not provided with guidance on the dietary requirements of different categories of people. We expect social fund officers to use their experience and judgment in deciding how much an applicant needs in a crisis to avoid serious risk to the health and safety of the individual or his family. This will depend on the circumstances of each case including any particular health problems.

Nuclear Test Veterans

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many British nuclear test veterans are in receipt of (a) attendance allowance, (b) mobility allowance and (c) invalidity allowance.

Mr. Scott: I regret that this information is not available.

Relocation

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list all office relocations of his Department's staff since May 1979, stating in each case the location of origin and the location of transfer, together with the numbers of staff transferred.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I regret that the information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what relocations of his Department's staff, or agencies relating thereto, are currently being considered; and what are the numbers of staff affected.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 14 November 1989 that 150 posts from the office of the chief adjudication officer in Southampton, and 650 London-based posts are to be relocated to Leeds starting in late 1991. The latter posts include those required for the headquarters of the forthcoming benefits agency, the chief medical adviser's divisions and some other administrative functions, such as liaison with agencies, pay and records, staff training and estate management.

I should emphasise that these movements are of posts rather than of staff as such. All London-based staff will be asked whether they are prepared to move whether their particular post is affected or not. The Department hopes that sufficient staff will move voluntarily to avoid the need for any compulsory transfers.

Vibration White Finger

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the number of applications made by applicants claiming to suffer from vibration white finger, under regulation 13 of the Social Security (Industrial Injuries and Diseases) Miscellaneous Provisions Regulations 1986, at local offices of his Department in (a) Greenock and Port Glasgow, (b) Glasgow, (c) Dundee, (d) Sunderland, (e) Newcastle and (f) Liverpool in each of the the past two years and in the current year up to the most recent date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I regret that this information is not available.

Family Credit

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many additional families would qualify for family credit if the £6,000 capital limit were increased to £8,000 or abolished; and what would be the cost of each of these changes.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The estimates are as follows:

	Increase in FC caseload	Full year cost at current rate
Capital limit increased to £8,000	Less than 500	Less than £100,000
Capital limit abolished	Approx. 1,500	Around £1 million

Pensions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will publish a table showing, for men and women aged 16, 20, 30, and 40 years in April 1988, the ages at which it would pay the person concerned to cease contributing to a personal pension or other money purchase scheme, assuming rates of return of 0·5 per cent. and 2·5 per cent. above the annual increase in average earnings and, in other respects, making the same assumptions as were made in calculating the similar figures given in the letter dated 10 October from the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Social Security to the hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett).

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The table provides the first age at which the projected pension from the invested rebate is less than the corresponding GMP. These estimates are critically dependent on a number of illustrative assumptions which should not be taken as predictions of what future policy might be. These are:

(i) the contracted-out rebate for illustrative purposes only is assumed to be 5·8 per cent. of earnings between the lower and upper limits for NI contributions, declining to 3·75 per cent. by 2018;

(ii) the lower and upper earnings limits are assumed to increase in future in line with prices;

(iii) the contracted-out rebate is boosted by a 2 per cent. incentive addition for personal pensions and newly contracted-out occupational schemes up to 1992-93;

(iv) men are assumed to take their pension at 65, women at 60.

First age at which the projected pension from the invested rebate is less than the corresponding GMP

	Personal pension rate of return[1]		Money purchase rate of return[1]
Age at April 1988	½ per cent.	2½ per cent.	½ per cent.	2½ per cent.

BAT Factory (Liverpool)

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated additional cost in benefit payments for the people who will lose their jobs in the British American Tobacco factory, Liverpool; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: No such estimate has been made.

Benefit Payments (Liverpool and Merseyside)

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the estimated cost of benefit payments to his Department for the unemployed in (a) Liverpool and (b) Merseyside for the latest available date.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: No such estimate can be made.

Attendance and Mobility Allowances

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to unify the application procedure, medical examination and appeals system for attendance allowance and mobility allowance for claimants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: We will announce our proposals to improve the balance and structure of disability benefits within the next few months. Any changes in benefit administration will need to be considered in the light of those proposals.

Benefits (Residence Conditions)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what changes will be made to the residence conditions for social security benefits in respect of periods spent in other member states of the European Community following the completion of the internal market in 1992; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what changes will be made to the residence conditions for social security benefits in respect of citizens of other member states of the European Community following the completion of the internal market in 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Community citizens who are employed or self-employed may be able to take advantage of the co-ordination arrangements which already cover social security for migrant workers throughout the Community. In the case of those social security benefits where residence conditions apply, there are at present no plans to make any changes as a result of the completion of the internal market in 1992.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Public Appointments

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons above the age of (a) 60, (b) 65 and (c) 70 years he has appointed to public bodies in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Waddington: This information is not collected and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Magistrates Courts Clerks

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to improve magistrates courts clerk shortages; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: In the course of 1989, we have authorised the creation of 82 additional court clerk trainee posts; and we have made provision in public expenditure for a further increase next financial year. I have also approved for grant purposes the pay agreement from 1 July 1989 reached in the joint negotiating committee for magistrates courts staff which recognises the recruitment and retention requirements for court clerks. We are additionally seeking to raise the recruitment profile of the service by publishing two new careers booklets and by funding stands at two major careers fairs in collaboration with the Association of Magistrates Courts, whose work in co-ordinating the efforts of magistrates courts committees to recruit court clerks we fully endorse.

Abortion Clinics (Picketing)

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been arrested in the last six months as a result of picketing outside abortion clinics; and how many people have been charged with an offence as a result of these arrests.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested is not available.

Drugs

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to set up a fund to counter the use and supply of illicit drugs.

Mr. Mellor: Subject to detailed scrutiny of estimates and parliamentary approval, we are to set up a new central fund of £1 million in 1990-91 to enable the Government to meet some of the additional costs of international drugs efforts, including investigations by the police and rewards to major informants.

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures police forces are taking in conjunction with local education authorities to warn pupils of the dangers of drug taking.

Mr. Mellor: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire, South-East (Mr. Paice) On 5 December.

Racing

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will place in the Library the findings of the Lloyds merchant bank inquiry into the feasibility of privatising the Tote;

(2) if he will publish the findings of the Lloyds merchant bank inquiry in to the feasibility of privatising the Tote.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No. The advice in the report by Lloyds merchant bank on the feasibility of privatising the Tote will not be made public because it was given in confidence to my right hon. and learned Friend, and contains commercially and managerially sensitive information.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will make a statement on the independent inquiry into the feasibility of privatising the Tote.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The advice from Lloyds merchant bank on the feasibility of privatising the Tote is at present still under consideration, and the Government's conclusions will be made known in due course.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will make a statement about the initiation of an inquiry into the financing of horse and greyhound racing.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend is considering whether or not to establish such an inquiry.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will make a statement on the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report on the Grand Metropolitan/William Hill merger, published by it on 23 August; and whether the Director of Fair Trading is continuing to keep concerns mentioned in the report under review;

(2) what steps he has taken in relation to the explicit concerns highlighted within the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report of 23 August into the merger of the Grand Metropolitan and William Hill organisations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 23 August that he had accepted the recommendations of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report on the acquistion by Grand Metropolitan plc of William Hill. Action is being taken to implement those recommendations, including action by the Director General of Fair Trading. The Director General will also continue to monitor developments in the betting industry under those parts of the competition legislation for which he is responsible.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on (a) the current position of Satellite Information Service and (b) the future powers of horse and dog racecourses and stadia to enter into commercial deals.

Mr. Forth: I have been asked to reply.

I understand that the Director General of Fair Trading is continuing to monitor developments in the betting and racing industries in accordance with the provisions of United Kingdom competition legislation. In general we take the view that commercial deals are matters for the parties concerned, subject to the provisions of the competition legislation (the Fair Trading Act 1973, the Restrictive Trade Practices Act 1976, and the Competition Act 1980).

Probation Service

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the current extent of delays in the probation service in worst and best cases in dealing with (a) conciliation cases and (b) child welfare reports, both in divorce cases.

Mr. John Patten: The figures on which such an estimate would have to be based are not collected locally or centrally.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for the work of the probation service in conciliation and child welfare reports in civil divorce cases; what studies he has commissioned on this work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: There are no proposals at present to alter the arrangements under which this work is done. Her Majesty's inspectorate of probation, as part of their continuing programme of inquiries into specific themes of probation service work, will shortly be starting on an investigation of the civil work of the probation service.

Passports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to withdraw passports issued to British subjects or restrict their use; and how many have been withdrawn or restricted in each of the last five years and 1989 to date.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Withdrawal of a passport would be considered on the same basis as would refusal of an application, that is in the case of:

(a) a minor whose journey was known to be contrary to a court order, to the wishes of a parent or other person or authority to whom a court had awarded custody, care and control or to the provisions of section 25(1) of the Children and Young Persons Act 1933, as amended, or section 56 of the Adoption Act 1976;

(b) a person for whose arrest a warrant had been issued in the United Kingdom or who was wanted by the police on suspicion of a serious crime;

(c) in very rare cases, a person whose past or proposed activities were so demonstrably undesirable that the grant or continued enjoyment of passport facilities would be contrary to the public interest;

(d) a person repatriated at public expense until the debt has been repaid.

Records of withdrawals are maintained only for category (c). These are extremely rare and there were none in the period specified.

United Kingdom passports are valid for travel to all countries in the world, and there are no plans to restrict their use.

Prison Management (Complaints)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what changes he has made in the application of the prior ventilation rule in respect of writing to a solicitor complaining about a member of prison management; when each change was made; and by what means each change was announced;

(2) whether the prior ventilation rule in respect of writing to a solicitor complaining about a member of prison management has been abolished.

Mr. Mellor: The prior ventilation rule, under which all complaints by prisoners had to be pursued through internal channels before a prisoner could take his complaint outside, was replaced in 1981 by the simultaneous ventilation rule, which required complaints to be raised internally at the same time as they were raised with an outside body. Notice of this change was given to prison establishments in circular instruction 34/1981, which took effect in December 1981.

In December 1983, the Divisional court ruled in the case of Anderson that the simultaneous ventilation rule should not apply to a complaint made by a prisoner to his legal adviser. The implications of this judgment were explained in a letter from the prison department to all establishments on 22 December 1983. Circular instruction 48/1984 formally confirmed that correspondence with legal advisers which referred to unventilated complaints or allegations against staff should no longer be stopped unless it was clear from the content that the inmate was writing for some purpose other than obtaining legal advice about possible proceedings.

On 24 January 1989, my hon. Friend the Member for Grantham (Mr. Hogg), announced in a written reply at column 516 that it had been decided to abolish the simultaneous ventilation rule in respect of all correspondence. Details of the change, and of accompanying amendments to the prison rules governing adjudications, were set out in circular instruction 9/1989, which took effect on 1 April 1989.

Commission for Racial Equality

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much public money was spent by the Commission for Racial Equality in each year since its conception.

Mr. John Patten: The information is provided in the following table:

Financial year	Expenditure (£)
1977-78	3,672,701
1978-79	4,903,175
1979-80	5,939,083
1980-81	6,931,731
1981-82	7,526,822
1982-83	8,306,586
1983-84	8,718,454
1984-85	9,280,549
1985-86	9,444,957
1986-87	10,530,039
1987-88	10,946,831
1988-89	11,273,825

Visas

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any proposals for charging fees for (a) indefinite leave to remain, (b) extension of visitors' visas, (c) extension of student visas or (d) extension of business persons' visas.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Section 9 of the Immigration Act 1988 makes provision for the charging of fees in connection with applications for, or the grant of, indefinite leave to remain. The Government are considering how and when that provision might be implemented and an announcement will be made at the apropriate time. There are no plans for the introduction of fees in connection with any category of limited leave to remain.

Police Conduct

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the use of police officers as agents provocateur.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Guidance has been issued to all chief police officers which states that no member of a police force should counsel, incite or procure the commission of a crime. Furthermore, all police forces are aware of the need for care to avoid plain clothes officers placing themselves in situations where accusations could be made that they have acted as agents provocateur. I understand that briefing is normally given to all police officers taking part in such operations to ensure they avoid behaviour which could be so construed.

Cabinet (Police Protection)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost to the Exchequer of police protection for members of the Cabinet for the years 1970 to 1989 inclusive.

Mr. Waddington: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Safer Cities Campaign

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the objectives of the safer cities campaign; what were the results in 1988; and whether the programme will be continued.

Mr. John Patten: The objectives of the safer cities programme are to reduce crime, lessen the fear of crime, and to create safer cities within which economic enterprise and community life can flourish. In 1988, the programme was announced, nine areas agreed to take part and project development began in all of them. Twelve projects are now operational, with four more due to become so shortly. We plan to establish four further projects during 1990.

Charities

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to review the law on charities.

Mr. John Patten: The Government's proposals for the reform of the law on charities are set out in the White Paper, "Charities: A Framework for the Future" (Cm 694) which was published in May.

Prisoners (Visits)

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the arrangements for relatives to visit people held in custody.

Mr. Mellor: Convicted adult prisoners and convicted young offenders are entitled to a minimum of one half-hour visit every 28 days and 14 days respectively. More, and longer, visits are allowed wherever practicable.

Unconvicted prisoners are normally allowed a 5-minute vsit every day excluding Sunday (in some establishments), Christmas day, Boxing day and Good Friday. Longer visits are allowed wherever possible. In the event of particular difficulties at an establishment the regional director may authorise a reduction in the frequency of visits as long as the aggregated entitlement of one and a half hours per week is maintained.

Relatives on income support or on low incomes are able to claim travelling expenses for one prison visit every 28 days.

Police Manpower

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what response he has made to the latest request from Nottingham county council on the provision of more police in Nottingham.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend announced on 23 November at column 12 that he had approved an increase of 26 police posts for the Nottinghamshire constabulary with effect from 1 April 1990.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many probationary policemen are currently operating in the Metropolitan police force; what percentage of the force they represent; what the situation is in other parts of the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information on police forces in England and Wales, for which my right hon. and learned Friend has responsibility, is as follows:

	Probationer constables	Percentage of strength
Metropolitan Police[1]	3,582	12·7
Provincial forces[2]	9,249	9·7

[1] As at 27 November 1989.

[2] As at 31 December 1988.

Shops Act 1950

Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to seek to amend the Shops Act 1950 in the light of the recent conclusion of the European Court; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: The Government have made it clear that they favour reform of the law but that legislation depends on agreement being reached on proposals that would command widespread support. This is not the case at present.

Neighbourhood Watch

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of neighbourhood watch schemes in the Easington constituency in the years 1986, 1987 and 1988; and what steps he is taking to promote and extend the scheme.

Mr. John Patten: There were seven neighbourhood watch schemes in Easington in 1986, 17 schemes in 1987 and 30 schemes in 1988.

The national crime prevention organisation Crime Concern was set up in 1988, to stimulate local crime prevention activity, including neighbourhood watch: its recent work has included a conference on the management of neighbourhood watch schemes held on 30 November and attended by over 70 representatives of police forces. The launch in October of phase 3 of the Home Office's crime prevention publicity campaign saw the publication of the third edition of the handbook "Practical Ways to Crack Crime", which contains a wealth of advice on neighbourhood watch.

Street Lighting

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received regarding inadequate street lighting from (a) women and (b) pensioners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We have received six representations in the last 18 months from women and pensioners, including one from the hon. Member for Hackney, North and Stoke Newington (Ms. Abbot) and one from the hon. Member for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody). We have also received representations from members of the Parliament lighting group. We recognise that there is considerable public concern about the possible link between street lighting and crime. This is why we are undertaking research, most notably in the London borough of Wandsworth, to examine that link. Interim results from this research should be available during the first half of next year.

Lighting is only one factor to be considered in preventing crime and reducing the fear of crime. The Government have made available advice on the personal safety of women and the elderly in the publication "Practical Ways to Crack Crime", of which nearly 3 million copies have been distributed.

Birmingham Six

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his reasons for advising against the decision of the European Parliament to launch an investigation into circumstances surrounding the conviction of the Birmingham Six.

Mr. John Patten: As my right hon. and learned Friend said in reply to another question from my hon. Friend on 29 November, we believe that it would be wholly inappropriate for the European Parliament to inquire into the convictions of the Birmingham Six, which are within national competence.

Life Sentences

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many inmates at present in prisons in England and Wales and serving a life sentence have been in prison for more than (a) 15 years, (b) 20 years, (c) 25 years and (d) 30 years.

Mr. Mellor: The information is published annually in "Prison Statistics England and Wales" (table 8.3 of the latest issue, for 1988, Cm 825). The latest available information is given in the table.

Life sentence prisoners held under their original sentence[1] in Prison Service establishments in England and Wales on 30 September 1989: by time spent under sentence in such establishments

Years spent under sentence[2]	Number of prisoners[3]
Up to 15 years	2,463
Over 15 up to 20 years	154
Over 20 up to 25 years	45
Over 25 up to 30 years	7
Over 30 years	4
Total	2,673

[1] Excluding 104 prisoners recalled following an earlier release on licence.

[2] Excluding any time spent on remand in custody or in Non-Prison Service establishments.

[3] The figures are those recorded centrally and are approximate: detailed checking of individual cases would involve disproportionate cost.

Relocation

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all office relocations of his Department's staff since May 1979, stating in each case the location of origin and the location of transfer, together with the numbers of staff transferred.

Mr. Waddington: Since 1979, four main units of the Home Office have been relocated in part or in whole. The computing and pay services division (301 posts) was relocated from London to Bootle in 1982-83; the prison service south-east regional office (74 posts) from Tolworth to Woking in 1987; 88 posts were transferred from the London passport office to Glasgow in 1988-89; and 108 posts in the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board from London to Glasgow in 1989.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what relocations of his Department's staff, or agencies relating thereto, are currently being considered; and what are the numbers of staff affected.

Mr. Waddington: As I said in my reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Bolton, North-East (Mr. Thurnham) on 10 November 1989 at column 802, I am considering the possible relocation from the London area of a number of Home Office functions. No firm indication can be given at present as to the number of staff who would be affected.

Law of Evidence (Confessions)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will propose legislation to reform the criminal law of England so that evidence as to a confession by an accused person cannot, of itself, be sufficient to found a finding of guilt.

Mr. John Patten: We shall consider what changes in law or practice may be needed as regards confession evidence and other matters in the light of the findings of the judicial inquiry which is being conducted by Sir John May into the convictions of the Guildford Four and the Maguire family.

Prison Meals

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many prison meals are served on a daily basis; and what percentage are special diet meals;

(2) what consultation takes place where prisons provide special meals for ethnic minorities, vegetarians and vegans to ensure that such foodstuffs are palatable, nutritious, balanced and that menus are not repetitive and unsustaining;

(3) what percentage of prisons accommodate special diets for ethnic minorities; and how many meals are served on a daily basis;

(4) what percentage of prisons provide meals for vegans; and how many such meals are prepared daily;

(5) what percentage of prisons provide meals for vegetarians; and how many such meals are prepared daily.

Mr. Mellor: Details of inmates in minority groups and their location are not recorded centrally. In total about 146,000 meals are served daily to inmates in prison service establishments in England and Wales, of which about 26,000 (18 per cent.) are estimated to be variations from the normal dietary.

All meals are prepared according to centrally determined dietary scales designed to meet published nutritional standards which accommodate recognised food preferences.

Each establishment prepares special meals to meet the needs of its current population, and also varies its standard menus to take into account known preferences. The number of meals served to certain minority groups is estimated as follows:

8,500 for a variety of ethnic minorities.
1,200 for vegans.
15,000 for vegetarians.
1,500 for inmates requiring a modified diet under prescription from a medical officer.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are being taken to reduce the incidence of the LD50 test on animals in research laboratories; and if he will make it his policy that no further licences be issued.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We welcome the initiative by British scientists in the European Community and the OECD to reduce the need for this test for the classification of substances. We have no plans to refuse licences where my right hon. and learned Friend is satisfied that the work is justified under section 5 of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986.

Victim Support Schemes

Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many victim support schemes now operate in England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: Three hundred and fifty four.

Byelaws

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many personnel are assigned to work relating to byelaws; and at what cost.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The equivalent of 5·25 full-time staff work on applications for byelaws. The cost (salaries, accommodation and office services) is £115,000 a year.

Departmental Archives

Mr. James Lamond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the documents and archives confiscated by the Home Office following raids on the printers Kommunistischer Arbeiter Bildungverein in 1917 or 1918 at their premises in Charlotte street, London W1, and on the International Socialist Club, 28 City road, London EC1 in 1920, are still in the possession of his Department.

Mr. Waddington: I have set inquiries in hand to locate any papers relating to these incidents and will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

DEFENCE

Red Arrows

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the figures for 1988-89 for (a) recruits attracted and (b) the cost of the programme (i) per machine or pilot and (ii) per show after displays by the Red Arrows display team.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I regret that the information on recruits is not available. The operating costs of the Red Arrows' flying programme are approximately £13·5 million per annum at 1988-89 prices.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list for each of the last 15 years the venues at which the Red Arrows have displayed their skills; and if he will make a statement regarding the preliminary list for consideration in December of next year's programme.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I regret that the list of venues could be provided only at disproportionate cost and effort. However, the Red Arrows have given some 1,600 displays since 1975. As regards the 1990 programme, I have nothing to add to my reply to the hon. Member on 3 November at column 379.

UK-US Liaison

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will identify and date the United States-United Kingdom bilateral agreements made within the framework of United Kingdom-United States wartime host nation support lines of communication arrangement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United States-United Kingdom lines of communication arrangement has been in existence since 1973 and permits the United States to establish, operate and maintain lines of communication and ancililary facilties in the United Kingdom for use under emergency conditions as part of their NATO obligations. Joint contingency plans in support of this arrangement have been drawn up. The arrangement and the details of the plans are classified.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will identify the posts, ranks and responsibilities of United Kingdom military personnel designated to liaise with the United States European command logistics co-ordinator in the United Kingdom (a) in peacetime, (b) in crisis and (c) in war.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Liaison with the United States European command logistics co-ordination centre is co-ordinated through the Ministry of Defence central staffs. Regular contacts are maintained at Major/Colonel level involving those sections within the central staffs with responsibility for wartime contingency planning.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will identify the United Kingdom civil agencies and Government Departments which liaise with the headquarters United States European command logistics co-ordinator in the United Kingdom (a) in peacetime, (b) in crisis and (c) in war;

(2) if he will identify the United Kingdom military and civilian bodies and agencies designated to develop and maintain the United States-United Kingdom wartime host nation support/lines of communication programme (a) in peacetime, (b) in crisis and (c) in war;

(3) if he will identify the United Kingdom military and Government Departments represented on the United States-United Kingdom lines of communication joint planning group.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Government Departments which would be involved in the provision of host nation support to United States forces and from civil resources in time of crisis are as follows:

Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food
Her Majesty's Customs and Excise
Ministry of Defence
Department of Employment
Department of Energy
Department of the Environment

Department of Health
Home Office
Department of Transport
Scottish Office
Welsh Office

Each of these Departments is represented on the United States-United Kingdom lines of communication joint planning group or its sub-committees. They also liaise direct with the headquarters, United States European command logistics co-ordination centre in the United Kingdom as necessary, although co-ordination is maintained by the Ministry of Defence central staffs.

A number of civil agencies are also consulted, as necessary, in drawing up the joint contingency plans. This is invariably managed through, or on their behalf by, the relevant Government Department.

Nuclear Test Veterans

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will order a medical study of all surviving British nuclear test veterans to compare results with the statistical mortality study carried out by the National Radiological Protection Board.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: As the hon. Member is aware, the Government rely on the independent and expert advice of the National Radiological Protection Board on matters concerning the overall health of the British nuclear test participant group with respect to their involvement in the British nuclear test programme. It is not for the Government to dictate the methodology or conduct of the NRPB studies, but I am advised by the NRPB that it is not practicable to carry out a health study of living test veterans to produce meaningful, unbiased results.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his Department had discussions with the Australian Government prior to the announcement by their Minister for Primary Industry that compensation for Australian nuclear test veterans was warranted following a recent British Government decision to compensate its veterans.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There were no discussions with the Australian Federal Government prior to their announcement. The reference to a recent British Government decision to compensate its veterans is not understood. However, the Government would be ready to pay appropriate compensation wherever the Crown's legal liability was established and where there was firm evidence to show that, on a balance of probabilities, ex-service men had suffered ill health as a result of exposure to radiation during the course of their duties as members of the armed forces.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he is taking to investigate the extent to which British nuclear test veterans, who suffered extensive violent skin rashes immediately following nuclear tests, are today suffering from damage to their immune systems associated with radiation contamination.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The procedures and very stringent precautions adopted during the test programme were such that no significant level of surface radioactivity arose, and the consequential radiation doses to surface tissues were negligible. There were no reported, observed or treated superficial tissue disorders related to radioactivity or radiation exposures at the time of the tests or subsequently.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to compensate Pacific islanders, in line with United States proposals, for conditions arising after British nuclear tests there.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will write to the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many service personnel were present on Christmas Island during the detonation of nuclear materials, at the exact time of each test.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A total of some 11,000 members of Her Majesty's forces were present during one or more of the British nuclear tests carried out at Malden and Christmas islands in the period 1957 to 1962, and the total resource provided by these members amounts to 16,000 man-trials. Details of the numbers present at the exact time of each test can be obtained from service records only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will undertake a survey of the tropical diseases from which British nuclear test veterans may still be suffering.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no grounds for carrying out a special survey of the tropical diseases being suffered by participants in the British nuclear test programme.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why it was decided that the Medical Research Council should not continue to monitor British nuclear test veterans after their tour of duty associated with nuclear testing.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Government remain confident that the precautions taken during the British nuclear test programme were adequate to ensure that participants suffered no harm as a result of their participation. When the United Kingdom undertook the programme, the Medical Research Council did not advise that comprehensive monitoring of United Kingdom test participants should be carried out either during or after the tests, and from the evidence accumulated since there are no grounds for changing that policy.

Relocation

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all office relocations of his Department's staff since May 1979, stating in each case the location of origin and the location of transfer, together with the numbers of staff transferred.

Mr. Neubert: It is not possible to provide the detail requested without disproportionate effort and cost. However, the following table sets out some of the larger moves either completed or approved:

Original location	Number of posts	Destination
London/South East	1,400	Glasgow
London	54	Yeovilton
London	164	Bath

Original location	Number of posts	Destination
London	50	Harrogate
Portsmouth	60	Cheadle Hulme
London	156	Bath (1990-91)
London /Devizes	240	Swindon (1990-91)
Woolwich/Donnington/ Portsmouth	250	Llangennech (1989-91)
New Unit	250	Sutton Coldfield (1989-91)
Woolwich/Bromley	1,500	Teesside (1993-95)
Total	4,124

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what relocations of his Department's staff or agencies relating thereto are currently being considered; and what are the numbers of staff affected.

Mr. Neubert: The most significant element of MOD relocation planning involves major groups within the Procurement Executive. The land and air systems controllerates (3,800 posts in London) are evaluating various site options. The sea systems controllerate (3,500 posts in Bath, Portland and Portsdown) are examining the collocation of its organisation. In addition, there are a number of studies in train which may yield further relocation possibilities, provided that the economic and operational aspects of a move are positive.

Manpower

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the manpower estimates for Her Majesty's armed forces for the years from 1990 to 1992; and what will be the effect of the recent announcement that more categories will be open to women.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Manpower estimates for the armed forces as at 1 April 1990 were published in the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1989". The manpower estimates for 1 April 1991 will be published in the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1990" in due course. It is not our practice to publish manpower estimates for future years as these are produced for our own management purposes only.

Following recent announcements by the Army and the RAF on the wider employment of women, female recruiting targets have been increased. A recent study offers the prospects of up to 6,000 posts in the Regular Army being made available to women. The RAF's female recruiting targets have been increased by 400 ground air women per annum between 1 April 1989 and 1 April 1994 and by 35 female pilots and navigators per annum from 1989-90.

ENERGY

Gas Imports

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much gas was imported during the last year for which he has figures.

Mr. Peter Morrison: In 1988 the United Kingdom imported 15·5 million tonnes coal-equivalent of natural gas.

Source: Customs and Excise, overseas trade statistics as published in the Department of Energy, Digest of Energy Statistics.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list, by year for the last 10 years, the tonnages of opencast coal that have been mined.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The information requested, which includes production from licensed mines, is as follows:

	Million tonnes
1979	12·9
1980	15·8
1981	14·8
1982	15·3
1983	14·7
1984	14·3
1985	15·6
1986	14·3
1987	15·8
1988	17·9

Source: Digest of United Kingdom Energy Statistics, Table 14.

Low-energy Light Bulbs

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will take steps to reduce the cost of low-energy light bulbs to the general public; and what plans he has to make the public more aware of them.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The high cost of low-energy lamps reflects their considerably greater complexity and consequent difficulty of manufacture compared with ordinary tungsten filament lamps. However, their extra initial cost is more than offset by their much longer lifetimes and lower electricity consumption. My energy efficiency office will continue to promote energy efficient lighting along with other energy efficiency measures.

Mr. Walter Patterson

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if his Department has sought the views of the author Mr. Walter Patterson on energy policies and conservation.

Mr. John Wakeham: On various occasions members of my Department have met Mr. Walter Patterson. On no occasion were his views on energy policies and conservation sought.

Uranium

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he collects on the price of internationally traded uranium and on internationally traded reactor fuel grade low-enriched uranium.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department collects no such information but is aware of studies produced by a number of organisations.

Colliery Costs, North-East

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will list, colliery by colliery, costs borne by British Coal north-east area to the North East electricity board for power consumed at Munton, Easington, Vane Tempest, Dawdon, Ellington, Westo and Wearmouth collieries in the years 1986, 1987 and 1988;

(2) if he will list, colliery by colliery, the costs borne by British Coal north-east area of mining machinery supplies to Munton, Easington, Vane Tempest, Dawdon, Ellington, Westo and Wearmouth collieries in the years 1986, 1987 and 1988;

(3) if he will list, colliery by colliery, the various costings borne by British Coal north-east (a) to British Rail for the transportation of minerals from Munton, Easington, Vane Tempest, Dawdon, Ellington, Westo and Wearmouth collieries in the years 1986, 1987 and 1988 and (b) to road haulage contractors for the transportation of minerals from the same collieries over the same period.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the British Coal Corporation. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what percentage of the weight, and what percentage of the volume of waste sent to Drigg, for each of the years 1980-88 inclusive, originated from (a) British Nuclear Fuels Ltd., (b) the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority, (c) the Central Electricity Generating Board and (d) the South of Scotland Electricity Board; and if he will make a statement.

(2) what was the weight and volume of waste sent to Drigg for each of the years from 1980 to 1988 inclusive; and what are his estimates for 1989 to 1999 inclusive;

(3) what is the cost of disposal of waste at Drigg per cubic metre; what plans there are for upgrading the disposal practice of low-level waste at Drigg; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for British Nuclear Fuels plc. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the progress of the borehole drilling programme at (a) Sellafield and (b) Dounreay.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Drilling of the first borehole at Sellafield finished on 8 November. Acting on behalf of Nirex, British Nuclear Fuels has now made an application to the local planning authority for permission to drill a second borehole. Also acting on behalf of Nirex, the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority submitted an application for permission to drill two boreholes at Dounreay, which was rejected by the local planning authority in July. The authority's appeal against this decision was submitted on 24 August, and is currently with my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the expected tonnage which will be deposited in the Nirex deep repository for (a) intermediate waste and (b) low-level waste.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Nirex expects to handle about 1 million cu m of low-level waste and one third of a million cu m of intermediate level waste by 2030.

Reprocessing

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the future of spent fuel reprocessing within the United Kingdom.

Mr Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on 26 June 1989 at column 356.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the progress of the research into the extraction of plutonium from intermediate level waste.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I am advised that the nuclear industry has concluded a programme of research on this topic which indicates that while it is technically possible to remove a proportion of the plutonium from plutonium contaminated material, it is not economic to do so, taking account of dose rates to operatives and the effects of such reductions in terms of storage costs and long-term risks from disposal. The nuclear industry is not proposing further work in this area at present.

Power Station Costs

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are the latest estimates for the cost per unit per kilowatt hour for generation from the following sources stating maximum and minimum estimates (a) coal-fired power stations, (b) nuclear Magnox stations, (c) nuclear advanced gas-cooled reactor stations, (d) Sizewell B, (e) tidal power, (f) onshore wind generation, (g) offshore wind generation, (h) geothermal power and (i) wave power.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Parts (a) to (d) are a matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board. I shall ask the chairman of the CEGB to write to the hon. Member.

On parts (e) to (i) I refer the hon. Member to Energy Paper 55 "Renewable Energy in the United Kingdom: The Way Forward" a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Decommissioning

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will indicate the latest estimates for the decommissioning costs of (a) Magnox reactors, (b) advanced gas-cooled reactors and (c) Sizewell B.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Decommissioning costs are a matter for the CEGB. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

British Coal

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will take steps to require British Coal to offer outside interests the opportunity to take over the running of pits which British Coal has decided to cease operating.

Mr. Michael Spicer: It is for British Coal to determine in each case whether to license the recovery of remnant coal at collieries which it has decided to cease operating. The increase in the statutory limit on underground manpower at licensed mines proposed in the current Coal Industry Bill give British Coal the opportunity to license such operations on a larger scale than at present.

Relocation

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will list all office relocations of his Department's staff since May 1979, stating in each case the location of origin and the location of transfer, together with the numbers of staff transferred;

(2) what relocations of his Department's staff, or agencies relating thereto, are currently being considered; and what are the numbers of staff affected.

Mr. Wakeham: No sections of my Department have been relocated since May 1979. As I told the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 6 November 1989 at column 418, the position will be reviewed in early 1991 when the Department will have had some 18 months' experience of working in its new headquarters building.

Research and Development

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he plans to review the level of research and development programmes devoted to nuclear power and sponsored by his Department.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department keeps its nuclear research and development programmes under regular review.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will increase substantially the research and development budget devoted to renewable energy sources; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My Department has published its strategy for research and development of renewable energy sources in energy paper 55. In line with that strategy, expenditure is set to increase steadily over the next three financial years. It remains our policy to ensure that all economic and environmentally acceptable energy sources should be exploited fully.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what percentage of his Department's research and development budget is devoted to (a) gas-fired generation, (b) renewable energy sources and (c) energy conservation and efficiency in 1979 and each succeeding year.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Technological development in the field of gas-fired power generation has been taken forward by the power generation industry and equipment manufacturers without a need for Government intervention. Hence, in this field my Department has no separate budget for R and D. The other information requested is as follows:

	Percentage of Department's R and D expenditure
Year	Renewables	Energy efficiency
1979-80	5·5	[1]0·6
1980-81	6·5	[1]0·9
1981-82	6·4	1·0
1982-83	5·2	1·8
1983-84	5·0	2·9
1984-85	6·4	2·7
1985-86	6·1	1·5
1986-87	7·0	2·0
1987-88	9·1	2·3
1988-89	8·9	1·7

Source: Annual Review of Government funded R and D. except [1] where breakdown not shown in source, and Departmental figures used. Figures used for total Departmental expenditure include throughout the period nuclear expenditure by the UKAEA in support of the Department's programmes.

Coal

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has discussed, or will discuss, with the chairman of British Coal the implementation of measures to protect the reserves of low-sulphur coal in this country; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: It is for British Coal to assess the market demand for particular qualities of coal, including low-sulphur coal, that it can profitably supply. This assessment forms part of its business plan which we review regularly with the chairman of British Coal.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will raise the closure of Betteshanger colliery with the chairman of British Coal as a matter of urgency.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Colliery closures are the responsibility of British Coal. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the tonnage of workable reserves of low-sulphur coal in the United Kingdom for (a) 1979, (b) 1983 and (c) 1989.

Mr. Michael Spicer: United Kingdom coal resources are vested in the British Coal Corporation. The amount of those resources which constitute workable reserves can be determined by the corporation only in the light of local mining conditions and market opportunities.

HEALTH

Child Migrants Trust

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions he has had with the Child Migrants Trust in response to its request for funding; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have been in correspondence with members of the Child Migrants Trust concerning individuals' efforts to trace their roots and the possibility of Government support for the trust. My officials have met and are in contact with representatives of the Child Migrants Trust to discuss how my Department might assist them. However, I am unable to make a decision about the trust's grant application until it provides the extra information we have requested.

Pesticides

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the research projects he is funding, including the location and amount spent on each project, into the effects of pesticides on human health.

Mr. Freeman: The Department is not funding any research on this subject but I understand some proposals relating to improved monitoring and investigation of alleged pesticide poisoning are under consideration at the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. Under the Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986, applicants seeking approval of pesticide products are required to submit a full breakdown package in support of their application for the approval of pesticides. They are also required to undertake extensive research into, among other things, the potential toxicological effects of pesticides on operators and consumers. This research can often take several years to complete to the satisfaction of the regulatory authorities and is carried out at considerable cost to the companies. It makes an important contribution towards increasing knowledge of pesticides and raising contemporary scientific standards.

Ambulance Dispute

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received regarding the ambulancemen's dispute; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Representations have been received by the Department from trade unions on the staff side of the ambulance Whitley Councils and from the Association of Professional Ambulance Personnel which claims to have within its membership over 20 per cent. of all ambulance personnel but is not represented on the staff side of the Whitley Councils. Representations have come also from members of the public writing direct or through their Members of Parliament.

Liquid Crystal Thermography

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in which locations within the National Health Service liquid crystal thermography is available; and what advice his Department has given to health authorities on the use of this screening procedure.

Mr. Freeman: We do not keep records of the locations at which liquid crystal thermography is available and have not advised health authorities on its use. I understand that very few hospitals use this technique as a diagnostic tool.

Evidence has emerged from a long-term trial carried out by the Department at Bath to measure skin temperature patterns that liquid crystal thermography is not suitable for screening, although it may be of use as an adjunct to other diagnostic routines.

Child Abuse

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the amount of funding allocated by his Department towards the Great Ormond Street project.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: £56,347 in 1987-88, £62,110 in 1988-89 and £56,223 in 1989-90 has been allocated by the Department of Health for the postgraduate training programme in child sexual abuse. The level of funding for the forthcoming financial year has not yet been decided.

Ambulance Service

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to put out to competitive tender the management and operation of non-emergency ambulance services.

Mr. Freeman: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Warrington, North (Mr. Hoyle) on 30 November at column 411.

Royal College of Nursing

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the main issue discussed at his first meeting with the new General Secretary of the Royal College of Nursing.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has had one formal meeting with the recently appointed general secretary of the Royal College of Nursing. It was in June, shortly before she took up her new duties. The establishment and membership of the NHS policy board was the main issue discussed.

Community Care

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to increase the participation of disabled people in the planning of their own community care services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Our White Paper "Caring for People" (Cmnd. 849) sets out our detailed proposals for the future organisation of community care, including arrangements designed to widen room for choice by those who require such care and provide more appropriate services closer to their wishes and needs. In particular our proposals for multidisciplinary assessment of need, whether for residential care or support at home (paragraph 3.2) lay particular stress on the need to take account of the wishes of the individual and his or her carer, and as far as possible to include their active participation in the assessment.

Helicopter Emergency Ambulance Services

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the review being conducted by the regional ambulance officers working party into helicopter emergency ambulance services will be complete; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The review is well advanced but has had to be suspended during the industrial action taking place within the ambulance service.

Lancashire Ambulance Service

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received regarding the quota system operated by Lancashire ambulance service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received no recent representation regarding the system of quotas introduced in 1986 by the Lancashire health authority for non-urgent patient journeys.

Contraception

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what expenditure has been undertaken by his Department to encourage safe and effective contraception in the Nottingham area, in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Regional health authorities are responsible for allocating funds to individual districts who are in turn responsible for determining the need for and level of local services and providing them in the most efficient way. Family planning services are no exception to this.

Mental Health Act

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if it is his intention to review the operation of the guardianship provisions of the Mental Health Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: We have no present plans for such a review, but will of course reconsider the need in the light of evidence to suggest that either the provisions, or the way they are put into operation, are inadequate.

National Assistance Act

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action he is taking to ensure that the provisions of section 47 of the National Assistance Act 1948 are fully understood by practitioners within the medical and social work professions.

Mr. Freeman: At present we have no plans to take action, but we are keeping the situation under review.

Relocation

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list all office relocations of his Department's staff since May 1979, stating in each case the location of origin and the location of transfer, together with the numbers of staff transferred.

Mr. Freeman: The Department of Health was formed in 1988. Between 1979 and 1988 a number of posts in the former DHSS were relocated, but the available information does not distinguish between health and social security posts. We have recently announced that the work of the National Health Service management executive, involving some 1,000 posts, is to be relocated from London to Leeds.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what relocations of his Department's staff, or agencies relating thereto, are currently being considered; and what are the numbers of staff affected.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has announced that the work of the whole of the National Health Service management executive, involving some 1,000 posts, is to be relocated from London to Leeds.

Hospices

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to give financial support to hospices.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Arrangements for financial support for hospices in England have been under careful consideration for some time. We hope to announce proposals shortly.

Babies (Intensive Care)

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total number of intensive care baby cots available in the Yorkshire regional health authority; and what is the number in each district health authority.

Mr. Freeman: The information is given in the table.

Neonatal cots, Yorkshire Regional Health Authority, 1988-89

District Health Authority	Number of cots
Hull	24
East Yorkshire	10
Grimsby	19
Scunthorpe	10
Northallerton	24
York	10
Scarborough	10
Harrogate	14
Bradford	32
Airedale	14
Calderdale	18
Huddersfield	18
Dewsbury	17
Leeds Western	36
Leeds Eastern	31
Wakefield	14
Pontefract	15
Regional total	316

[1] Average daily available cots not in maternity units.

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to increase the number of intensive care baby cots available in the Yorkshire regional health authority.

Mr. Freeman: Responsibility for the local provision of services is a matter for the health authority concerned. The hon. Member may like to approach the chairman of the Yorkshire regional health authority, Sir Bryan Askew.

Dental Services

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of community dental clinics operating in Britain for each year since 1979.

Mr. Freeman: The number of operational community dental clinics, both fixed and mobile, in England in each of the years since 1979 is as follows:

Caldendar/ Financial year[1]	Number of clinics[2]
1979	1,861
1980	1,865
1981	1,864
1982	1,876
1983	1,909
1984	1,881
1985	1,907
1986-87	1,838
1987-88	1,810
1988-89	1,747

[1] Figures up to 1985 relate to calendar years. Information thereafter is based on financial years.

[2] These figures relate to the total number of clinics available, though some may not have been in use for part or all of the year in question.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the dental attendance figures for the Wakefield district health authority for each year since 1979.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not available centrally for the period before 1982. From 1982 the figures for Wakefield DHA are shown in the table. The information relates to the community dental service.

Last day of calendar/ Financial year	Number of attendances
1982	12,456
1983	13,167
1984	12,652
1985	11,265
1986-87	9,881
1987-88	10,720
1988-89	8,730

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is his policy with regard to the future of the community dental service; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what plans there are to improve the dental care of those children whose parents fail to arrange regular dental checks.

Mr. Freeman: Following proposals made in their White Paper "Promoting Better Health", the Government took powers in the Health and Medicines Act 1988 to enable changes to be made to the responsibilities of the community dental service.

In the Government's view, general dental practitioners should normally provide dental care to schoolchildren. Switching the emphasis of the community dental service away from children will enable it to commit a significant proportion of its resources to health education, to the treatment of priority groups such as handicapped adults and the elderly, to identify the dental needs of the population, and generally to act as a safety net for treatment for those whose needs cannot be met by general dental practitioners.

The community dental service continues to carry out dental screening of schoolchildren, and a patient who is identified as being in need of dental treatment is advised to seek it from a general dental practitioner. The changes will of course be monitored.

Vaccination

Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will itemise the take-up of the combined measles, mumps and rubella vaccination for children in South Yorkshire.

Mr. Freeman: The estimated number of children receiving the combined measles, mumps and rubella vaccination in South Yorkshire in 1988-89, broken down by age and district health authority are shown in the table. Accurate information about take-up rates is not available.

Nurses

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, what is the number of NHS staff, by grade, who have retired within the last five years under the female nurse provisions of the NHS superannuation regulations, indicating the ages of the staff concerned in year bands.

Mr. Freeman: The specific information requested is not available. The NHS superannuation scheme does not maintain either records by grade or statistics relating to retirements under the special class provisions. An attempt to extract even some of the required information from manual and computer records would be a very time-consuming exercise, which would incur disproportionate expense.

Basingstoke and North Hampshire Health Authority

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the level of funding of the Basingstoke and North Hampshire health authority.

Mr. Freeman: From 1 April 1990 allocations to regions will be based upon a basis of weighted capitation of residents. Regions will in turn begin the process of allocating to districts next year on the same basis but taking into account additional local factors. This basis will provide a fairer basis of revenue funding to all districts. The details are set out more fully in "Working for Patients".

General Practitioners (Contract)

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations he has received on the provision in the general practitioner's contract for annual contact with pensioner patients by general practitioners.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received a number of representations on the GPs' new contract which have made some reference to the requirement to offer an annual check-up to patients aged 75 and over. Due to the general nature of the majority of such representations, it is not possible to give a precise figure.

Waiting List Fund

Sir Neil Macfarlane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money will be made available to the National Health Service through the waiting list fund in 1990-91; and what are the allocations to regional health authorities.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The National Health Service is treating more patients than ever before, but waiting times in some places and for some specialties are still too long. Next year the waiting list fund will be £33 million. Of this, £20 million will be allocated direct to regional and special health authorities. The allocations to authorities are as follows:

Region	Allocation (£ million)
Northern	1·45
Yorkshire	1·65
Trent	2·00
East Anglian	0·45
North West Thames	1·45
North East Thames	1·60
South East Thames	1·50
South West Thames	0·70
Wessex	1·10
Oxford	0·60
South Western	1·10
West Midlands	2·85
Mersey	1·45
North Western	1·90
Special Health Authorities for the London Postgraduate Teaching Hospitals	0·20
Total	20·00

The remainder of the fund is being earmarked for a special targeted attack on the 100 longest specialty waiting lists in the country. Key data for these lists will be examined by inter-authority comparisons and consultancy, a team of management consultants who are currently investigating the causes of long waiting lists in 22 districts. They will advise whether waiting list fund money should be allocated to regions to help districts tackle these 100 long lists, and will visit selected districts to investigate the problems at first hand.

This £33 million brings the Government's investment in the drive to tackle waiting times to £119 million over four years. In the first three years, the fund has enabled well over 300,000 in-patients and day cases, and over 200,000 out-patients, to be treated.

Consultants

Sir Neil Macfarlane: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will be in a position to make an announcement on the proposed allocation of public funds and on management training for consultants.

Mr. Freeman: I have today announced the allocation of £1 million to the successful regions. The programmes of training are due to commence in April 1990. Residential training courses will be brief (about four weeks) and will teach basic principles of management for consultants who wish to play a part in the management of the NHS.

There was an extremely enthusiastic response to the invitation to put forward bids for this scheme and the general quality of submissions received was most impressive. Seven regions, in all, will benefit from central funding. A national evaluation process will be an important part of this initiative.

Health Authority Members

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what he estimates the annual remuneration of non-officer members of health authorities and family practitioner services authorities under the National Health Service and Community Care Bill will be.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This is still under consideration.

Community Health Councils

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the annual budget allocation for community health councils.

Mr. Freeman: The expenses of community health councils are met by and form part of the total expenditure of the health authorities concerned. It is for health authorities to decide on the level of funding that they provide to community health councils. The summarised accounts of regional and district health authorities for 1988-89 record revenue expenditure on community health councils totalling £8,004,257. This is a provisional figure, subject to audit.

Abortion

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will update the following tables of statistics printed in the special report and report of the Select Committee on the Infant Life (Preservation) Bill, H.L. Paper 153 of 1986-87 and H.L. Paper 50 of 1987-88, to cover 1987, 1988 and 1989 (a) the number of notifications of abortions carried out under the Abortion Act 1967, gestation by completed weeks by statutory grounds and category of premises, residents and non-residents, England and Wales, in the special report on pages 22 to 26 and the report on pages 72 to 73; and (b) the number of notifications of abortions carried out under the Abortion Act 1967, gestation by completed weeks by statutory grounds and mother's age, England and Wales as in the special report on pages 28 to 37 and in the report on pages 74 to 77.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 24 November 1989]: The information requested has been placed in the Library, and I have sent my hon. Friend a copy.

AIDS

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will outline the reasons for the closure of the Health Education Authority's AIDS unit;

(2) what discussions he had with the director of the Health Education Authority about the future of the AIDS unit prior to that unit's closure; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 4 December 1989]: The planned internal reorganisation of the Health Education Authority is entirely a matter for the authority, and we played no part in the HEA's decisions on this issue. The HEA's chairman made it clear at the expert symposium on HIV and AIDS organised jointly by the Department and the HEA on 24 November that part of the reorganisation of the HEA's business will involve the management of its AIDS work with that of its six other major health topic programmes. The authority considers that this will increase effectiveness and reflect the AIDS programme's close links with many other aspects of the authority's work. These changes will involve no dilution of the HEA's HIV prevention effort.

Drug Overdoses

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many incidents have been recorded in each of the past 10 years of (a) suicide, (b) parasuicide and (c) accidental death as a result of overdoses of drugs containing paracetemol.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 4 December 1989]: The information is not available in the exact form requested. The available information is shown in the table.

Project 2000

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what effect the proposals in "Top Up Loans for Students", Cm. 520, with regard to benefit entitlement will have on students pursuing Project 2000 courses of nursing education.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 4 December 1989]: The Government accepted the proposals of the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting that Project 2000 students should have student, rather than employee, status and receive bursaries rather than salaries. The Government remain committed to removing entitlement to income support, unemployment benefit and housing benefit from students with the exception of single parents and disabled people.

The basic level of bursary for Project 2000 students under 26 is currently £4,700 per annum in London, and £4,000 per annum elsewhere. These amounts will not be means-tested. Project 2000 students, like other students in full-time education, will pay only 20 per cent. of the community charge.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Monopolies and Mergers Commission

10. Mr. Litherland: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether there has been any change in the rôle of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission in recent years.

Mr. Ridley: The principal role of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission has not changed, but its rôle has been extended over recent years by certain provisions in the Telecommunications Act, the Airports Act, the Gas Act, the Water Act and the Electricity Act.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the current referrals before the Monopolies and Mergers Commission with expected dates for receipt and publication of each report.

Mr. Redwood: The references currently before the Monopolies and Mergers Commission are as follows:

Type of reference	Subject Matter	Referral	Due (in date order)	Extended to
Monopoly	Wholesale Petrol Supply	9 November 1988	8 November 1989	20 December 1989
Merger	Atlas Copco/Desoutter Brothers	20 September 1989	19 December 1989
Merger	Colne Valley/Lee Valley/Rickmansworth Water	7 September 1989	12 January 1990

Monopoly	Cinema Advertising	28 June 1989	27 March 1990
Monopoly	Plasterboard	28 November 1989	31 July 1990

The publication schedule for each report is decided when a report is submitted to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. The date of publication remains confidential for reasons of market sensitivity. In all cases we aim to publish a report as soon after it has been submitted as is practicable.

Data Processing Equipment

22. Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the percentage of the home market for electronic computers supplied by imports.

59. Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the percentage of the home market of electronic computers supplied by imports.

Mr. McWilliam: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the percentage of the home market of electronic computers supplied by imports.

Mr. Forth: The information sought is not readily available, since imports include imports for re-export while exports include those for re-import. Such entrepot trade is an important feature of international trade in electronic data processing (EDP) equipment. However, information published by the Central Statistics Office in "Business Monitor PQ 3302 Electronic Data processing equipment" (HMSO) shows that in 1988 total imports of EDP equipment were at a level equivalent to 90 per cent. of the United Kingdom's home market, while total exports were at a level equivalent to 76 per cent. of the United Kingdom's home market.

18. Mr. Leadbitter: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the deficit in electronic data processing equipment with European Community countries.

32. Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the deficit in electronic data processing equipment with European Community countries.

98. Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the deficit in electronic data processing equipment with European Community countries.

Mr. Forth: Based on data compiled and published by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise, in 1988 the United Kingdom had an estimated net surplus of £785 million, not a deficit, with the European Community countries in respect of electronic data processing equipment.

66. Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the deficit in electronic data processing equipment with West Germany.

81. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the deficit in electronic data processing equipment with West Germany.

Mr. Forth: Based on data compiled by and available from Her Majesty's Customs and Excise, in 1988 the United Kingdom had an estimated net surplus of £299 million, not a deficit, with West Germany in respect of electronic data processing equipment.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for 1979 and for each year since 1984 and the current year to date (i) estimated sales of United Kingdom manufactured computers in SITC 752 plus parts in SITC 759.97, together with imports and exports, (ii) the ratio of exports to sales and (iii) the ratio of imports to home demand; and if he will provide an estimate of the import content of industry sales, together with the percentage share of exports to total exports of manufactures to one place of decimals.

Mr. Forth: The latest available information is given in the following table. There are no official estimates of the import content of industry sales.

Electronic Data Processing Equipment

January-June 1989¹	2,565	2,382	3,191	3,374	93	95	6·5

¹ = Provisional.

Notes:

1. Electronic Data Processing Equipment is defined as 752 plus 759.97 of SITC (Rev. 3). The corresponding classification for sales data is Activity Heading 3302 of the Standard Industrial Classification (Revised 1980). 1979 sales data have been adjusted to correspond to current definitions.
2. Home Market = Sales less Exports plus Imports.
3. Imports include imports for re-export while exports incude exports for re-import. Where such entrepot trade is significant import: home market ratios and exports: sales ratios, as normally defined, can approach and even exceed 100 per cent.
4. Manufactures is defined as Sections 5 to 8 of the SITC.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for 1979 and for each year since 1984 and the current year to date sales of United Kingdom manufactured computers in SITC 752.3, plus imports and exports, together with (i) the ratio of exports to manufactured sales, (ii) the ratio of imports to home demand and (iii) his estimate of the value of imports for (a) re-export, (b) direct sales to the United Kingdom market and (c) the import content of United Kingdom manufactured exports;

(2) whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the value, volume and average value of imports and exports of computers in SITC 752.3; what assessment he has made of the proportion of exports manufactured outside the United Kingdom and the change in United Kingdom content of those manufactured in the United Kingdom since 1986; and what assessment he has made of the reasons for the change in the levels of average value and volume in 1988.

Mr. Forth: The classification system used for the collection of sales statistics is different from that used for international trade. Consequently data on sales of computers corresponding to SITC 752.3 are not available. The ratio of exports to manufactured sales and the ratio of imports to home demand cannot, therefore, be calculated. Imports are not broken down into those for re-export or direct sale to the United Kingdom market. There are no official estimates of the import content of United Kingdom-manufactured exports of computers.

The table gives the available information on imports and exports relating to SITC 752.3. The introduction of a new classification system at the start of 1988 and changes in the reporting of some exports during that year may have affected the consistency and the quality of the detailed figures for computers. Therefore average values, which are in fact unit values for 1988 should be treated with caution.

Trade Deficit (West Germany)

14. Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the manufacturing trade deficit with West Germany.

23. Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the manufacturing trade deficit with West Germany.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In the first nine months of 1989 imports of manufactures into the United Kingdom consigned from the Federal Republic of Germany exceeded United Kingdom exports to that country by £7·4 billion.

20. Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give the growth in the manufacturing trade deficit with West Germany since 1979.

Mr. Ridley: The crude deficit with the Federal Republic of Germany in manufactured goods was £4·0 billion in 1979 and £8·7 billion in 1988, at 1988 constant prices.

68. Mr. Radice: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give the growth in the manufacturing trade deficit with West Germany since 1979.

93. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give the growth in the manufacturing trade deficit with West Germany since 1979.

Mr. Redwood: The crude deficit with the Federal Republic of Germany in manufactured goods was £2·5 billion in 1979 and £8·7 billion in 1988 at current prices, an increase of £6·2 billion.

EC Consumer Council

19. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the outcome of the recent European Economic Community consumer council meeting.

36. Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the outcome of the recent EEC Consumer Council meeting.

Mr. Forth: A resolution identifying priorities for the relaunch of consumer policy was agreed. The draft directives on package travel and product safety were discussed without substantive conclusions and both dossiers were remitted to COREPER. The Commission outlined its plans for improved representation of consumers at Community level and indicated that new Commission proposals for the European home and leisure accident surveillance system would be forwarded to the Council soon.

Girobank

24. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the future of Girobank.

Mr. Forth: As I said in answer to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mr. Parry) on 27 November, the then Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster announced on 20 April that the Post Office Board had accepted a conditional offer from the Alliance and Leicester Building Society for Girobank. The Post Office and the Alliance and Leicester are engaged in detailed negotiations with a view to completing the sale as soon as practicable.

The regulatory authorities will need to be satisfied and my consent will be required before the sale can take place.

48. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the future of the Girobank.

55. Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the future of Girobank.

77. Mr. Heffer: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the future of Girobank.

85. Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the future of the Girobank.

54. Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the future of the Girobank.

Mr. Forth: I have nothing to add to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mr. Parry) on 27 November.

Financial Services

21. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received on the regulation of financial services.

Mr. Ridley: I receive a considerable number of representations on a variety of topics relating to the regulation of financial services. We consider very carefully those which relate to the scope of the framework of the regulatory system, or the powers under the Financial Services Act which the Government retain. Those which relate to matters which are the responsibility of the SIB or another regulatory authority are passed to the appropriate body.

25. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps have been taken to ensure that the Financial Services Act is being operated to the benefit of the investor.

106. Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps have been taken to ensure that the Financial Services Act is being operated to the benefit of the investor.

Mr. Ridley: I am satisfied that the Financial Services Act is operating in accordance with its central aim, which is to protect investors.

64. Mr. Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will review the operation of legislation affecting the regulation of insurance brokers and other independent financial advisers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Insurance brokers are regulated under the Insurance Brokers Registration Act 1977 (IBRA) and in addition, in respect of their business activities, under the Financial Services Act 1986 (FSA). I have no plans to review the operation of the IBRA. A number of changes to the FSA are included in the new Companies Act which may affect the regulation of independent financial advisers, including insurance brokers in respect of their investment business activities. I have no plans to review further the operation of the FSA.

88. Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received on the regulation of financial services.

Mr. Redwood: I receive a considerable number of representations on a variety of topics relating to the regulation of financial services. We consider very carefully those which relate to the scope of the framework of the regulatory system, or the powers under the Financial Services Act which the Government retain. Those which relate to matters which are the responsibility of the SIB or another regulatory authority are passed to the appropriate body.

Trade Barriers

26. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make it his policy to ensure that the European Economic Community does not erect protectionist trade barriers.

Mr. Ridley: I am against protectionism. I will certainly ensure that all proposals for protectionist trade policy action are rigorously opposed by the United Kingdom.

30. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many of the measures designed to remove barriers to trade in connection with the creation of a single European market have now been adopted, agreed in principle or had common positions agreed.

Mr. Redwood: Of the measures in the European Commission's White Paper, "Completing the Internal Market", 152 have now been adopted, agreed in principle or had common positions agreed.

Car Production

27. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many cars were built in the United Kingdom in (a) 1978 and (b) 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In 1978 1,222,949 cars were built in the United Kingdom as compared with 1,226,835 in 1988, making last year the best year for car production since 1977.

94. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement concerning the future of the production of cars and allied products in the United Kingdom.

110. Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement concerning the future of the production of cars and allied products in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Car output has increased in recent years and, with the additional investments now being made by a number of companies, looks set to expand significantly in the 1990s.

Manufacturing Trade Balance

28. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects British manufacturing trade to be in balance with (a) West Germany and (b) the rest of the European Economic Community.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Government are committed to free trade as being in the best interests of the United Kingdom. We cannot expect this to produce a trade balance with every partner; nevertheless, the Government recognise the importance of continuing to encourage exports through the activities of the British Overseas Trade Board.

53. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects British manufacturing trade to be in balance with (a) West Germany and (b) the rest of the European Economic Community.

Mr. Redwood: The Government are committed to free trade as being in the best interests of the United Kingdom. We cannot expect this to produce a trade balance with every partner; nevertheless, the Government recognise the importance of continuing to encourage and support exports through inter alia the activities of the British Overseas Trade Board and ECGD.

62. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects British manufacturing trade to be in balance with (a) West Germany and (b) the rest of the European Economic Community.

Mr. Redwood: The Government are committed to free trade being in the best interests of the United Kingdom. The Government recognise the importance of continuing to encourage exports through the activities of the British Overseas Trade Board, including the recent successful Focus Germany Campaign. It is also pressing to open the financial services markets throughout the European Community which should help the British financial service sector and increase our invisible exports.

Manufacturing Trade Deficit

71. Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the manufacturing trade deficit with European Community countries.

Mr. Redwood: In the first nine months of 1989, the United Kingdom had a deficit in trade in manufactures with other European Community countries of £11·5 billion.

89. Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give the growth in the manufacturing trade deficit with the European Community countries since 1979.

99. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give the growth in manufacturing trade deficit with European Community countries since 1979.

100. Mr. Lambie: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give the growth in the manufacturing trade deficit with the European Community countries since 1979.

Mr. Redwood: The deficit with the European Community in trade in manufactured goods at current prices has risen from £3·1 billion in 1979 to £13·4 billion in 1988, an increase of £10·3 billion.

EC Industry Council

29. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the outcome of the recent European Economic Community Council meeting.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Council of Industry Ministers, at which the Minister for Industry and Enterprise represented the United Kingdom, concentrated on discussion of steel issues. It agreed to an Italian request to extend agreed closure deadlines of certain Italian steel plants in exchange for delays in the payment of aid to the Italian steel industry.

Discussions also took place on textiles, footwear, shipbuilding and high definition television.

Product Safety

31. Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he plans to meet his counterparts in the European Community to discuss product safety.

33. Mr. Snape: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he plans to meet his counterparts in the European Community to discuss product safety.

52. Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he plans to meet his counterparts in the European Community to discuss product safety.

96. Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he plans to meet his counterparts in the European Community to discuss product safety.

Mr. Forth: I meet my counterparts in other member states regularly. In the past few weeks I have had a number of discussions with them on product safety, including a wide-ranging discussion on the proposed EC general product safety directive at the Consumer Council on 9 November. More recently I have had discussions on product safety with Ministers in Ireland prior to the Irish Presidency in the new year.

Japanese Companies

34. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many Japanese manufacturing companies are now operating in the United Kingdom; and what information he has on the figure for other member states of the European Community.

Mr. Redwood: The information is as follows:

European Community Member State	Number of Japanese manufacturers
United Kingdom	[1]114
France	85
West Germany	67
Netherlands	27
Belgium	15
Luxembourg	8
Ireland	[2]19
Spain	41
Italy	24
Denmark	2
Portugal	7
Greece	4

[1] as at 31 October 1989.

[2] as at 31 January 1989.

[1] For the United Kingdom these figures refer to individual Japanese manufacturing companies with one or more operating plants. For the rest of the European Community the figures refer to the number of plants known to be either currently operating in EC member states or having announced a formal intention to operate.

[2] Figures for EC investment other than United Kingdom obtained from Japan External Trade Organisation (JETRO) figures given are the latest available.

Toys

35. Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps his Department is taking to monitor the safety of children's toys.

40. Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps his Department is taking to monitor the safety of children's toys.

56. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps his Department is taking to monitor the safety of children's toys.

Mr. Forth: Local authority trading standards departments have a statutory duty to enforce the Consumer Protection Act 1987 and the toy safety regulations made thereunder. The Act provides the necessary powers for the discharge of this responsibility.

The new Toys (Safety) Regulations 1989, which implement the EC directive on the safety of toys with effect from 1 January, will provide more comprehensive safety measures to ensure that only safe toys are placed on the market. They will also require enforcement authorities to notify my Department of enforcement action taken under these regulations.

Trade Deficit (EC)

37. Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the European Community countries with which the United Kingdom has a manufacturing trade deficit.

90. Mr. Bidwell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the European Community countries with which the United Kingdom has a manufacturing trade deficit.

Mr. Redwood: In the first nine months of 1989 the United Kingdom had a manufacturing trade deficit with the following countries:

France, Belgium-Luxembourg, Netherlands, Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Denmark and Portugal.

Internal Market

38. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what additional help is being given to businesses to help them to take advantage of the internal market in 1992.

76. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what additional help is being given to businesses to help them to take advantage of the internal market in 1992.

Mr. Redwood: We provide a comprehensive single market information service through our European Open for Business campaign, which is regularly updated and expanded. The practical assistance available through our Enterprise Initiative is also particularly relevant to firms preparing for the single market.

In the private sector there is an increasing level of information and advice being provided to help business adapt to the liberalised European trading conditions.

Imports

39. Mr. James Lamond: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give the growth in imports in manufactured goods from European Community countries since 1979.

46. Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give the growth in imports in manufactured goods from European Community countries since 1979.

58. Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give the growth in imports in manufactured goods from European Community countries since 1979.

Mr. Redwood: Imports of manufactured goods from the European Community have risen, at current prices, from £16·0 billion in 1979 to £45·7 billion in 1988, an increase of £29·7 billion.

47. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give the growth in imports in manufacturing goods from West Germany since 1979.

75. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give the growth in imports in manufacturing goods from West Germany since 1979.

78. Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give the growth in imports in manufacturing goods from West Germany since 1979.

Mr. Redwood: Imports of manufactured goods from West Germany have risen, at current prices, from £5·3 billion in 1979 to £16·6 billion in 1988, an increase of £11·3 billion.

57. Mr. Orme: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the increase in import penetration of manufactured goods from 1979 until the first quarter of the current year.

72. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the increase in import penetration of manufactured goods from 1979 until the first quarter of the current year.

83. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the increase in import penetration of manufactured goods from 1979 until the first quarter of the current year.

Mr. Redwood: Import penetration in manufacturing industry rose from 27 per cent. in 1979 to 36 per cent. in the year ending March 1989.

Competition Policy

41. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to review his policy on competition.

Mr. Redwood: We are in the process of implementing the conclusions of our review of competition policy, which were published last year and have no plans for a further review.

EC Ministerial Meetings

42. Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he intends to meet his European Economic Community counterparts; and what matters will be discussed.

45. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he intends to meet his European Economic Community counterparts; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. Redwood: I intend to maintain close contact with all my EC counterparts, and a whole range of matters will be discussed.

51. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he intends to meet his European Economic Community counterparts; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. Ridley: I continue to maintain close contact with all my EC counterparts, to discuss a whole range of matters.

CBI

43. Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next plans to meet representatives of the Confederation of British Industry to discuss the prospects for British business.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My Department maintains regular and frequent contacts with the Confederation of British Industry at all levels on a wide range of business matters.

101. Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next plans to meet representatives of the Confederation of British Industry to discuss the prospects for British business.

109. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next expects to meet the president of the Confederation of British Industry to discuss manufacturing industry.

113. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he next plans to meet representatives of the Confederation of British Industry to discuss the prospcts for British business.

Mr. Ridley: I maintain regular and frequent contacts with the Confederation of British Industry on a wide range of business matters.

Labelling

44. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any plans to change the labelling requirements for consumer goods.

Mr. Forth: Additional labelling requirements will come into force over the next year for toys and all-terrain vehicles. The Government have made clear their support for the early introduction of a Community-wide voluntary eco-labelling scheme.

49. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met the European Commissioner, Sir Leon Brittan; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Ridley: I last met Sir Leon Brittan on 23 November at the Internal Market Council. A number of issues were discussed, in particular the draft merger control regulation.

Subsidies

50. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much direct subsidy was paid by his Department to British industry in (a) 1979 and (b) 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Department does not distinguish in its accounts between direct subsidies and other expenditure. However, the total expenditure of the Department, including support for nationalised industries, was £2·257 million in 1979-80 and £1·304 million in 1988-89.

Consumer Protection

60. Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to introduce new legislation or regulations on consumer protection.

95. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to introduce new legislation or regulations on consumer protection.

97. Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to introduce new legislation or regulations on consumer protection.

Mr. Forth: We intend to improve the protection given to consumers in a number of ways including the introduction of an order under the Prices Act 1974, as amended, on price indications and unit pricing about which we are currently engaging in public consultation, and changes to other legislation affecting consumers' interests.

Washing Machines

61. Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the level of imports of washing machines, and give this as a percentage of total United Kingdom sales.

Mr. Redwood: The information is as follows:

Washing machines

	1989	January to June 1989
Imports (£ million)	157·9	65·1
United Kingdom sales (£ million)	275·5	122·2
Imports (Percentage of United Kingdom sales)	57	53

Notes and definitions:

1. Figures relate to domestic-type electric washing machines only.
2. United Kingdom sales figures relate to sales by United Kingdom manufacturers with a minimum employment of 100. The possibly incomplete coverage of these figures implies that the percentage figures shown may be overstated.

British Shipbuilders

63. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he last met the chairman of British Shipbuilders; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I met the chairman of British Shipbuilders on 21 November 1989. A number of matters of current interest were discussed, including the disposal of the assets of North East Shipbuilders Ltd.

Electronic Consumer Goods

65. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the balance of payments deficit in electronic consumer goods.

108. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the balance of payments deficit in electronic consumer goods.

112. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate the balance of payments deficit in electronic consumer goods.

Mr. Forth: The deficit, estimated as a crude trade balance on the overseas trade statistics basis, was £950 million in 1988. Corresponding figures available so far for 1989 indicate that the deficit was £700 million in the period January to September.

Textiles

67. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he is taking to reduce imported textiles into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Redwood: Imports of a wide range of textiles and clothing products from major low-cost exporting countries have for some time been restricted under bilateral agreements concluded by the Community within the framework of the multi-fibre arrangements and associated agreements. Where a surge in imports of a particular product not currently restricted is causing serious injury to domestic industry I am prepared to consider whether there is a case for action to put to the Community under the terms of the appropriate agreement. Each case has to be considered on its merits and in the light of the implications for the United Kingdom economy as a whole. It is not as a general rule in our interest to increase barriers to trade; indeed the Community is committed in the Uruguay round to negotiate about phasing out the MFA on acceptable terms.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of the current balance of payments deficit can be attributed to the importation of textile and clothing goods from outside the United Kingdom.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 5 December 1989]: Information on the balance of trade in textiles and clothing is not available on the same basis as the current account of the balance of payments. The following table shows the relationship between these balances and that for total visible trade which is available on both bases.

United Kingdom Trade, 12 months ending October 1989

82. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations he has received regarding the multi-fibre arrangement from the textile industry.

Mr. Redwood: We have received comments on Professor Silberston's recent report on the future of the multi-fibre arrangement from the Apparel, Knitting and Textiles Alliance as well as from particular sectors of the textile and clothing industry. These comments are being taken into account in our consideration of the United Kingdom and EC position as negotiations on the future of the multi-fibre arrangement continue in the GATT Uruguay round.

107. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the Silberston report on the multi-fibre arrangement for the textile industry.

Mr. Redwood: I announced publication of Professor Silberston's report on the future of the multi-fibre arrangement in my reply to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 19 October at column 176. Comments on the report have been received from a variety of sources, including the United Kingdom textile and clothing industry, the Trades Union Congress and organisations representing consumers and retailers. The report and these responses will be of help to the Government as the Community prepares its position for the final stages of the GATT Uruguay round negotiations on textile trade policy next year.

British Investment Bank

69. Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any plans to create a British investment bank to invest in British industry.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. The Government's firm view is that British industry will itself make better investment decisions than a state institution using taxpayers' money.

Citizens Advice Bureaux

70. Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has had with the citizens advice bureaux on the funding requirements in 1990-91 of their comprehensive advice service.

102. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions he has had with the citizens advice bureaux on the funding requirements in 1990-91 of their comprehensive advice service.

Mr. Forth: The funding of individual citizens advice bureaux is a matter for local decision, and my Department is not involved in those discussions. I have however met representatives of the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux and of Citizens Advice Scotland in recent months and among the topics discussed was their funding requirements.

Transport Policy (CBI)

73. Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has received a copy of the Confederation of British Industry's policy document on transport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have seen a copy of the CBI's report, "Trade Routes to the Future", which my right hon. Friend and I are studying. The report will serve to increase our understanding of businesses' transport needs.

Golden Shares

74. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many companies presently have golden shares held by the Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: I hold special shares in six companies. Other colleagues hold special shares also.

Civil Research and Development

79. Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much money was provided for the support of civil research and development by his Department in 1989-90 in the 1989 public expenditure review; and how much he now estimates will be spent.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The 1989 Public Expenditure White Paper (Cm 605) indicated that £243 million would be available through the DTI for civil industrial research and development support during 1989-90. Our latest estimates indicate that the take-up of this funding will be approximately £231 million.

Note: these figures apply to DTI support for industrial R and D under the innovation, civil aircraft and aeroengine, and space budgets.

Postal Services

80. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received about the quality of the postal services.

Mr. Forth: In the last year we have received some 150 representations from right hon. and hon. Members and others about the quality of the postal service, mainly the first-class service. Quality of the postal service is an operational matter for the Post Office: it has set itself a target of an average 3 per cent. improvement this year.

103. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the average volume of mail sent by first-class post on a working day during the past year; how many letters, in number and percentage, arrived within the target time; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The Post Office tells me that the current average number of first-class letters sent each day is 25 million. Statistics on the proportion of letters delivered within the target time are now kept on a district rather than national basis, but I understand that between three quarters and four fifths of first-class letters are delivered on the working day after posting.

Renaval Programme

84. Mr. Faulds: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the operation of the European Economic Community's Renaval programme in the United Kingdom.

105. Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the operation of the European Economic Community's Renaval programme in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Government have submitted applications for programmes of measures for Plymouth and Gibraltar and put cases for eligibility for Strathclyde and Fife. We are considering what further applications might be made. The European Commission has so far approved only the eligibility of Plymouth.

Nationalised Industries (European Community)

86. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received about the level of subsidies to other European Community countries' nationalised industries.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: From time to time we receive representations from industry about unfair competition from subsidised nationalised industries in other member states. Substantive complaints are pursued vigorously with the European Commission who are responsible for ensuring the proper application of the state aid rules of the European Economic Community treaty. We are concerned about the opportunities which other member states have to provide subsidies to their nationalised industries which may distort competition in the European Community.

Barlow Clowes

87. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on progress towards reimbursement of investors who lost money in the Barlow Clowes collapse and the help given by his Department in the process.

Mr. Ridley: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to him by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Corporate Affairs on 1 November at column 257. The latest information available to me on the progress of the liquidation of Barlow Clowes International Ltd is in my right hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary's letter of 27 November to all members, a copy of which has been placed in the Library.

114. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations he has received about Barlow Clowes.

Mr. Ridley: I have received many representations from right hon. and hon. Members on behalf of their constituents, from the Barlow Clowes Investors Group and from investors themselves. My right hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Corporate Affairs' letter of 27 November to all members, a copy of which has been placed in the Library, gives the latest information available on the matters about which most interest has been expressed.

Finishing Mills

91. Mr. Sillars: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent discussions he has had with British Steel about finishing mill capacity and location; and if his discussions included the effect of Government guarantees to plant in Scotland.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has had no such discussions.

Machine Tools

92. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of investment in machine tools over the last three years has been on imported equipment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Recent United Kingdom investment in the import of machine tools has been estimated as:

Year	United Kingdom demand £ million	Imports
		£ million	Percentage
1986	1,011	500	49·5
1987	875	425	48·6
1988	1,155	557	48·2

No information is available about the re-export of imported machine tools. The above figures take no account of re-exports. I do not propose to make a statement.

Companies

104. Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many companies were registered at Companies house for each of the last five years.

Mr. Redwood: Ninety-eight thousand companies were incorporated in Great Britain in 1984. The number of registrations rose to 105,000 in 1985, 117,000 in 1986, 128,000 in 1987 and 129,000 in 1988. Further details can be found in the publication "Companies in 1988-89", a copy of which is in the Library.

North East Shipbuilders

111. Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are his latest intentions concerning the future of North-East Shipbuilders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: British Shipbuilders are currently in discussion with a number of parties interested in purchasing the assets of North East Shipbuilders Ltd. I hope these discussions will prove fruitful.

Bookmakers (Shareholders)

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to monitor the shareholders of major bookmakers in Satellite Information Services.

Mr. Forth: For the purposes of the Telecommunications Act 1984, the licence for the provision of satellite telecommunication services granted to Satellite Information Services Ltd. on 16 October 1989 requires it to notify the Secretary of State when shares representing more than 20 per cent. of the voting rights in the company are acquired by any person, and subsequently should further acquisitions bring this holding to more than 30 per cent. and more than 50 per cent. No such justification has been received.

The company is also required to provide information under the Companies Act 1985 in the usual manner.

Fata Babour

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what grants for research, development and investment in equipment were made to Fata Babour or related companies from 1984 to date.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My Department has not been able to trace any record of this company, nor of any related companies.

Fibre-optics (Trial)

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to evaluate the results of his decision to grant a special licence to British Telecom to convey integrated voice telephony and entertainment television over a trial optical fibre network at Bishops Stortford, announced on 14 November; and what plans he has to transfer the technology to other parts of the economy.

Mr. Forth: It is primarily for British Telecom and the companies involved in the trial to evaluate the results. Similarly, the transfer of technology is a matter for the companies themselves.

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether the decision to grant a special licence to British Telecom to convey integrated voice telephony and entertainment television over a trial optical fibre network at Bishops Stortford, announced on 14 November, will involve any public expenditure.

Mr. Forth: No public expenditure will be involved.

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether the decision to grant a special licence to British Telecom to convey integrated voice telephony and entertain television over a trial optical fibre network at Bishop Stortford, announced on 14 November, reflects any change of policy on the creation of a national broadband network based on fibreoptic cable since the publication of the White Paper, "Information Technology," Cm 646.

Mr. Forth: No. The trial is consistent with the policy announced in the White Paper on information technology.

Private Hospitals

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are the terms of reference of the proposed Monopolies and Mergers Commission inquiry into private hospitals and private health insurance; if he will place the text of the Director General of Fair Trading's recommendations to him in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: I have arranged for a copy of the reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission of the acquisition by British United Provident Association Limited of HCA United Kingdom Limited to be placed in the Library. It is not our practice to publish the Director-General of Fair Trading's advice to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State. In this case my right hon. Friend's decision to refer the acquisition to the Commission was in accordance with the Director-General's advice.

Relocation

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list all office relocations of his Department's staff since May 1979, stating in each case the location of origin and the location of transfer, together with the numbers of staff transferred.

Mr. Forth: Since 1979 we have relocated the following activities:

National Weights and Measures Laboratory

50 post moved in 1987 from Chapter street London SW1 to the National Physical Laboratory site at Teddington.

Personnel

30 post in the Pay Unit were transferred to Cardiff in 1986.

Laboratory of the Government Chemist

336 post moved in 1988 from Waterloo to the National Physical Laboratory site at Teddington.

DTI South-East

One hundred and fourteen posts in the regional office serving London and the South East have been transferred from Victoria to Cambridge, Reading, Reigate and other parts of the region. Ninety posts were transferred in 1988 and a further 24 in 1989.

Insolvency Service

One hundred and thirty four headquarter and other London based posts transferred in 1988-89 to Birmingham and a further 34 posts are planned for relocation to Birmingham and Edinburgh.

Patent Office

The relocation of 850 posts to south Wales began in 1988 and will finally be completed in 1991 when the new premises being built to house the office are ready for occupation.

We have recently announced that the Import Licensing Branch with 53 posts would be transferred to Billingham during 1990.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what relocations of his Department's staff, or agencies relating thereto, are currently being considered; and what are the numbers of staff affected.

Mr. Forth: The location of functions currently based in London and the south-east is being considered in a rolling programme of reviews covering altogether the work of approximately 4,000 staff. Reviews currently in hand affect about half this total.

The location review programme aims to identify those activities which could be relocated without significant loss of operational effectiveness and which would offer a positive cost benefit.

South Korea (Imports)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list in the Official Report the total value of imports into the United Kingdom from South Korea, the main categories represented by these imports and the total deficit in United Kingdom trade with South Korea, for each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 4 December 1989]: Total values of United Kingdom imports from the Republic of Korea and of the United Kingdom's trade deficit with the Republic of Korea, from 1986 to 1989 and for the first nine months of 1989, are set out in the table. The main categories represented by these imports are articles of apparel and clothing accessories (20 per cent. of 1988 total); office machinery and automatic data processing equipment (13 per cent.); telecommunications, sound recording and reproducing equipment (13 per cent.); and electrical machinery, apparatus and appliances (12 per cent.).

Mortgages

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will consider introducing legislation to render it compulsory for all financial advisors to disclose to prospective clients, whether as part of quotations or otherwise, the total sum received as commission for arrangement of mortgages linked to policies of endowment assurance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 5 December 1989]: An endowment policy, whether offered in conjunction with a mortgage or not, is a form of investment, and under the Financial Services Act 1986 it is the responsibility of the Securities and Investments Board and recognised self-regulating organisations and professional bodies to make rules on the disclosure of commissions on investments.

Regulations made under the Consumer Credit Act 1974 require credit brokers who charge a fee to prospective borrowers for arranging mortgages to show the amount in advertisements and quotations; it must also be included in the calculation of the charge for credit. There are no plans under the Consumer Credit Act to require the disclosure to prospective borrowers of commission received by credit brokers or lenders.

Footwear

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking through the European Community to prevent the French Government from enforcing their own footwear labelling regulations.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 30 November 1989]: The British Footwear Manufacturers Federation has raised with the DTI its concern about French Government decree 89-292 which introduces new labelling requirements for footwear. My officials are considering with the federation what action should be taken by the United Kingdom.

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will make a statement on his policy regarding the European Community Commission's report on imports of footwear from Taiwan and Korea.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 5 December 1989]: We will need to be satisfied what restrictions if any are justified. The matter is at present under discussion in Brussels and I will wish to consider the views expressed by the industry and other member states before making a final decision.

Written Answers to Questions

EMPLOYMENT

Earnings

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will publish in the Official Report a table providing similar information for male and female self-employed workers, as that contained in his answer of 15 November, Official Report, column 279.

Mr. Nicholls: Comparable information for the self-employed is not available.

Public Appointments

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many persons above the age of (a) 60, (b) 65 and (c) 70 years he has appointed to public bodies in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Eggar: My right hon. Friend is responsible for some 6,000 appointments to a range of executive, advisory, tribunals and other public bodies. The information requested is not readily available and could not be assembled without disproportionate cost. Public bodies sponsored by this Department are listed in the Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies 1988" available in the House of Commons Library.

DEFENCE

Compensation

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what sums have been paid in compensation in each of the last three years to the families of soldiers killed in Northern Ireland; and how many cases were involved.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Claims for compensation from families of soldiers killed in Northern Ireland as a result of criminal acts, including terrorist activity, are considered by the criminal injuries compensation division of the Northern Ireland Office. My Department has made one payment of £15,000 to the family of a soldier killed in the Province, not as a result of a criminal act but on the basis of legal liability at common law.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what sums have been paid in compensation in each of the last three years to farmers whose livestock or livelihood have been affected by low-flying aircraft; and how many cases were involved.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I regret that the information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost and effort.

Officers (Sexual Offences)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many officers of the armed forces have been dismissed from the services for sexual offences in each year since 1979.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information requested is readily available only for the years 1984 to 1988.

During that period two officers were convicted by court martial and dismissed from the services for sexual offences, the first in 1985 and the second in 1988.

Officers (Drugs)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many officers of the armed forces have been dismissed from the services for using drugs or drug-related offences in each year since 1979.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information is readily available only for the years 1984 to 1988.

During that period one officer was dismissed, in 1986, following a court martial for drug-related offences.

Combat Body Armour

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will ensure that combat body armour is introduced into general service in 1990; and when he expects to place contracts with manufacturers to supply it.

Mr. Alan Clark: It remains our intention to begin to introduce combat body armour into service in 1990. We expect to invite manufacturers to tender in early 1990.

Home Ownership

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the level of home ownership today among (a) married and (b) all personnel in (i) the Royal Navy, (ii) the Army and (iii) the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Neubert: We estimate that for married personnel the proportion of home owners is:

	per cent.
Royal Navy	75
Army	26
Royal Air Force	49

For all personnel the proportions are:

	per cent.
Royal Navy	48
Army	16
Royal Air Force	34

NATIONAL FINANCE

Charities

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about what the value added tax and corporation tax liability for charitable organisations receiving contributions from consumers using certain specified credit cards will be; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: None. Customs and Excise and the Inland Revenue have identified a value added tax and corporation tax liability in a number of affinity credit card schemes which they have examined. The two Revenue departments are considering each scheme on its own merits.

Interest and Exchange Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the short-term and long-term interest rates in each available month of 1989 in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) West Germany, (c) the United States of America and (d) Japan.

Mr. Ryder: Short-term and long-term interest rates in each completed month of 1989 are given below. The short-term rates given are three-month money market rates and the long-term rates are for 10 year Government bonds.

Long and short-term nominal interest rates

	United Kingdom		West Germany		United States		Japan

Market Research

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many market research and sample surveys were carried out by or for his Department in the last 12 months; what was the cost of each; what was the total cost; how many were carried out in-house; how many were carried out for his Department by outside organisations; and what percentage of the total expenditure was paid to outside organisations.

Mr. Ryder: No market research or sample surveys have been undertaken for or by Her Majesty's Treasury.

Public Appointments

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many persons above the age of (a) 60, (b) 65 and (c) 70 years he has appointed to public bodies in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Ryder: The information sought could be obtained only at disproportionate costs.

Civil List

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total amount payable under the Civil Lists Acts to the royal family for each year since 1979 and for the present year.

Mr. Major: Following is the information:

Year	Payments for the Civil List under the Civil List Acts 1937, 1952, 1972 and 1975 £	Repaid by Her Majesty The Queen £
1979	2,996,600	218,200
1980	3,791,350	263,800
1981	4,249,273	285,073
1982	4,616,683	304,700
1983	4,833,900	318,300
1984	5,017,000	331,000
1985	5,180,100	341,900
1986	5,400,600	355,600
1987	5,661,200	371,700
1988	5,922,300	386,600
1989	6,195,300	400,100

German Democratic Republic

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 28 November, if he will identify what figures are available to him for the gross national product per head of population for the German Democratic Republic and those aspects in which they are not fully comparable.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 4 December 1989]: Figures describing the economy of the German Democratic Republic are available from the United Nations in "National Accounts: Main Aggregates and Detailed Tables, 1986". Data are also given in the "World Bank Atlas, 1987". Both publications are available in the Library of the House. As for many of the centrally planned economies, this information on economic activity is prepared in accordance with the United Nations system of material product balances (MPS), which differs from the United Nations system of national accounts (SNA) used to describe market economies.

Nationalised Industries

Mr. Hood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will name each of the chairmen of the nationalised industries; and if he will give details of salaries and other remunerations applicable to each.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 6 December 1989]: The information requested is set out in the table:

Chairman	Nationalised Industry	[1]Salary £

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Teachers (Cheshire)

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has concerning the number of teaching vacancies in Cheshire at present and in each of the previous five years.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Numbers of full-time teacher vacancies in Cheshire are given in the table. Information on primary vacancies was not collected prior to 1988.

Full time teacher vacancies in maintained primary and secondary schools in Cheshire: January 1984-January 1989

	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988	1989

Secondary vacancies:
—number	40	13	19	31	31	13
—as a percentage of full-time secondary teachers in post	0·9	0·3	0·4	0·7	0·7	0·3

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has concerning the number of teachers who have left posts in Cheshire during the last 12-month period for which figures are available; and what was the comparable figure in each of the previous five years.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The year to 31 March 1987 is the most recent for which figures are available. Detailed comparison with data from previous years is not possible prior to 1986. The figures are given in the table including more limited data for earlier years.

Numbers of teachers in Cheshire leaving full-time service in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools (MNPS): March 1982—March 1987

	Year ending 31 March
	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986	per cent	1987	per cent

—to full-time service in MNPS elsewhere in England and Wales	—	—	—	—	95	(1·2)	100	(1·3)
—to full-time service in other parts of the maintained sector in Cheshire and elsewhere	—	—	—	—	20	(0·3)	30	(0·4)
—no longer in full-time service in the maintained sector in England and Wales	586	511	626	556	500	(6·4)	450	(5·8)

Note: The figures in brackets for 1986 and 1987 express the numbers leaving as a percentage of all those in full-time service in maintained nursery, primary and secondary schools in Cheshire at the beginning of the year.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received concerning morale in the teaching profession in Cheshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. Friend has received a number of letters recently from teachers in Cheshire about morale in the profession. He recognises the demands on teachers, and has on many occasions paid tribute to their hard work and professionalism.

Head Teachers (Yorkshire)

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what response he has made to the letter from head teachers at schools in Pontefract, Castleford and Knottingley.

Mrs. Rumbold: All letters to this Department will continue to receive appropriate replies which I hope the recipients find helpful.

National Curriculum (Technology)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he intends to publish for consultation the draft order with attainment targets and programmes of study for technology in the national curriculum.

Mr. MacGregor: I have today published for consultation the draft order with an associated document setting out the attainment targets and programmes of study for technology in the national curriculum for pupils aged 5 to 16, as I am required to do by section 20(5) of the Education Reform Act 1988. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales is consulting on the draft order under the provisions of section 21(3) of the Act. Copies have been placed in the Library.

The draft order has been prepared in the light of advice from the National Curriculum Council, following its consultations on our proposals published last June. I have accepted the council's recommendations for attainment targets and programmes of study as a basis for further consultation. The consultation period ends on 19 January 1990. I intend to make the final order in March 1990, in good time for implementation from the following autumn term.

The development of practical capability is a major objective of the national curriculum. The proposals in this draft order provide a focus for a wide range of practical activity in schools. Our aim is to secure a significant improvement in the design and technological capability of young people which will be of benefit to them as individuals and to the economic future of the country.

Research Councils

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what proportion of the research grants of each of the research councils was spent on equipment by recipients in each of the last five years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson [holding answer 30 November 1989]: Details of capital expenditure as a percentage of total research grant expenditure for each of the research councils, for the last five years for which outturn figures are available, are as follows:

	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89
AFRC	10·3	14·8	11·1	8·9	17·7
MRC	13·8	10·8	9·3	10·4	10·2
NERC	7·7	12·5	11·0	9·1	8·7
SERC	26·3	32·8	31·2	28·9	27·2
ESRC	1·0	1·4	0·9	1·2	3·3

Separate figures for equipment are not available.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Sentencing

84. Mr. Gerald Howarth: To ask the Attorney-General how many cases of alleged over-lenient sentencing have been referred to the Attorney-General under the provisions of the Criminal Justice Act 1988; and how many sentences have been revised upwards in consequence.

The Attorney-General: Sixty-one cases of alleged unduly lenient sentencing have been referred to me. I have applied for leave to refer the sentencing in nine cases to the Court of Appeal. Leave has been granted in five such cases and sentences have been increased in four of the cases. I have withdrawn two cases in the light of later information and the remaining two cases await consideration by the court.

Jurors

85. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Attorney-General what plans he has to review the procedures concerning the payment of compensation to jurors for loss of earnings.

The Attorney-General: There are no plans to review the procedures concerning the payment of compensation to jurors for loss of earnings.

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the names and numbers of magistrates courts in England and Wales stating (a) how many justices are at each court, (b) how many are women, (c) how many are black and (d) how many are Asian.

The Attorney-General: The question could be answered only at disproportionate cost.

Law Officers (Court Appearances)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General in how many court cases he, his hon. and learned Friend the Solicitor-General, or any Law Officer have appeared as Law Officers from 1970 to 1989 inclusive.

The Attorney-General: The information sought by the hon. Member is not readily available and could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost. The Attorney-General and the Solicitor-General have each appeared in five court cases since assuming their present offices in June 1987.

County Courts

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General what is the annual cost to the Exchequer of all the county courts.

The Attorney-General: The cost for the financial year 1988-89 was £134·3 million. This cost includes judicial salaries and fees, central overheads and superannuation costs.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General how many cases were dealt with in the county court of all subject headings for the years 1980 to 1989 inclusive.

The Attorney-General: Figures on the number of cases dealt with in different categories within the county courts for the years 1980 to 1988 are to be found in the Lord Chancellor's Department's annual publication "Judicial Statistics". Figures for 1989 are not yet available.

High Court Judges

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General if he will list the numbers of High Court judges currently serving on the bench; and how many fall into the age groups (a) 40 to 45 years, (b) 46 to 50 years, (c) 51 to 55 years, (d) 56 to 60 years, (e) 61 to 65 years, (f) 66 to 70 years, (g) 71 to 75 years and (h) over 75 years.

The Attorney-General: There are currently 81 serving High Court judges. Their ages are as follows:

	Number
40 to 45 years	None
46 to 50 years	2
51 to 55 years	27
56 to 60 years	23
61 to 65 years	14
66 to 70 years	9
71 to 75 years	6
Over 75 years	None

Legal Aid

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General how much public money has been expended under the green form scheme (a) by area and (b) under subject headings; and how many people have been assisted for each year since its inception.

The Attorney-General: Since the start of the green form scheme in 1972 the legal aid annual reports have included these statistics. The reports are laid before Parliament each year and are available in the Library.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General how much public money has been expended by the legal aid fund for each year since its inception; and how many persons have benefited from the assistance of the legal aid fund for each year for (a) criminal legal aid and (b) civil legal aid.

The Attorney-General: All information available since the start of the scheme in 1949 is contained either in the legal aid annual report or in the judicial statistics of the Lord Chancellor's Department which are laid before Parliament and are available in the Library. Any other information can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Members of Parliament

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General how many serving Crown court recorders or circuit judges are hon. and learned Members.

The Attorney-General: Seven hon. and learned Members hold appointment as Crown court recorders. Of that seven, two are Government Ministers, and do not sit judicially. No circuit judge is an hon. and learned Member.

Courts and Legal Services Bill

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General (1) what is his estimate of the cost implications of the new Courts and Legal Services Bill, as outlined in the Gracious Speech;

(2) if he has costed the implications of his new Bill on legal services, as announced in the Gracious Speech.

The Attorney-General: The costs of all provisions in the Courts and Legal Services Bill, introduced yesterday, are estimated at £5·1 million in the first full year. Some £2·1 million of this relates to the provisions on legal services.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General when he intends to publish the Courts and Legal Services Bill.

The Attorney-General: It has been published today.

Solicitors and Barristers

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General what sums have been paid out in legal aid fees to (a) solicitors and (b) barristers in England and Wales in terms of (i) fees and (ii) disbursements for each year since 1969.

The Attorney-General: All information available about civil legal aid and legal aid in the magistrates courts is contained in the legal aid annual reports. Total expenditure on solicitors' and counsel's fees and disbursements for criminal legal aid in the higher courts in each year since 1985 is as follows:

	1985 £	1986 £	1987 £	1988 £
Solicitors	33,722,547·76	36,360,110·42	42,601,012·57	47,591,306·36
Barristers	34,316,242·71	38,931,994·65	49,225,506·01	52,494,458·56
Total	68,038,790·47	75,292,105·07	91,826,518·58	100,085,764·92

No separate information on disbursements for criminal legal aid in higher courts is held at national level. Any other information can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Duty Solicitors Scheme

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General if it remains the Government's intention to commit the resources required to secure full implementation of the duty solicitors scheme.

The Attorney-General: The Government will continue to provide the resources required.

Advice and Assistance Schemes

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General what comparative research he has commissioned to consider the way in which other countries operate emergency advice and assistance schemes.

The Attorney-General: No such research has been commissioned into the provision of emergency advice and assistance overseas.

Legal Advice (Police Stations)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Attorney-General what steps he is taking in the light of the report on the duty solicitors scheme to ensure full implementation of the rights to access to legal advice at police stations.

The Attorney-General: The research report on the advice and assistance at police stations scheme has been made available to the Legal Aid Board which is reviewing the arrangements for providing duty solicitor advice. It expects to issue a consultation paper early next year.

The report has also been made available to the Home Office which is reviewing the codes of practice under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984.

NORTHERN IRELAND

House Purchase (Carrickfergus)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action is being taken by Her Majesty's Government to assist tenants of houses in Unity street, Carrickfergus, to purchase these properties from the Charles Legg Trust.

Mr. Cope: The solicitor acting on behalf of some of the tenants of houses belonging to the Charles Legg Trust in Unity Street, Carrickfergus, has brought this matter to the attention of the Department of Finance and Personnel. There are apparently no effective trustees at present. The Department is therefore making inquiries with a view to the appointment of the new trustees, who will be in a position to deal with the tenants' application for the purchase of the properties in question.

Student Loans

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last met representatives of the National Union of Students and the Union of Students in Northern Ireland to discuss top-up loans for students; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney: No such meetings have taken place. However, I discussed top-up loans at a recent meeting with representatives of the university of Ulster which included members of the university's students union.

Social Fund

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the financial amount allocated to each social security office in South Down in the financial year 1 April 1988 to 31 March 1989 and from 1 April 1989 to 31 October in respect of the social fund by central Government; how much of this amount was actually spent in each office; and whether the Government will carry out a review of the social fund system in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Allocations are made for a full year. Information on the amounts allocated for 1988-89 and 1989-90 and on monthly expenditure is available in the Library. The Government continue to monitor the operation of the social fund, but there are no plans for a review of the scheme.

Police

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people claiming Irish nationality are currently employed as (a) full-time members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary and (b) members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary reserve.

Mr. Cope: The Chief Constable of the RUC had advised me that the information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total number of people whose applications for employment for the post of traffic warden were refused by the Northern Ireland police authority on the grounds that they did not hold British nationality since 1980.

Mr. Cope: The Police Authority for Northern Ireland has advised me that the total number is not known as records are not maintained in the form requested. However, the hon. Member will be aware that one recent application has been refused on nationality grounds.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total number of people who were refused employment as full-time members of the Royal Ulster Constabulary on the grounds that they did not hold British nationality since 1980.

Mr. Cope: This information is not available. People, including those who are not British citizens, are eligible for appointment to the Royal Ulster Constabulary or any other United Kingdom police force providing that they are able to fulfil the criteria set out in my answer to the right hon. Member for Strangford (Mr. Taylor) in the Official Report on 16 November 1989, at column 401.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people who have been in receipt of attendance allowance at either (a) the higher rate or (b) the lower rate have had their attendance allowance reduced in each year since 1983.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The number of people receiving either the higher or lower rate of attendance allowance who were not awarded any further allowance at the renewal stage of their claims was as follows:

	Higher rate	Lower rate	Total
1983	127	467	594
1984	128	524	652
1985	132	515	647

	Higher rate	Lower rate	Total
1986	171	412	583
1987	82	227	309
1988	77	231	308
[1]1989	41	141	182

[1] To date.

Information is not available about the number of people whose award at the renewal stage was reduced from the higher to the lower rate of attendance allowance.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many occasions the present general practitioner of an applicant for attendance allowance was present when their medical assessment for eligibility for the allowance was carried out in the last year.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: All applicants for attendance allowance are medically examined, but information is not recorded about whether or not their personal general practitioners are present at the examination. Neither the applicants nor their personal general practitioners are present when the reports of the medical examinations are considered by the attendance allowance board or its delegated medical officers.

Rivers and Lakes

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give details of each river in (a) Newry and Mourne district council area, (b) Armagh district council area and (c) Fermanagh district council area which is maintained by the Department of Agriculture drainage division, as a designated watercourse.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I will write to the hon. Member.

Civil Service

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give details of the procedures for appealing against decisions of the Department of the Environment's promotion selection boards.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Northern Ireland Civil Service pay and conditions of service code contains no provision for an appeal against the decision of a departmental promotion board.

A candidate who is dissatisfied by the results of a promotion board may refer the matter to the PCA, EOC or FEA where the grounds for dissatisfaction are maladministration, equal opportunities or fair employment.

Prison Officers

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether arrangements are being made to pay prison officers in the Northern Ireland prison service arrears of lodging allowance in the light of the negotiated settlement of a civil claim taken against his Department.

Mr. Cope: The civil claim in question related to the question of entitlement of lodging allowances under the Civil Service regulations for periods of detached duty, where prison officers were provided with official accommodation. The regulations provide for an abatement of certain detached duty allowances in these circumstances and until 1972 they provided for payment at half-rate in the case of lodging allowance. It has now been settled that from July 1972 the abatement to half-rate lodging allowance was not in accordance with the Civil Service code. Accordingly, following negotiations between the Prison Department and the POA(NI), agreement has been reached and arrangements are being made for paying arrears of the allowance due to those prison officers who had an entitlement covering the period July 1972 to March 1982.

Vibration White Finger

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the number of applications made by applicants claiming to suffer from vibration white finger, under regulation 13 of the Social Security (Industrial injuries and Diseases) Miscellaneous Provisions Regulations 1986, at local offices of his Department in (a) Belfast and (b) towns throughout Northern Ireland in each of the past two years and in the current year up to the most recent date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 6 December 1989]: We are aware of no such applications in Northern Ireland to date.

ENVIRONMENT

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what finance is being planned by his Department for the next five years to assist householders in energy efficiency and saving.

Mr. Chope: Under the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 we are introducing a new system of renovation grants which will enable local authorities to assist householders to carry out a range of measures to improve the energy efficiency of their properties. There will be no limit on the proportion of their housing resources that councils will be able to devote to these purposes.

Right to Buy

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council houses have been sold to former council tenants under the right-to-buy legislation; what percentage of the total council stock they represent; how many council houses were built by the local authority over the same period; and how many people are on council housing waiting lists for each local housing authority in the country.

Mr. Chope: A table showing each local authority's total sales under the right-to-buy legislation including the percentage of April 1979 stock sold was laid in the Library on 5 December 1989.

Reported annual housing completion figures for 1980 to 1987 appear in "Housebuilding in England by Local Authority Areas: 1980 to 1987". Figures for 1988 and the first quarter of 1989 are given in tables 1*(b)* and 1*(a)*, respectively, of issue 90 of "Local Housing Statistics". Copies of both publications are in the Library.

The numbers of households on waiting lists was reported by local authorities in their annual housing investment programme returns (HIP1) and appears in column B51 of "HIP1 All Items Print (1989)". A copy of this document is in the Library.

House Prices

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the ratio of house prices to median, quartile and decile incomes of full-time adult male manual and non-manual workers in April 1979, April 1988 and April 1989; what was the effect on prices of the increase in the incomes of highly paid non-manual workers; and what action he will take to ensure that houses are no less affordable to the median manual worker than in 1979.

Mr. Chope: The available information is as follows:

Ratio of average house prices to annual earnings[1]: Great Britain

April	Lowest decile	Lower quartile	Median	Upper quartile	Highest decile
Manual men
1979	5·9	4·9	4·0	3·3	2·7
1988	7·5	6·0	4·7	3·8	3·0
1989	7·9	6·3	5·0	3·9	3·1
Non-manual men
1979	5·4	4·4	3·4	2·7	2·1
1988	6·2	4·6	3·4	2·6	1·9
1989	6·5	4·8	3·5	2·7	2·0

House prices are determined between individual buyers and sellers. No Government have sought to dictate the price at which houses must be sold. We have no plan to do so.

Water Distribution, London

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the level of London's water table.

Mr. Howard: I have asked the National Rivers Authority to undertake the monitoring and predictive modelling of the water level (under London) and to publish the results; to examine the potential for increasing water abstractions from the aquifer below London; and to examine the feasibility and costs of a permanent dewatering scheme. They are proceeding with this work.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to ensure that local authority tenants do not subsidise housing benefit payments as a result of increases due to relaxed entitlement criteria not being met in full by central Government funding.

Mr. Chope: I assume the hon. Member is referring to the arrangements whereby rent officers determine, for housing benefit subsidy purposes, whether rents are at a reasonable market level. Where a rent is above this level, and the claimant is in a vulnerable group, the local authority is required to consider whether it is reasonable to expect him to move, before restricting housing benefit. If the local authority decides that benefit cannot be restricted, 50 per cent. subsidy is paid on that part of the rent which is above the rent officer's assessment. These arrangements apply only to deregulated private sector rents, not to council rents. Any costs not met by subsidy must be debited to an account other than the housing revenue account, and in consequence none of these costs will be a charge to the authority's own tenants.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will estimate (a) the number of extra staff and (b) the extra expenditure arising from the changes to the community charge announced in October.

Mr. Chope: An estimate of the administrative costs of the community charge transitional relief scheme will be made in the light of a study being undertaken for the Department by Peat Marwick McLintock and discussions with the local authority associations.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many English shire counties are anticipated, in his published calculations, to levy a higher community charge than Avon.

Mr. Chope: Counties will not levy community charges. If all English authorities spend the amount needed to provide a standard level of service, the community charge could be the same throughout England. Any spending above this standard level will increase the community charge.

The provisional figures placed in the Library on 6 November suggest that the community charge for standard spending in 1990-91 will be about £278. The assumed spending by Avon county council would add a further £18 to the community charge in each Avon district. On the same basis, six other counties would add a larger sum to the community charge for standard spending than Avon.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much he plans to spend promoting community charge benefits and transitional relief; and if he will reimburse local authorities for any expenditure they incur in dealing with correspondence and contacts arising from Government advertising.

Mr. Chris Patten: The cost of the advertising campaign is commercial in confidence and will remain so until such time as the agency has completed negotiations with the media for advertising space.

The Department has commissioned a study by Peat Marwick McLintock into the administrative costs of the community charge transitional relief scheme. Decisions about the arrangements for meeting these costs will be made in light of the consultants' report and discussions with the local authority associations. I have made clear that authorities' reasonable costs will be reimbursed fully.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library (a) his Department's briefing to those advertising agencies invited to tender for the work on his proposed advertising campaign to encourage take-up of community charge benefits and transititional relief, (b) the creative brief prepared by Ogilvie and Mather and (c) the media strategy and the media plan for the campaign showing in particular the timing and positioning of press and television advertisements and indicating the social and income groups of the target audiences.

Mr. Chris Patten: Agencies were invited to tender for a campaign intended to ensure that those eligible are aware of entitlement to community charge benefit and transitional relief. The campaign will be targeted primarily at the relevant socio-economic groups with an element aimed at those who advise or care for people who may be eligible. The campaign will make use of television, radio and the press. Appropriate bookings in the media are being made.

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what correspondence his Department has had with (a) the Independent Broadcasting Authority, (b) the Independent Television Authority and (c) the Advertising Standards Authority about his proposed community charge benefit and transitional relief advertising campaign; and if he will place copies of the correspondence in the Library.

Mr. Chris Patten: My Department has sought clearance from the Independent Television Authority and the Independent Broadcasting Authority for the proposed television advertisements, as all potential advertisers are required to do. There is no similar requirement in respect of the Advertising Standards Authority.

Palace of Westminster

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will arrange an immediate inspection of floor coverings in the Palace of Westminster and arrange for the replacement of those which would be unsafe within the terms of the health and safety legislation.

Mr. Chope: The parliamentary works office already carries out regular inspections of the floor coverings in the Palace of Westminster. It also undertakes an annual replacement programme, as well as dealing with particular problems as they arise. If there is any particular area which the Member thinks presents a hazard perhaps she would let me know.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will ensure that all electric light bulbs in the Palace of Westminster are in working order and replaced when they are not.

Mr. Chope: It is already the practice to ensure that electric light bulbs in the Palace of Westminster are in working order, but if the Member happens to know of any which are not perhaps she would let me know.

Public Appointments

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many persons above the age of (a) 60, (b) 65 and (c) 70 years he has appointed to public bodies in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Christopher Patten: This information is not held centrally in my Department, and the information required could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Oakland Developments Ltd (Report)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received a copy of the report "Racial Discrimination in Property Development," on Oakland Developments Ltd., Leicestershire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: My Department received a copy of the report when it was published. We support the work of the Commission for Racial Equality and have provided powers through legislation under which they can produce a code of practice on housing.

British Rail Subsidy

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had on the environmental implications of a reduction in the public subsidy to British Rail; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Decisions on the level of subsidy for British Rail are for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport whom I congratulate on his commitment to the highest investment levels in British Rail for a quarter of a century.

Carnwath Report

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received following publication of the Carnwath report.

Mr. Moynihan: Ninety-six, from organisations and individuals who responded to my Department's invitation to submit comments.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Government propose to introduce legislation to implement the proposals in the Carnwath report.

Mr. Moynihan: As soon as parliamentary time permits.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which recommendations of the Carnwath report the Government are prepared to accept.

Mr. Moynihan: The Government generally welcome the report's recommendations as a means of strengthening the present enforcement provisions in the Town and Country Planning Act 1971, subject to further detailed examination of the practical implications of some of the recommendations.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the expenditure by his Department in the last financial year on (a) heritage, (b) archaeology and (c) royal parks.

Mr. Trippier: In 1988-89 expenditure on heritage, including archaeology, the royal palaces, grant-in-aid to non-departmental public bodies such as English Heritage, and other heritage activities, was £122·2 million. This figure also includes the costs of departmental staff concerned with these areas of heritage. Government money for archaeology is channelled through English Heritage which, out of a total grant of £66·1 million in 1988-89, spent £7·1 million on this aspect of its work. Expenditure on royal parks was £14·1 million.

Groundwork Foundation

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much funding his Department has granted the Groundwork Foundation in each of the last three years; in which areas the Groundwork Foundation intends to establish environmental trusts next year, funded by his Department or local authorities; and what contact there has been between his officials, representatives of the Groundwork Foundation and elected members or officials of Bradford council about Bradford council making a grant available for 1990-91.

Mr. Trippier: The Department took over the core funding of the Groundwork Foundation and trusts from the Countryside Commission on 1 April 1988, through the commission continues to pay project grants to individual Trusts. We allocated £1,500,000 to Groundwork for core-funding in 1988-89 and £1,743,000 in 1989-90.

The foundation plans to establish five trusts in 1990-91, in Bolsover, Blackburn, Nottingham, Bradford and Islwyn. The core costs of these trusts will be funded by the Department, local authorities and the private sector.

I understand that an officer of the Groundwork Foundation has met the leader of Bradford city council, Councillor Eric Pickles, and council officials to discuss the council's request to the foundation to establish a trust in their area.

Local Authority Dwellings

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many local authority dwellings that were vacant on 1 April, for six months or less, were (a) available for letting, (b) to be let after minor repairs, (c) to be let after major works and were undergoing such works, (d) to be let after major works and were awaiting such works, (e) awaiting sale, (f) awaiting demolition and (g) empty for other reasons, and if he will give this information for (i) inner London, (ii) outer London, (iii) metropolitan areas outside London, (iv) the south-east outside London, (v) all non-metropolitan areas, and (vi) England as a whole;

(2) how many local authority dwellings that were vacant on 1 April, over six months and up to a year, were (1) available for letting, (2) to be let after minor repairs, (3) to be let after major works and were undergoing such works, (4) to be let after major works and were awaiting such works, (5) awaiting sale, (6) awaiting demolition and (7) empty for other reasons; and if he will give this information for (a) inner London, (b) outer London, (c) metropolitan areas outside London, (d) the south-east outside London, (e) all non-metropolitan areas, and (f) England as a whole;

(3) how many local authority dwellings that were vacant on 1 April, for over two years, were (1) available for letting, (2) to be let after minor repairs, (3) to be let after major works and were undergoing such works, (4) to be let after major works and were awaiting such works, (5) awaiting sale, (6) awaiting demolition and (7) empty for other reasons; and if he will give this information for (a) inner London, (b) outer London, (c) metropolitan areas outside London, (d) the south-east outside London, (e) all non-metropolitan areas, and (f) England as a whole;

(4) how many local authority dwellings that were vacant on 1 April, for over a year and under two years, were (1) available for letting, (2) to be let after minor repairs, (3) to be let after major works and were undergoing such works, (4) to be let after major works and were awaiting such works, (5) awaiting sale, (6) awaiting demolition and (7) empty for other reasons; and if he will give this information for (a) inner London, (b) outer London, (c) metropolitan areas outside London, (d) the south-east outside London, (e) all non-metropolitan areas, and (f) England as a whole;

(5) what was the number of local authority dwellings on 1 April, in (a) inner London, (b) outer London, (c) metropolitan areas outside London, (d) the south-east outside London, (e) all non-metropolitan areas, and (f) England as a whole.

Mr. Chope: The following are preliminary estimates derived from local authorities' annual housing investment programme returns (HIP1) for April 1989:

Local authority dwellings[1] at 1 April 1989

Enterprise Zones

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will give the amount of rates that has been forgone in each of the enterprise zones in England and Wales, year by year;

(2) what is the amount of rates that has been forgone by virtue of the Isle of Dogs enterprise zone.

Mr. Moynihan: The information requested to the latest date available is shown in the table.

[1] Subject to audit.
[2] Designation to March.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is the total amount of capital allowances claimed in each of the enterprise zones in England and Wales, year by year;

(2) what is the total amount of capital allowances claimed so far in the Isle of Dogs enterprise zone.

Mr. Moynihan: Because of the extent of estimation involved the information requested is not available for individual enterprise zones.

"On the Record"

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to obtain for his departmental library a copy of the video and transcript of the BBC1 television programme "On The Record," broadcast on 26 November.

Mr. Trippier: My Department already has copies of the transcript. It is unnecessary to have a copy of the video.

Green Dowry

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much of the green dowry announced by the Minister for Water and Planning has been allocated to North West Water.

Mr. Chris Patten: It is expected that North West Water Group plc will receive £329·7 million in cash.

Mersey Basin

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for the financial years 1987-88 and 1988-89 any grant award made from the European regional development fund for sewers and sewerage works in the Mersey basin, showing also their value and application.

Mr. Chris Patten: North West Water Authority received £26·7 million in ERDF grants in 1987-88 and £8·9 million in 1988-89. Much of this was to finance schemes in the Mersey basin.

Customer Services Committees

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the name and organisation represented by each member of each customer services committee.

Mr. Chris Patten: No. Appointments to the customer service committees for the water industry are a matter for the Director General of Water Services. I understand that the director general is currently considering nominations received from a large number of interest groups and individuals and that he hopes to announce the membership of the committees in the near future.

Surface Water

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research is being done or has been commissioned by his Department in respect of surface water quality.

Mr. Chris Patten: We have let the following research contracts since 1 November 1988 concerning surface water quality:

Estimation of contaminant loads in rivers;
Strategic river eco-system studies;
Aerial inputs to the Severn Estuary;
Effects of the Kielder reservoir on the River North Tyne;
Health effects of sea bathing;
Analysis of technazene and its breakdown products;
Effect of sediment metals on estuarine benthic organisms;
Biological effects of contaminants workshop;
Fish farm chemicals in sea locks;
Diffuse pollution from land-use practices; and Sediment water contaminant exchange.

Three Graces (Statue)

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will take enforcement action in respect of the statue of the Three Graces previously at Woburn abbey.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon Friend has considered the question of the Three Graces very carefully following a request from the Office of Arts and Libraries for a view as to whether the statue was included in the listing of Woburn abbey.

On the basis of the information before my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, and in the light of legal advice, it appears that the Three Graces should be considered as part of the listed buildings, as both the Temple—which is listed—in which the statue was originally situated, and the plinth on which the statue stood, had been specifically designed to house this statue for the purpose of permanent display. However, there is some evidence to show that the statue had previously been moved from its original position at least once, quite apart from being moved for the purposes of exhibition.

My right hon. Friend notes that the local planning authority has decided against taking listed building enforcement action. He has therefore considered whether he should use his own discretion to take such action. On the evidence at present before him, he has decided not to do so.

He is not satisfied that it is in general an appropriate use of listed building legislation to control what would widely be thought to be chattels. Nor is he satisfied in the present case that it would be appropriate to require the return of the statue to a sculpture gallery, of which the Temple is a part, which has effectively changed the character.

My right hon. Friend considers that the whole issue of controls over movable fixtures in listed buildings needs examination. He proposes to consult about what guidance should be given on this issue and whether there is a case for amending legislation. In this connection he welcomes the fact that the chairman of English Heritage has convened a meeting of expert and interested bodies to discuss the matter in the new year.

Air Pollution

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment at how many sites air pollution levels are monitored.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 24 November 1989]: Air pollution levels are monitored on behalf of the Department of the Environment, at 390 sites as follows:

Pollutant	Sites
Ozone:	17
Carbon monoxide:	6
Nitrogen oxides:	12
Acid deposition:	32
Atmospheric hydrocarbons:	2
Trace gases:	1
Atmospheric chemistry:	2
Smoke/sulphur dioxide
Directive sites:	287
Sulphur dioxide:	7
Lead:	19
Multi-element sites, including lead:	5
Total	390

There are also monitoring sites under the aegis of other bodies.

Pollution

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many industrial pollution incidents of rivers have been prosecuted in each of the last five years; and which companies have been involved;

(2) what percentage of reported industrial pollution incidents of rivers have not led to prosecution in each of the last five years;

(3) what percentage of reported pollution incidents have not resulted in prosecutions in each of the last five years.

Mr. Howard: Information on the number of reported water pollution incidents and the prosecutions brought by former water authorities up to 1987, has been published in the annual "Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics", copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Information on the number of incidents attributable to industrial causes, and the number of resulting prosecutions is available only for 1986 and 1987.

Information on the companies that have been prosecuted is not held by the Department.

Enforcement of water pollution controls—including the compilation of relevant data—is now the responsibility of the National Rivers Authority.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many non-compliant sewage works there were in each of the water authority areas during 1988;

(2) what percentage of the total number of sewage works in England were non-compliant during each of the past five years;

(3) what progress has been made in reducing the number of non-compliant sewage works.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 4 December 1989]: Information on non-compliant sewage treatment works was first collected by the Government for 1986. Numbers of sewage treatment works operated by each water authority with numerical discharge consent conditions, together with the numbers tested by each authority and found non-compliant in 1986, 1987 and 1988, are listed. The results show a steady reduction in the proportion of non-compliant works from 23 per cent. in 1986 to 17 per cent. in 1988.

Further improvements will result from the major capital programme to bring substandard sewage treatment works into compliance with their discharge consents.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to increase the penalties for industrial pollution of the rivers.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 4 December 1989]: The maximum penalties which may be imposed by magistrates for offences under section 107 of the Water Act 1989 are fines not exceeding £2,000 and terms of imprisonment of up to three months. However, on indictment in the Crown court there is no limit on the fine that may be imposed and terms of imprisonment can be up to two years. Penalties for pollution offences are kept under review although there are no immediate plans for increasing them.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to reform the system of deemed consents for discharges into rivers.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 4 December 1989]: The arrangement for granting deemed consents was a transitional provision introduced under earlier legislation and, most recently, under part II of the Control of Pollution Act 1974, relating to those categories of discharges, chiefly into coastal and estuarial waters, which were brought under control for the first time. This arrangement applied only to applications received by 14 October 1987, on which basis deemed consents were granted with the expectation that they would be reviewed and substantively determined by October 1992. It now falls to the NRA to complete this process.

There are no plans to reintroduce the procedure.

Water Privatisation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether the accountancy firm which reported on the water privatisation prospectus has at any time since January 1979 been (a) criticised by the Department of Trade and Industry inspectors in any of the reports and (b) criticised by the disciplinary committee of the accountancy profession as lacking in professional conduct efficiency or competence; and whether either of these two points are mentioned in the prospectus.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 30 November 1989]: One of the firms which reported on the water privatisation prospectus had been previously criticised in inspectors' reports published since 1979 and subsequently by the accountancy profession's joint disciplinary scheme. I understand that the cases related to audits conducted in the period 1972-75; the partners involved were not members of any of the reporting engagement teams for water privatisation. The Government and their advisers are satisfied that this is not material as far as the prospectus is concerned.

Caravan Sites

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list those local authorities which have responded to the application to designate permanent caravan sites in Bradford; and if he will summarise each response which has been submitted;

(2) whether he has received an application from Bradford council to designate permanent traveller sites in Bradford; if he will give details of the grounds on which the application is based; if he will place copies of the applications, including responses by local authorities to the application, in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 6 December 1989]: An application under section 12 of the Caravan Sites Act 1968 for the designation of Bradford district was received from the City of Bradford metropolitan council by my Department on 27 November 1989.

The application is made on the grounds that in all the circumstances it is not necessary or expedient to make any further provision for the accommodation of gipsies residing in or resorting to the area of Bradford metropolitan district.

A list of the local authorities, and others, consulted by Bradford council about the application and the substance of their responses is as follows:

Consultee	Response
Metropolitan borough of Calderdale	No observations.
Leeds city council	No objection.
City of Wakefield metropolitan district council	No objection.
Lancashire county council	No objection subject to assurances that Bradford will not seek to transfer gypsy families from Bradford to Pendle.
Craven district council	Support application.
Borough of Pendle district council	No objection.
North Yorkshire county council	Object because it would increase gypsy problems particularly in Harrogate and Craven districts.
Kirklees metropolitan council	No response.
Bradford chamber of commerce	Support application because of nuisance of unauthorised encampments on unsuitable sites and the shortage of land available for industrial/commercial development.
Bradford Travellers' Action Support Campaign	Objects because of councils policy of evicting gypsies off unauthorised sites the poor quality of existing sites and the perceived lack of legal grounds for granting designation as a matter of expediency.
National Gypsy Council	Response awaited.

I will arrange for a copy of the City of Bradford metropolitan council's designation application to be placed in the Library of the House shortly.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Passes

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will give a breakdown by company of the numbers and categories of security passes giving access to the Palace of Westminster and its associated buildings which are currently allocated to the media.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee is currently examining the number of Palace of Westminster photo-identity passes held by the media organisations accredited to the House.

In the course of its inquiry, the Sub-Committee has asked for the same information as that requested by the hon. Member. It is currently being collated, and I will ensure that the hon. Member receives a copy as soon as it is available.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will give a breakdown of the numbers and categories of security passes giving access to the Palace of Westminster and its associated buildings which are currently allocated to individuals who are not in receipt of a regular monthly payment from the Fees Office; and if he will indicate the reasons for the allocation of these passes.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Without a detailed check of each photo-identity pass holder's name against the Fees Office salary list, which could be done only at disproportionate cost, it is not possible to provide a definitive answer to the hon. Member's question. However, it would be safe to assume that all or the vast majority of the following pass holders are not in receipt of a regular monthly payment from the Fees Office:

Category	Detail	Quantity
10	Members and Officers; Residents' families	511
11	Official Commonwealth and Overseas visitors	3
16	CPA and IPU Staffs	46
17 and 17A	Government Departmental Staff	1,443
18	Government Messengers	234
19 and 19A	PSA's staff	403

Category	Detail	Quantity
20 and 20A	Security Force (incl. RBLA)	473
21 and 21A	Post Office Staff	42
22 and 22A	British Telecom Staff	79
23 and 23A	Parliamentary Counsel and Agents	120
24 and 24A	Tannoy/Official Shorthand Writer/ Westminster Audio and Thomas Cook	71
25 and 25A	Central Office/PLP/Liberal Democrats SDP and SNP staffs	107
26	PSA's Contractors	543
27	Other Contractors and St. Stephens Secretarial Staff	136
28A	Lobby Correspondents	228
28B	Reporters	130
28C	Broadcasting Journalists	52
28D	Overseas Media Representatives	19
28E	Media Messengers and Engineers	183
28G and H	Television Experiment Staff	28
30	Specially Authorised Holders	56
31	Television Personnel (Norman Shaw Studios only)	29
31A	Gymnasium Members (Norman Shaw Buildings only)	126
32	Whips' Office Staff	49
33 and 33A	HMSO and COI Staff	155
E	MEPs	33

In addition to the above, those categories of pass issued to peers, peeresses and their staffs, staff of the House of Lords, and House of Lords sponsored media passes are, of course, not paid from the Fees Office—a total of 1,427 passes.

Finally, I should mention that some staff of Members, who hold category 9 photo-identity passes, may not be in receipt of a regular monthly payment from the Fees Office.

Food Hygiene Inspections

Ms. Walley: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will arrange for food hygiene inspections by a qualified environmental health officer of all kitchens and food preparation and refreshment areas serving food to hon. Members, staff and the general public in the House equivalent to the quality and regularity of standards applying to all other workplaces.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that she received on 10 November. Environmental health officers are invited to carry out food hygiene inspections of all areas for which the Refreshment Department is responsible either as part of a regular programme, or when a need is perceived. The next such inspection has been arranged to begin on 7 December. The regularity at which these inspections are carried out and the standards applied to them are understood to be more frequent and rigorous than applied by the authorities to commercial catering establishments.

Food Handling Training

Ms. Walley: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will reconsider his decision not to provide food handling training to all catering staff in the Palace of Westminster.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: No such decision has been taken. A total of six training courses on food hygiene involving some 260 staff have taken place over the past two years. Another is planned for early 1990 as part of a continuing programme.

Boxes and Rubbish

Ms. Walley: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will take immediate action to prevent the daily stacking in the Palace of Westminster of carton boxes and rubbish bags which block the corridors, provide a fire hazard and prevent access for people in wheelchairs.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Recognised procedures designed to keep the corridors free of waste and obstacles already exist. These arrangements are, however, under review.

Petitions

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will state how many petitions were presented in Session 1988-89 and what was the number of occasions when the responsible Department of State declined to make any observations.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Two hundred and twenty seven petitions were presented in Session 1988-89. The responsible Department declined to raise observations on 188 of these.

Palace of Westminster Telephone Bill

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Lord President of the Council what was the telephone bill for the Palace of Westminster for each year from 1979 to the present date.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: Telephone call charges for the Palace of Westminster for the financial years 1979 to 1989 were as follows:

Financial year ending April	£
1979	306,300
1980	255,650
1981	368,400
1982	492,500
1983	470,302
1984	437,249
1985	499,497
1986	488,435
1987	481,989
1988	474,101
1989	559,397

The above charges are distributed proportionately between the House of Lords, the House of Commons and the Lord Chancellor's Department.

Party Chairmen

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Lord President of the Council whether he will introduce legislation to provide that the chairmen of parties represented in the Commons would need to be elected either by party members or by members of an elected executive.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: No. Each party is best left to decide its own arrangements.

PRIME MINISTER

Lancashire

Q13. Dame Elaine Kellett-Bowman: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to visit Lancashire.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

EEC and EFTA

Q27. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister what consideration she has given to the proposals made by President Mitterrand on Tuesday 5 December, on the future of the EEC and EFTA; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to him of 5 December. We naturally support the closest possible co-operation between the EC and EFTA.

Eastern Europe

Q55. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Prime Minister what recent representations she has received about measures to stimulate agricultural supplies in eastern Europe.

The Prime Minister: I have received representations from a number of people, including Lady Ryder of Warsaw, about agricultural supplies in Poland. We take their concerns seriously. We are active, both nationally and with our EC partners, to improve food supplies there. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs announced in the House on 29 November a £15 million agricultural project for Poland. In addition the EC has so far supplied some £70 million of food aid to Poland, the proceeds of which will be used to finance improvements in Poland's agricultural industry. The Community has also announced an aid budget for Poland and Hungary in 1990 of £210 million which will be used inter alia to finance agricultural restructuring.

Hungary

Q75. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans for a meeting with the Prime Minister of Hungary.

The Prime Minister: I shall be meeting the Hungarian Prime Minister on 13 December during his forthcoming visit to the United Kingdom. I look forward to discussing with him the latest developments in Hungary's progress towards democracy and a number of trade and other issues.

Water Act

Q99. Mr. Knapman: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the implementation of the Water Act.

The Prime Minister: I am pleased to say that implementation of this Act is well advanced, and is the key to even higher standards of drinking water quality, and cleaner rivers and bathing waters.

West Yorkshire

Q108. Mr. Waller: To ask the Prime Minister if she will visit west Yorkshire.

The Prime Minister: I have no such plans at present.

United Nations

Q126. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to pay an official visit to the United Nations.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

European Government

Q154. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the latest proposals of the President of the European Commission to create a European Government.

The Prime Minister: I understand that M. Delors was speculating on a personal basis about institutional arrangements if the Community were significantly expanded. These are not formal proposals.

Engagements

Mr. David Martin: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 7 December.

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 7 December.

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 7 December.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 7 December.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 7 December.

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 7 December.

Mr. Moate: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 7 December.

Mr. Ashton: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 7 December.

Mr. Haynes: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 7 December.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 7 December.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 7 December.

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 7 December.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 7 December.

Mr. Sillars: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 7 December.

Mr. Jessel: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 7 December.

Dr. Reid: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 7 December.

Mr. Raffan: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 7 December.

Ms. Abbott: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 7 December.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 7 December.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 7 December.

Ms. Mahon: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 7 December.

Mr. Favell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 7 December.

Mr. Eastham: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 7 December.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 7 December.

Mr. French: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 7 December.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 7 December.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 7 December.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 7 December.

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 7 December.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. I shall depart for Strasbourg later today to attend the European Council

Public Appointments

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Prime Minister how many persons above the age of (a) 60, (b) 65 and (c) 70 years she has appointed to public bodies in each of the last 10 years.

The Prime Minister: We do not classify appointments in this way.

Cambodia

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Prime Minister how many letters and telephone calls she has received on the subject of Cambodia in the last month; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have received approximately 6,900 letters on Cambodia-related matters in the past month.

Factory Closures

Mr. Parry: To ask the Prime Minister if she will meet the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside to discuss the implications of the proposed closure of the BAT factory, Liverpool, following her promise in the House to meet any hon. Member in whose constituency a factory closure is about to occur, Official Report, 12 February 1981, column 981.

The Prime Minister: I will of course always make every effort to meet hon. Members in whose constituencies a main factory closure occurs. Delegations, however, should go to the Minister concerned.

Downing Street (Telephones)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister how many direct telephone lines are in existence at No. 10 Downing street, London, connecting that address to the Head of Government of any other country; and which countries are so connnected.

The Prime Minister: None.

Berlin Wall

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to visit the Berlin wall.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so, but my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs visited Berlin on 16 November. I greatly welcome the freer movement which has eased the division of that city.

Official Duties

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister what provision she has made for her official duties to be carried out in the event of (a) her absence abroad or (b) her incapacity through illness.

The Prime Minister: During my absences abroad I continue to exercise my official responsibilities. The provision to be made in the event of illness would depend upon the circumstances.

El Salvador

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Prime Minister if she herself has made any representations to the United States authorities about the recent murder of six priests and others in El Salvador by death squads alleged to be connected with the El Salvadorian Government; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) on 30 November by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs at column 416 from which he will see that the Salvadorean authorities are aware of our views.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Family Incomes

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the value of total child care assistance, combining tax reliefs and benefits payments, for a man on average earnings with a wife and two children aged five and 11 years in each EEC country in £ sterling equivalents; and what are each of these totals as a percentage of the average earnings in that country.

Mr. Scott: Benefit rates for family benefits in each EC member state, converted into sterling using purchasing power parities to give a more accurate reflection of domestic purchasing power, are contained in the Department's "Tables of Social Benefit Systems in the European Communities" which is available in the Library.

Tax allowances for children in each EC member state are set out in the table.

It is not possible to calculate the combined effect of cash benefits and tax allowances for a family on average earnings since there are no available statistics on average annual earnings.

For a full picture one would also need to take account of the impact of social security contributions, which in most EC countries are much higher than in the United Kingdom, but again this is impossible for the family type in question without annual earnings data.

Tax allowances for children

Belgium

Child allowance deducted as percentage of tax amount due. For two children 20 per cent. is deducted.

Denmark

No tax deductions are given, but taxpayers with minor children are entitled to various tax-free child subsidies.

France

Income divided by co-efficient applicable to family circumstances, (eg three for married persons with two children). Tax tables then applied, and resulting tax is multiplied by same co-efficient to give tax due.

Federal Republic of Germany

Deduction of £623 per annum per child.

Greece

Allowance for first two children £623 each.

Ireland

Allowance of £472 given in respect of an invalid child under 16 years of age.

Italy

Each spouse may deduct from his or her tax amount £20 for each qualifying child (ie minor child, disabled child or child under 26 years of age who is studying or learning a trade).

Luxembourg

Where taxable income does not exceed £14,423, and if there are four or fewer children, relief is given by dividing income by appropriate co-efficient (eg 3·4 for two children), applying tax table and then multiplying tax due by the same co-efficient. In other cases, deductions for children are made from income tax due, according to family size and income.

Netherlands

Allowance of £203 for parents of one of more children under the age of 12. If both parents "work outside the household" they may each claim this amount.

Portugal

Deduction of £329 for each child up to 11 years of age, £461 for each child over 11 and up to 24 years of age.

Spain

Deduction of £161 from income tax amount for each qualifying child (unmarried, under 25 and supported by taxpayer).

These figures were valid on 1 January 1989 and national currency has been converted into sterling using purchasing power parities.

Tenants (Local Authority Reimbursement)

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much growth is to be allowed in the reimbursement to local authorities for (a) housing benefit in respect of local authority tenants and (b) rent allowances to private tenants for 1989-90 to 1991-92.

Mr. Scott: On the basis that subsidy for 1989-90 = 100, estimates of growth for the following two years are in the table.

	1989-90	1990-91	1991-92
(a) housing benefit	100	107·5	117·6
(b) rent allowances	100	110·1	116·2

Information incorporating the new housing revenue account subsidy will be available in the new year.

Rent Allowances

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the estimated increases in rent allowances for (a) private landlords and (b) housing associations over the next planning period.

Mr. Scott: Estimates for the next planning period will be published early in the new year in "The Government's Expenditure plans 1990-91 to 1992-93."

Public Appointments

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many persons above the age of (a) 60, (b) 65 and (c) 70 years he has appointed to public bodies in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Scott: As the Department is responsible for 14 public bodies with the present number of appointments totalling over 2,000 I regret that this information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Unclaimed Benefit

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is his estimate of the underpayment from the Consolidated Fund as a result of failure of potential beneficiaries to claim benefits to which they would have been entitled in each of the last five years.

Mr. Scott: The most recent available figures show that 90 per cent. of income-related benefit is taken up by those eligible. Available information is for 1983 and 1985 and is as follows:

	1983 unclaimed (£ million)	1985 unclaimed (£ million)
Supplementary Benefit	570	550
Housing Benefit
Certificated HB[1]	[2]180	150
Standard HB[3]	[2]310	360
Family Income Supplement	55	[5]90
Totals	1,115	1,150

Source: Technical Notes.

Notes:

[1] Includes the unclaimed entitlements of Households not receiving HB plus the excess of certificated amount over standard receipt for those eligible to certificated HB but receiving a lesser amount of standard HB. All figures exclude families where the head or spouse is in full-time self employment.

[2] Figures refer to 1984 for HB.

[3] All figures exclude households receiving or eligible for certificated HB.

[4] 1983-84; based on pooled FES data for reasons of sample size. Figures exclude families where head or spouse is in full-time self employment.

[5] 1985-86; based on pooled FES data for reasons of sample size. Figures exclude families where head or spouse is in full-time self employment.

[6] Detailed analysis on both caseloads and expenditure take-up are contained in the Technical Notes, copies of which are in the Library.

Benefit Fraud

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will investigate the use of multiple identities by claimants; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Special investigation teams were set up in all this Department's regional offices earlier this year to combat fraudulent claims involving the use of multiple identities.

Social Fund

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish the proportion of social fund expenditure, on a month-by-month basis, which local offices are recommended to spend for each month in the current financial year and for the financial year 1990-91.

Mr. Scott: The national profile of anticipated expenditure for 1989-90 is set out in the table. It was devised from an analysis of previous levels of national expenditure, as a guide to assist managers of local offices in planning expenditure of their annual budgets. It is not intended to represent a recommended pattern of monthly expenditure, and managers are free to produce their own profiles to take account of local factors in the area.

A profile for 1990-91 has not yet been devised.

Family Credit

Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many families with children with taxable incomes below the tax threshold are in receipt of family credit.

Mr. Scott: On the latest available information there are about 85,000 cases where income tax was not being deducted from the earnings of the main earner at the time of the claim for family credit.

Attendance Allowance

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what was the total number of applications for attendance allowance received in Scotland in each year since 1980;

(2) what was the total number of applications for attendance allowance in Scotland which were refused in each year since 1980;

(3) what was the total number of applications in Scotland for attendance allowance granted at (i) the higher rate and (ii) the lower rate in each year since 1980.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 27 November 1989]: The information is in the table.

Attendance allowance: New claims received and decided in Scotland 1980 to 1989

Year	Number of claims received	Number of claims decided
		Higher rate	Lower rate	Rejections

CIVIL SERVICE

Health Checks

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what is Civil Service policy on ensuring regular health checks of all Civil Service personnel.

Mr. Luce: The health of successful applicants to the Civil Service is assessed on entry and some undergo medical examination. Civil servants in certain jobs are routinely examined at regular intervals because of statutory requirements or the nature of their employment.

Increasingly Departments are actively promoting positive health in their staff by information and education. Many have arranged routine smear tests for cervical cancer. Fifteen Departments have so far signed up as supporters of the "Look After Your Heart" campaign being run by the Health Education Authority. One component of this campaign is individual fitness testing and blood pressure screening.

The Civil Service Occupational Health Service is expanding its facilities to meet increased departmental demand for routine health checks, and can offer a range of services from comprehensive executive-type medical examinations to simple screening tests performed by a trained nurse.

Civil servants are also permitted to have time off work to attend their family practitioners who are being encouraged to offer regular preventive health checks to patients.

Secondment

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will give the numbers and names of (a) persons currently seconded to the Civil Service from private companies and (b) the companies from which they are seconded.

Mr. Luce: My Department's report on interchange in 1988 between the Civil Service and other organisations, a copy of which is in the Library, shows that there were 194 secondments (of three months or more) into the Civil Service from industrial or commercial organisations, and 311 outward secondments (of three months or more) to such organisations last year. The report lists the industrial or commercial organisations which were involved in the secondment. Data for 1989 will be included in the next report, which I hope will be available in the spring.

Secondments are arranged by agreement between the outside organisation and the Government Department concerned. It would not be appropriate to list the names of the employees of the outside organisations involved without their consent. This could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

THE ARTS

Public Appointments

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many persons above the age of (a) 60, (b) 65 and (c) 70 years he has appointed to public bodies in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Luce: The information is not kept in the form requested, and could be given only at a disproportionate cost.

Science Museum

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on the admission figures for the Science museum in the period October 1988 to October 1989.

Mr. Luce: I understand that in the year October 1988 to September 1989 attendance at the Science museum, South Kensington, and its two principal outstations, the National Railway museum, York, and the National Museum of Photography, Film and Television, Bradford, totalled 2,387,600.

Office of Arts and Libraries

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what was the expenditure by the Office of Arts and Libraries in the last financial year on (a) the arts, (b) museums, (c) libraries and (d) others.

Mr. Luce: The expenditure of the Office of Arts and Libraries in 1989-90 was as follows:

	£000
Arts and the Heritage	178,548
Museums and Galleries	154,066
Libraries	79,835
Office of Arts and Libraries Administration	1,438

Details may be found in Volume 7 of the appropriation accounts for 1988-89, published today (HC 15-VII).

Arts Council (NAO Report)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he has received the report of the National Audit Office into the Arts Council of Great Britain.

Mr. Luce: No.

Tate Gallery

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether it is his intention to assist the Tate gallery, financially, to acquire Johann Zoffany's portrait of Lord Willoughby de Broke and his family at breakfast.

Mr. Luce: The Tate gallery receives an annual grant from my Office specifically for purchases for the collection. The sum allocated to the gallery in the current year for such purposes is just over £1·8 million.

It is for the trustees of each institution, and not for Government, to decide how and when this grant is spent, and whether to apply to other sources of funds which may be available to them to help with this.

TRANSPORT

Motorways (Accidents)

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many road accidents have been reported involving stationary vehicles on motorway hard shoulders in each of the years 1980 to 1989; and how many people were (a) injured and (b) killed.

Mr. Atkins: The figures requested are in the following table; accident data for 1989 are currently unavailable.

Road accidents on motorways in which one or more vehicles were stationary on the hard shoulder, and casualties resulting from such accidents: by severity: Great Britain: 1980-88

	Accidents				Casualties

1988	22	31	56	109	31	46	160	237

Railways

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many miles of railways in (a) England and (b) Scotland have now been electrified.

Mr. Portillo: At 31 March 1989, BR had 2,443 route miles electrified in England and Wales, and 276 route miles electrified in Scotland.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the total proposed expenditure for the next three fiscal years on railways in (a) Greater London and (b) Scotland.

Mr. Portillo: Separate figures for railways investment in Greater London alone are not available. BR plans to invest some £65 million in its Scottish region infrastructure over the next three financial years, and the region will also benefit from wider programmes of investment in new rolling stock.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will make it his policy to encourage use of British Rail by increasing the public subsidy;

(2) if he will make it his policy to maintain the real value of the public subsidy to British Rail over the next five years;

(3) what assessment he has made of the environmental implications of a reduction in the public subsidy to British Rail; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Our policy on subsidies for British Rail remains as set out in the Government's response (HC420) to the Transport Select Committee report on the financing of rail services (HC 383). My right hon. Friend plans to announce shortly new three-year objectives for British Rail.

Vehicle Emissions

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he is taking to discourage emissions of carbon dioxide from tranport sources.

Mr. Atkins: Congested road traffic emits more carbon dioxide than traffic moving smoothly. Congestion will be eased by my Department's £4 billion programme of new construction and improvement of motorways and other trunk roads over the next three years. In urban areas we encourage the development of traffic management measures to keep traffic moving. And we are committed to massive investment in railways—£3·7 billion in British Rail and at least £1·7 billion in London Underground over the next three years. However, motorists themselves can make a significant contribution to reducing carbon dioxide emissions by keeping their vehicles well tuned and by avoiding driving practices which waste fuel.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his oral reply to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford of 4 December, Official Report, column 3, what mechanical means are to be introduced to limit emissions of carbon dioxide from cars; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: When new gaseous emission limits were agreed for small cars at last June's Environment Council the Commission undertook to examine the question of reducing carbon dioxide emissions. It is too early to say what they are likely to propose. Meanwhile, carbon dioxide emissions can be minimised by improving fuel consumption. We urge motorists to keep fuel economy in mind. Smooth careful driving and good regular vehicle maintenance are the key.

London Underground

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many complaints he has received concerning the operation of automatic ticket barriers at London Underground stations.

Mr. Portillo: Four in the last three months.

Marine Archaeology

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many civil servants in his Department work (a) full time and (b) part time on marine archaeology.

Mr. Atkins: The Department of Transport's only responsibility concerning marine archaeology is through its administration of the Protection of Wrecks Act 1973, on which five of the Department's civil servants work for a part of their time, amounting in total to about ½ man/year per annum.

Uranium Hexafluoride

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the quantity of uranium hexafluoride which has been imported through Newhaven for each of the last three years; whether East Sussex county council is notified in advance of shipments; if he expects the level of trade to increase; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: [holding answer 6 December 1989]: There are over half a million movements of radioactive material annually. The Department does not collect information on a routine basis on the ports or airports used for imports and exports of such material.

All movements of nuclear material are conducted in full compliance with the relevant regulations. In the particular case of uraniun hexafluoride through Newhaven there is no statutory requirement for East Sussex county council to be informed.

ENERGY

Public Appointments

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many persons above the age of (a) 60, (b) 65 and (c) 70 years he has appointed to public bodies in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Wakeham: The figures[1] [2] are as follows:

	Over 60	Over 65	Over 70
1980	2	—	—
1981	—	—	—
1982	3	—	—
1983	2	—	1
1984	—	—	—
1985	3	—	—
1986	3	—	—
1987	1	—	—
1988	—	—	—
1989	5	—	—

[1] In the case of the electricity supply industry data on appointments made prior to 1985 would be available only at disproportionate costs.

[2] The basis of the calculation is to take account of age at initial appointment only. The figures cover only those industries for which the Department has retained responsibility throughout the period.

Selby (Mineral Transportation)

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the various costings borne by British Coal North Yorkshire for the transportation of minerals from Selby coal field to the Drax power station.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the British Coal Corporation. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Combined Heat and Power Schemes

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the Government's current policy on combined heat and power schemes.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Government fully recognise the environmental and fuel efficiency benefits of CHP and continue to promote and support the technology under the best practice programme of the Energy Efficiency Office.

The Government are committed to removing legal and institutional barriers which impede the further implementation of CHP. Under the provisions of the Electricity Act licensed CHP operators will have new powers to break streets to lay heat mains. The Act also enables the Director General of Electricity Supply to collect information to monitor the use and application of CHP. The output fom CHP schemes based on non-fossil fuels such as waste or landfill gas will count towards the non-fossil fuel obligation.

Investment in CHP is a commercial matter for the operators concerned.

Coal Industry Nationalisation Act 1946

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will review the terms of the Coal Industry Nationalisation Act 1946.

Mr. Michael Spicer: We plan to change the basic legislative framework of the coal industry after the next general election.

French Nuclear Reactors

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what analysis his Department has made of the safety of French nuclear reactors.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The safety of nuclear reactors in France is the responsibility of the French operators. The Health and Safety Executive's nuclear installations inspectorate maintains regular contact with the French regulatory authority, the Service Central de Surete des Installations Nucleaires.

Selby (Colliery Spoil)

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what information he has received from British Coal about sites in the north Yorkshire area for the disposal of waste from the Selby coalfield; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what information he has received from British Coal concerning the threatened closure of the Selby coalfield because of land disposal problems; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The disposal of colliery spoil is a matter for British Coal, and I am asking the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

SCOTLAND

Water

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the leakage levels from the Scottish water distribution system.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The level of leakage was estimated in 1984 to be around 40 per cent. of the total water put into supply for Scotland as a whole, but there were substantial regional variations. It is not practicable to eliminate leakage entirely and depending on local circumstances there will be a level which is acceptable in economic terms.

Guidance on leakage is given in standing technical committee report No. 26, "Leakage Control Policy and Practice", published by the Department of the Environment and the National Water Council in 1980, but policies are determined locally by the water authorities. A report on public water resources by the Scottish Development Department in 1985 proposed that authorities should aim to reduce leakage by a quarter over a period of 10 years. Progress towards this aim depends on the priority authorities give to the task.

Motorways (Accidents)

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many road accidents have been reported involving stationary vehicles on motorway hard shoulders in each of the years 1980 to 1989; and how many people were (a) injured and (b) killed.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The number of accidents and casualties in Scotland involving stationary vehicles on motorway hard shoulders for the period 1980-1989 (up to July) are as follows:

	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988	[1] 1989
Number of Accidents	10	7	7	7	5	8	7	3	4	2
Number of Casualties	14	12	11	12	9	11	14	3	4	2
Number Killed	2	0	0	1	1	0	0	0	1	1

[1] Up to July.

Road and Rail Accidents

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the total economic costs in Scotland of (a) road accidents and (b) railway accidents for each calendar year since 1978.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information on the economic cost of road accidents in Scotland for years 1979 to 1988 is as follows. Information is not available for 1978 nor on the cost of railway accidents.

Estimated costs of injury and non-injury road accidents in Scotland 1979-1988.

Gaelic Language

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what delays have been experienced in meeting demands for Gaelic medium education in Scotland; what steps are being taken to deal with this; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: The inter-authority standing group on gaelic education has pointed to teacher supply problems as a source of occasional delay for education authorities wishing to meet local demand for Gaelic medium education. The Northern college of education offers a module in bilingual education as part of its primary teaching degree course and is able to accommodate the small number of students who wish to take it. I understand that other colleges of education are considering the introduction of similar modules. As the total number of teachers being trained increases substantially over the next few years, it is hoped that a greater number will opt to study bilingual education.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, what account he has taken of public feeling, as expressed in a recent referendum, when deciding his current and future policy on borehole drilling at Dounreay; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I set out the Government's position on radioactive waste disposal in my reply of 9 November to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) column 740. Public concern locally is certainly one of the factors which my right hon. and learned Friend will take into account when making his decision on the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority's appeal against Highland regional council's refusal to grant planning permission for test boring at Dounreay.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Textile and Footwear Industries

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many (a) textile clothing and (b) footwear firms he and his predecessor have visited over the last 10 years; and if he will name them and the dates of such visits.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: This information is not available. However Ministers in my Department are fully aware of the concerns of both industries, and in recent months there have been a number of meetings with their representatives.

Rover

Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much had been paid by British Aerospace for the purchase of Rover (a) on 1 January 1989, (b) on 1 June 1989 and (c) on the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No payment of the £150 million consideration for the Government shareholding in the Rover Group has yet been received. Payment is due by 31 March 1990 at the latest, following the clarification of certain tax matters.

New Companies and Liquidations

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the number of new companies established in (a) Yorkshire, (b) Humberside, (c) the Northern region and (d) the south-east region in 1981, 1987, 1988 and to date in 1989; and how many companies went into liquidation in each of these categories in each year.

Mr. Forth: On the basis of current registered office addresses, the information requested is as follows:

	Yorkshire		Humberside		North		South East
	Inclusion	Liquidation	Inclusion	Liquidation	Inclusion	Liquidation	Inclusion	Liquidation
1981	1,800	120	310	30	800	110	20,000	1,600
1987	4,200	180	820	50	2,500	170	71,200	2,200
1988	3,800	140	680	60	2,000	170	62,300	1,980
1989 (Q1)	770	60	120	[1]—	300	20	22,000	600

[1]— nil or negligible.

Regional analysis of voluntary liquidations not available.

More information about companies is available in "Companies in 1988-89" published by HMSO.

Futures and Options Market

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has regarding the total volume traded in the futures and options market for each of the last three years; and what proportion of this was in foreign currency earnings.

Mr. Forth: A total of 20·1 million contracts were traded on the six London exchanges in 1986, 33 million in 1987, 38 million in 1988, and 38·7 million in the first nine months of 1989 (51·6 million at annual rate). These volumes refer to contracts cleared by the London clearing house and are the most comprehensive measure of turnover. It is not known what proportion of that volume is transacted in foreign currency.

WALES

Valleys Initiative

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will identify those developments in the Rhymney valley which he considers to be directly and exclusively the result of his valleys initiative.

Mr. Peter Walker: The following projects and activities, which formed part of the key programmes and initiatives identified in "The Valleys: A Programme for the People", have benefited Rhymney valley in 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Welsh Development Agency (WDA) programmes

Rhymney valley projects have been supported to date under the new valleys small loan scheme and the valleys enterprise loan scheme.

The advance factory and workshop programme includes the following projects which are recently completed or nearing completion:

Two × 3,000 sq ft factories and two 5,000 sq ft factories at the Heads of the Valleys industrial estate.

One × 10,000 sq ft factory at the Penallta industrial estate.

The Following bespoke factories have been recently completed or are nearing completion at the Heads of the Valleys industrial estate:

A 16,500 sq ft extension to the Massilly UK Ltd. factory.

A 10,000 sq ft extension to the Britcair Ltd. factory.

A 75,000 sq ft new factory for Klockner Pentapack Ltd.

Further developments are proposed at the Heads of the Valleys industrial estate, Penallta and New Tredegar. Work will commence on the provision of 20,000 sq ft of workshops at the Bowen industrial estate in the spring of 1990.

The land reclamation programme includes six schemes totalling 58 acres currently underway at:

Windsor colliery 1 and 2
Bedwas colliery surfaces
Berth Gron quarry
Bedwas colliery tips
Groesfaen remedial works
St. Cenydd school

A further 15 schemes involving over 500 acres are planned for future years.

The agency is supporting environmental improvement schemes at:

Dafydd Williams park, Caerphilly
Nelson square
Llanbradach

A further eight schemes are planned throughout the Rhymney valley in the coming years.

The Welsh Development Agency's urban renewal unit are currently undertaking the following projects:

Environmental improvements to:

New Tredegar
Caerphilly town centre
Ystrad Mynach
Rhymney town centre

Environmental action plans are being prepared for New Tredegar, Rhymney-Pontlottyn and the Aber valley.

Welsh Office Support for Industry

During 1988-89, 49 projects in the Rhymney valley received offers of RDG II and 13 projects received offers of regional selective assistance or regional enterprise grant with associated investment costs of £19·4 million and the prospect of some 1,000 jobs.

During 1989-90, to the end of October, two projects have received offers of RDG II and 11 projects received offers of regional selective assistance or regional enterprise grant with associated investment costs of £7·3 million and the prospect of some 200 jobs.

Urban Programme

Welsh Office urban programme allocations made in 1988-89 and for 1989-90 include the following projects in the Rhymney valley:

Redevelopment of Bargoed bus station
Provision of small workshops, Dyffryn industrial estate
Provision of small workshops, Lawn industrial estate
Provision of grants and loans within commercial and industrial improvements areas
Valley youth enterprise centre, Tredomen workshops
Provision of workshop units at Bowen industrial estate
Provision of headquarters for Pontlottyn boys club
Improvements to Bargoed citizens advice bureau
Rhymney valley environmental clean-up campaign
Rhymney valley enterprise agency
Tyr-y-Berth IT centre
Rhymney valley handicapped transport association
Rhymney valley home start
Restoration of Llancaiach Fawr
Construction of community centre at Phillipstown, New Tredegar
Refurbishment of Ystrad Mynach boys club
Dial-a-ride Rhymney valley
Grants and loans in Rhymney and Pontlottyn commercial improvement areas.

Urban Development Grant

Welsh Office gave final approval of one project for UDG support in 1988-89:

Development of 23 houses at Cambrian street/Hill street, Rhymney. Since the scheme's introduction in April 1989 urban investment grant has been awarded for the conversion of the former Whitbread brewery in Rhymney into 32,000 sq ft of office space.

Welsh Office Support for Housing

In 1988-89 the Welsh Office approved special allocations for the following enveloping schemes:

Brithdir (185 houses)
Various block schemes throughout county (342 houses)

In 1989-90, support has been given for block schemes at Pontlottyn involving 109 houses, and at various other locations throughout the county involving 181 houses.

Welsh Office Support for Health and Social Services

Support has been given to the community nursing in the valleys scheme, with two staff operational in the Rhymney valley, with the assistance of 50 per cent. Welsh Office funding.

This is not a comprehensive list of activities. Further projects are being considered under the headings listed above. In addition the area stands to benefit from initiatives which have a wider geographical coverage and from other ongoing main programmes.

National Rivers Authority

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer of 24 November to the hon. Member for Caerphilly, Official Report, column 119, if he will make it his policy to send copies of the National Rivers Authority report to the hon. Members for Caerphilly, Merthyr Tydfil and Rhymney (Mr. Rowlands) and Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) when it is available.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: It is for the National Rivers Authority to determine to whom it circulates such reports.

Homelessness

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average number of persons registered as homeless by each of the district councils in Wales for the latest available date.

Mr. Grist: The number of cases and persons in households accepted as homeless by local authorities during the second quarter of 1989 (April to June) are shown in the following table:

Housing

Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the average number of persons registered on the housing waiting list by each of the district councils in Wales for the latest available date.

Mr. Grist: The information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the increase in real and cash terms in money given to Tai Cymru in the next financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: We are providing for an increase of over £27 million in the funds made available to Tai Cymru in the next financial year. This is a cash increase of almost 42 per cent. over the previous year and represents an increase in real terms of almost 35 per cent.

This significantly increased level of public sector investment increases the gross programme for Tai Cymru to over £102 million next financial year. This and the additional private finance levered in through the use of mixed funding arrangement will enable a record number of homes for people in housing need to be provided by the housing association movement in Wales.

Public Appointments

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many persons above the age of (a) 60, (b) 65 and (c) 70 years he has appointed to public bodies in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Peter Walker: It would be disproportionately costly to provide the information required. Wherever possible, however, it is my policy to appoint younger individuals to such bodies.

Bilingual Road Signs

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will take steps to require that all temporary roadwork signs must be comprehensively bilingual.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The Traffic Signs (Welsh and English Language Provisions) Regulations and General Directions 1985 (S.I. 1985 No. 713) prescribe the bilingual signs which may be used in Wales, including temporary roadwork signs. These regulations are to be reviewed along with the Traffic Signs Regulations and General Directions 1981 (S.I. 1981 No. 859).

Community Health Councils

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for the financing and composition of the community health councils in Wales.

Mr. Grist: Arrangements for the financing and composition of community health councils in Wales are among the issues to be considered in the light of the current consultation exercise on the future structure of community health councils in Wales. A consultation paper outlining my right hon. Friend's proposals to reduce the number of community health councils in Wales was issued at the end of November and comments have been requested by 28 February 1990. A copy of the consultation paper has been sent to all hon. Members in Wales.

Full-time Education (Staying-on Rates)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will make a statement on staying-on rates in full-time education in each of the counties of Wales;

(2) what was the staying-on rate in full-time education by education authority, as a percentage of the population aged 16 years in 1987-88 and 1983-84.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The information is shown in the table:

Percentage of 16-year-olds staying on in full-time education

Low Birth Weight

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the number of low birth weight babies born; and what it was as a proportion of all births for each Welsh health district for 1983-84 and the latest available year.

Mr. Grist: Information derived from all registered births to residents of health districts in Wales is shown in the table:

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his assessment of the real terms increase in cash and as a percentage in the Welsh Development Agency budget for 1990-91 as against 1989-90; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The information is shown in the following table:

	Gross provision		On-year increase
	1989-90 £m	1990-91 £m	cash £m	per cent.
Cash	130·4	150	19·6	15

Note:

[1] Derived using latest GDP deflator.

The WDA's gross budget for 1990-91 is 76 per cent. more than the 1987-88 budget, an increase of 46 per cent. in real terms.

Non-manual Workers

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the percentage of households whose head is a non-manual worker by education authority.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The latest available information comes from the 1986 Welsh inter-censal survey. The percentages classified to non-manual groups are shown in the following table:

Percentage of households headed by non-manual ¹ head, 1986

County	Per cent.
Clwyd	37·5

West Glamorgan	35·0

[1] Professional, managers, employers, intermediate and junior non manual. Includes farmers working on own account. Includes retired heads of household whose former occupation was non-manual.

Third Dee Crossing

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what moneys he intends to make available to the Clwyd city council for the building of the third Dee crossing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The capital resources to be made available to local authorities in 1990-91 were announced on 29 November. They include 50 per cent. transport grant towards the £803,000 Clwyd county council plan to spend on the third Dee crossing. The non-grant element will be covered by supplementary credit approvals.

Babies (Intensive Care)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the total number of intensive care baby cots available in Wales in 1983-84, or the nearest available year; and what is the number in each health authority and their locations within each health authority.

Mr. Grist: The available information, which relates to special care baby cots is shown in the table:

National Museum of Wales

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has on the admission figures for the National Museum of Wales in each of the past five years.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Reported attendance figures for all branches of the National Museum of Wales in each of the past five years to 1988 are shown in the following table.

Year	Attendances
1984	758,043
1985	765,249
1986	723,173

Teachers (First Aid Training)

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what proposals he has to ensure that every school has at least one teacher trained in first aid to statutory level;

(2) what proposals he has to increase the number of teachers trained in first aid both to statutory level and to a lower level.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Under common law, local authorities have a general responsibility to take reasonable care for the health and safety of pupils and students in their care. Their duties as an employer relating to first aid provision are defined in the Health and Safety at Work Act 1974 and regulations made thereunder.

By means of the guidance note "Arrangements for First Aid Provision in Schools and Colleges" prepared by the Department of Education and Science and the Welsh Office in consultation with interested bodies and issued, in September 1987, the Government encourage local education authorities to ensure that a proportion of the teaching staff of every school and college should have attended a course of training and have acquired a certificate in first aid, issued by an organisation approved by the Health and Safety Executive.

Food Poisoning

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the number of reported cases of food poisoning per 1,000 of the population for each district in Wales with the comparable figures for 1988.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 30 November 1989]: Available data on recent food poisoning notifications are shown in the following table:

HEALTH

Mentally Ill Patients

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the National Health Service and Community Care Bill and services for mentally ill patients.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Wyre Forest (Mr. Coombs) on 14 November at column 193, following which the Government's White Paper on community care entitled "Caring for People" was published. I also refer my hon. Friend to the letter my right hon. and learned Friend sent to all members on 20 October 1989 about the implementation of the National Health Service review and its implications for, among other client groups, mentally ill patients.

Medical Equipment (Advice)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is his Department's normal practice with regard to consultation with interested parties and the seeking of external advice before taking a decision to contribute to the funding of the purchase of special medical equipment;

(2) what is his Department's working definition of external advice used in the context of consultation with interested parties before taking a decision to provide funds for the purchase of special medical equipment.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There is no set procedures. Each case would be considered on its merits.

Kidney Stone Patients

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he plans to take steps to expand treatment for kidney stone patients in the west midlands region.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The provision of treatment services in the west midlands is a matter for the regional health authority.

Funding (North Western RHA)

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which organisations in the north-west have made representations to him [illegible] his proposed funding arrangements for the North Western regional health authority for the financial year 1990-91

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received a number of representations about the funding arrangements for the North Western regional health authority for 1990-91 and subsequent years from hon. Members and organisations in the north west including district health authorities and community health councils.

Nottingham DHA

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the effect of changes to the National Health Service during his tenure as Secretary of State in the Nottingham district health authority.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In common with the rest of the NHS, Nottingham health authority has continued to strive to provide the best possible service for its population. The district received an initial revenue allocation of £180·7 million for 1989-90 from Trent regional health authority which is a real terms increase of 2·9 per cent. over the previous year and one of the highest increases in the region. The authority is planning to expand its patient services, both in-patient and day cases, during the year. Recent developments include improved facilities at Nottingham city hospital for renal and radiotherapy services and for the elderly mentally infirm. The district has also been working hard to improve its mental illness services and following the development of a range of modern, community-based services was able to close Saxondale hospital, a large institution for the mentally ill, at the end of last year.

Tower Hamlets DHA

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will specify the hospitals and services which are included in the bid from within Tower Hamlets district health authority for self-governing status.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The sponsors of the expression of interest in NHS trust status submitted for the London Hospital Group propose to include the London hospitals at Whitechapel, Mile End, and St. Clements together with associated community services to provide the bulk of services currently provided by Tower Hamlets health authority.

Health Service Reform

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the additional administrative computing and allied costs associated with his proposed changes in the National Health Service, including opting out of hospitals, over the next three years; and what is his estimate of the increases which will be required in numbers of staff in each tier of the National Health Service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State announced that an additional £82 million is being made available this year, and an additional £257 million next year, to the NHS in England, for initiatives arising from the White Paper "Working for Patients". It is not possible at this stage to estimate the full cost of the changes, because the White Paper builds on developments that have been taking place over a number of years. These include resource management and improvements in management information, including computerisation. In addition, the total cost will depend on such factors as the number of NHS trusts and GP practice fund holders which are approved.

The changes will increase the efficiency of the service, and create opportunities for achieving better value for money so that extra costs will be outweighed by savings.

The estimate of the increase in staff needed for the changes includes up to 3,000 at hospital level and up to 400 in regions and family practitioner committees. In the longer term, as regional and district health authorities reduce their own functions, total staffing levels are expected to fall. The number of extra staff needed by the prescription pricing authority, up to 300, is expected to reduce significantly in two or three years.

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has had any representations about the use of National Health Service staff and resources to prepare hospitals and other medical units to become self-governing medical trusts prior to the passing of the relevant legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No.

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will detail in the Official Report any instructions or guidelines he has issued to health authorities, hospitals and any other relevant medical units about anticipating or taking account of possible changes, which may be made to the details of the National Health Service and Community Care Bill during its parliamentary progress; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is for Parliament to determine the final form of the National Health Service and Community Care Bill. It would not be sensible to issue instructions or guidance seeking to anticipate such changes (if any) as Parliament may approve. Health authorities are, of course, fully aware of the Government's proposals set out in "Working for Patients", Cm 555. It has frequently been pointed out to them that some of these plans will require primary legislation before they can be fully implemented.

Patient Records (Ownership)

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has obtained the views of the Committee on Safety of Medicines, the Medicines Commission or the Medicines Control Agency regarding the opinion offered by Mr. Mummery QC on the ownership of patient records regarding the effects of this advice on clinical research in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Yes.

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the implications of Mr. Mummery's opinion on the ownership of patient records for the conduct of fundamental clinical research, clinical trials and post-marketing surveillance studies which involve the collection and analysis of anonymised patient records.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This is still being considered.

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has received representations expressing contrary views to those of Mr. Mummery QC relating to the ownership of general practitioners' patient records held on computer; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Yes. The Government intend to consult interested parties on draft guidance to be issued in January 1990 regarding this and related subjects.

Prescriptions

Mr. Jim Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what would have been the cost to the Exchequer over the last 12-month period for which figures are available if all appliance prescriptions written by dispensing doctors in England and Wales had been dispensed (a) by pharmacy contractors and (b) by appliance contractors.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Ambulance Service

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the average cost of non-emergency ambulance journeys.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information in the form requested is not available centrally. However, the average costs per patient carried and per mile in England for 1986-87, the latest figures currently available, are £13·78 and £1·90 respectively.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will estimate the numbers of patients transported by the ambulance service in the most recent year for which figures are available in (a) emergency situations and (b) non-emergency situations.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The number of emergency and non-emergency patient journeys for 1987-88, by ambulance authority, is given in the table. One patient journey is defined as a single trip to, or return from, a place where a patient receives medical care or treatment.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received in favour of opening to competitive tender the management and organisation of the routine transport ambulance service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received no such representations. I refer my hon. Friend to the reply my hon. Friend gave to hon. Member for Warrington, North (Mr. Hoyle) on 30 November 1989, at column 411.

Public Appointments

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many persons above the age of (a) 60, (b) 65 and (c) 70 years he has appointed to public bodies in each of the last 10 years.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost, since the Department is responsible for 144 public bodies with the present number of appointments totalling almost 10,000.

NHS Reform

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the cash allocation system to regions and family practitioner committees outlined in his letter to hon. Members of 20 October will calculate and weight the number and needs of chronically sick patients.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Allocations for the hospital and community health services will continue to be based on the size, age and health of regions' populations. This will ensure that regional health authority budgets take account of the presence of chronically sick patients, by the use of a proxy measure of morbidity and higher cost-weightings for elderly people living in the region.

Allocations to RHAs in respect of the indicative prescribing budget scheme will not be cash-limited. GPs will, as now, be able to prescribe any clinically necessary medication for their patients.

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the contracts district health authorities will make with providers of patient services will reflect given levels and quality of service as outlined in his letter to hon. Members of 20 October.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The level and quality of services to be provided will be agreed between the district health authority and the provider and specified in the contract. The degree of precision used will increase over time as health authorities become more expert at assessing their population's requirements, as information about hospital activity improves and as better-quality measures are developed. My Department will assist this process by providing guidance and disseminating examples of good practice. However, even the simplest contracts will make much clearer than now what services are to be provided in return for a particular level of funding. Patients can only benefit as a result.

Community Care

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to undertake further research into the special needs of seriously mentally ill people before the implementation of the community care proposals.

Mr. Freeman: The proposals for services for people with a mental illness set out in "Caring for People" build on established good practice. They envisage that health and social services professional staff will assess the health and social care needs of individual patients and judge whether these can realistically be met in the community. We plan to commission research into the effectiveness of our care programme approach in due course.

Children Act

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the numbers of people who will require training in (a) the Health Service and (b) the voluntary sector as the Children Act is implemented and what resources he will supply to assist with such training.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: From information held centrally is is not possible to identify the numbers of health services staff whose duties will be affected by the Children Act. Information on staff of voluntary organisations is not held centrally.

As part of the Department's phased programme of awareness and specialist training for local authority and other agency staff, the Department launched on 1 December 1989 "An Introduction to the Children Act". The guide will be of use to all social services staff and other practitioners who will be concerned with implementation of the Children Act. Copies of the guide have been sent to local authorities, and the National Council for Voluntary Child Care Organisations for them to distribute to their members, regional health authorities, district health authorities, royal colleges and other relevant agencies. A dissemination and training strategy for implementation of the Children Act is being developed in consultation with the statutory and voluntary agencies.

National Care Homes Association

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met representatives from the National Care Homes Association; and if he will take steps to include unregistered homes in its inspection process.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My hon. Friend the Under-Secretary of State last met representatives from the National Care Homes Association at its annual conference on 19 October 1989.

Under part I of the Registered Homes Act 1984, local social services authorities are required to inspect private and voluntary residential care homes catering for four or more residents. There are no plans at present to extend this requirement to cover homes with fewer than four places. But, as our White Paper "Caring for People" makes clear, our intention is that the quality of all residential care provided and monitored for local authorities by the independent sector should be safeguarded by clearly defined contractual arrangements.

Crack

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much money has been spent by his Department on research on crack and its effects.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department will continue to keep abreast of research developments both here and abroad. Together with the Home Office, we are hoping to fund, at an estimated cost of £300,000, a three-year research project to study the prevalence and patterns of use of cocaine and crack.

Blood

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what quantities of voluntarily donated blood have been sold to private medical organisations; what quantities have been sold abroad; what are the amounts of profit accrued from these sales over the last 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Since 1 April 1984 charges have been made to the private sector to recover the costs to the NHS of collection, processing, handling and transport of blood. No charge is made for the blood itself, and no profit is made on any blood or blood components supplied. The last 12-month period for which complete records are currently held is the 12 months ending 31 December 1988. During that year 75,961 units of blood were issued to non-NHS hospitals. No NHS blood was sent abroad during 1988. Blood collected by the NHS would be sent outside the United Kingdom only on humanitarian grounds, in cases of emergency. In such cases, again, no charge would be made for the blood itself.

Ambulance Staff

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current pay differential between ambulance staff who are non-emergency workers and those classified as emergency workers.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Under current pay rates, which have been effective since 1 April 1988, the comparison between the basic rate for non-emergency basic ambulance man/woman grade and the emergency staff grades of qualified and leading ambulance man/woman is as follows:

	£ per annum
Ambulanceman/woman	7,340
Qualified ambulanceman/woman	10,093
Leading ambulanceman/woman	10,888

Staff in the London ambulance service receive an additional payment of £981 per annum.

Under the new rates offered by the management side on 5 December and effective from 1 April 1989 the comparison is as follows:

	Outside London £ per annum	London ambulance service £ per annum
Ambulanceman/woman	8,001	9,232
Qualified ambulanceman/woman	11,001	12,384
Leading ambulanceman/woman	11,868	13,305

In addition, emergency staff groups required to use paramedical skills gained from extended training to NHS training authority standard will receive an additional £500 per annum. The management side has also undertaken to agree with the trade union side, by 28 February 1990, a national framework for the recognition of staff specially trained, either locally to standards other than of the NHS training authority, or partially to those standards, with payments backdated to 1 April 1989.

Residential Nursing Care

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list those companies, voluntary and other organisations, other than health authorities and local authorities, which are involved in providing residential nursing care.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not collected centrally.

North Tynemouth District Health Authority

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many additional staff will be provided in the North Tynemouth district health authority to support the new consultant post in trauma and orthopaedics which he recently approved.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [holding answer 4 December 1989]: The level of staffing in district health authorities is a matter for the DHA concerned. I understand that additional staff are being provided to support the new consultant post. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of North Tyneside health authority for details.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Schengen Agreement

86. Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has considered the implications of the Schengen agreement and supplementary agreements; and if he will make a statement.

87. Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has considered the implications of the Schengen agreement and supplementary agreements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: The Schengen agreement is an arrangement between France and the Federal Republic of Germany, Belgium, Netherlands and Luxembourg to abolish land frontier controls between their countries. Their work is separate from the discussions on free movement of people which are taking place among all member states of the European Community.

We will naturally be interested in the experience of the Schengen Partners in reducing frontier controls.

Rajiv Ghandi

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has written to Mr. Rajiv Ghandi since the general election in India.

Mr. Sainsbury: No, but my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister sent a personal message to Mr. Ghandhi on his departure from office.

India

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on Britain's current relations with India.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have excellent relations with India. We look forward to continuing our close and friendly links with the new Indian Government.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he next plans to visit India.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs looks forward to visiting India, although he has no current plans to do so.

NATO (Institutional Links)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what institutional links exist between (a) the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation and the United Nations, (b) the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation and the North Atlantic Assembly and (c) the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation and the European Commission.

Mr. Maude: There are no institutional links between NATO and the United Nations or between NATO and the EC. NATO maintains a close working relationship with the North Atlantic Assembly.

Korea

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response he received from President Roh of Korea during his recent visit when he drew attention to the concern felt by many people in this country about the way in which dogs and cats are reared and slaughtered for food in Korea.

Mr. Sainsbury: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs did not raise this matter with President Roh.

I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to him on 30 November, at column 419.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response he received from the Korean Foreign Minister when he drew his attention to the revulsion felt by many people in this country at the treatment of animals in Korea.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Korean Foreign Minister indicated that he was well aware of the strength of feeling in Britain on this issue. The Korean Government have assured us that they are making strenuous efforts to prevent cruelty to animals.

Visa Applications

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made regarding the visa applications by the Vietnamese film director, Mr. Tran Van Thuy, and his cameraman, Mr. Do Khanh Toan, who wish to visit the United Kingdom between 21 and 27 December.

Mr. Sainsbury: These applications are under active consideration and a decision will be made very shortly.

Strasbourg Summit

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to raise at the European summit meeting in Strasbourg with his French counterpart (a) the prospects of France joining the 1968 nuclear non-proliferation treaty, (b) the policy of the French Government regarding a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty and (c) the possibility of a joint Anglo-French officials working party to bilaterally discuss the non-proliferation treaty and test ban treaty.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs does not intend to raise these matters at the European Council meeting in Strasbourg.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to raise the issue of the fourth review conference of the non-proliferation treaty with his counterparts representing member states during the Strasbourg summit.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs does not intend to raise this subject at the European Council meeting in Strasbourg.

Semtex

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if further inquiries are to be made with the Czechoslovakian authorities arising from the more recent political development over its manufacture and exporting of Semtex.

Mr. Maude: We have been discussing this matter with the Czechoslovak Government for over a year. They have stated publicly that all exports of Semtex ceased in 1982.

Recent political developments in Czechoslavakia have not affected our exchanges which have resulted in a joint initiative for an international convention on the marking for detection of plastic and sheet explosives. This is under consideration in the International Civil Aviation Organisation.

El Salvador

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the ambassador of El Salvador has been called to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office over the murder of six priests and others in El Salvador; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) on 16 November, at column 416.

Cambodia

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many letters and telephone calls he has received on the subject of Cambodia in the last month; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Department has received over 12,000 letters and approximately 50 telephone inquiries on Cambodia in the last month.

Overseas Aid

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will set a timetable to honour the commitment to meet the United Nations target of providing overseas aid at the level of 0·7 per cent. of gross national product; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Monklands, West (Mr. Clarke) on 6 June, at column 129.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Veterinary Surgeons

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list in the Official Report for each of the last 10 years the number of veterinary surgeons permanently employed by his Department; and what is his estimate of the number of veterinary surgeons who will be required over each of the next four years.

Mr. Maclean: The number of veterinary surgeons permanently employed in the state veterinary service of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for each of the last 10 years is as follows:

Year	Number
1980	580·5
1981	563·5
1982	557·0
1983	549·0
1984	539·5
1985	527·5
1986	506·5
1987	464·5
1988	444·5
1989	422·0

We foresee a need for an increase in the number of veterinary surgeons in the state veterinary service over the next four years, particularly for food safety work including meat hygiene.

In April this year, Dr. Ewan Page was appointed to chair a committee to provide advice on this. Its report is awaited.

Suckler Cow Premia

Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what basis areas are selected for payment of suckler cow premia under the special provision of herd reduction due to natural circumstances.

Mr. Curry: In deciding which areas should be designated as being affected by drought account was taken of meteorological data on a county basis concerning rainfall levels and soil moisture deficits likely to result in serious depletion of natural fodder supplies.

Cyromazine

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has authorised the use of any products containing cyromazine; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Two products have been granted licences under the Medicines Act 1968 for use in preventing blow fly strike on sheep.

Salmonella

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what provision exists for the testing of flocks of broiler chicken for salmonella.

Mr. Maclean: There is no statutory requirement for testing broiler chickens for salmonella. However, the requirements for testing and for the compulsory slaughter of infected flocks apply to broiler breeding flocks in order to minimise the risk of producing infected progeny.

Bovine Offal

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice he has given concerning the disposal of bovine offal currently banned for human consumption.

Mr. Maclean: The offal must be dealt with in accordance with the Bovine Offal (Prohibition) Regulations 1989.

Bovine Somatotropin

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to the answer of 1 December to the hon. Member for South Shields (Dr.

Clark), Official Report, column 480, which three bovine somatotropin products have been authorised to undergo field trials; and what is the location of the authorised field trials.

Mr. Maclean: The three recombinant BST products authorised for trials are those which have satisfied the safety and other requirements of the Medicines Act 1968. Further details, including the location of the trials, are notified by the companies concerned to my Department in confidence under the terms of section 118 of the Act.

Poultry (Slaughter)

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many (a) flocks and (b) birds, have been slaughtered as a result of Zoonoses Orders; and what is the estimated number and value of loss of eggs which will result.

Mr. Maclean: Up to 1 December, 1,005,290 birds from 83 flocks infected with salmonella have been compulsorily slaughtered. It is not possible to give the details of the estimated number and value of loss of eggs which will result except at disproportionate cost.

Milk Quota

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the criteria upon which he is allocating the 1 per cent. increase in Britain's milk quota.

Mr. Curry: I am currently considering the available options together with the Secretaries of State for Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales.

Anthrax Vaccine

Mr. Hood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the current availability of an anthrax vaccine for cows.

Mr. Maclean: There is no commercial source of supply of anthrax vaccine in the United Kingdom at present, so in the event of an outbreak my Department has plans to make a vaccine available on an emergency basis.

Prosecutions

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many prosecutions his Department initiated in each of the last three years in respect of offences under (a) the Protection of Animals Act 1911, (b) the Agriculture (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act 1968, and (c) the Intensive Units Regulations; and what was the date of the last conviction obtained by his Department under each of these provisions.

Mr. Maclean: The prosecutions initiated were:

	[1]1987	[2]1988-89	[3]1989
1911 Act	6	8	3

[1] 1 January to 31 December.

[2] 1 January 1988 to 31 March 1989.

[3] 1 April 1989 to present.

No prosecutions under the Welfare of Livestock (Intensive Units) Regulations 1978 have been instigated by my Department in any of the last three years.

The last convictions obtained were on 13 November 1989 under the 1911 Act, and on 26 May 1989 under the 1968 Act.

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice he gives the veterinary service concerning the use of caesarian sections on cows suspected of bovine spongiform encephalopathy.

Mr. Maclean: Caesarian sections are not advised for preparturient cows. However, if a cow is unable to calve normally a caesarian section may be carried out at the discretion of the veterinary surgeon. Such animals must be isolated in approved accommodation whilst calving and for 72 hours afterwards. The placenta, uterine discharges and bedding must be burned or buried.

Farm Pollution Control

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much his Department has contributed in grant aid to farm pollution control under the Mersey basin campaign for every year since 1984.

Mr. Curry: This information is not available in the form requested. In the Crewe and Preston divisional offices, which cover the area including the Mersey basin and which spearheaded my Department's contribution to this important campaign, total expenditure on waste facilities under the agriculture improvement scheme, which ran from 1985 to 1988, was as follows:

1986-7	£367,819
1987-8	£238,317
1988-9	£97,362

In addition, prior notifications by farmers of intention to claim grant waste facilities under the farm and conservation grant scheme, which replaced the agriculture improvement scheme in February, were until the end of October:

Crewe

506 notifications covering grant expenditure of £4,002,139.

Preston

182 notifications covering grant expenditure of £209,164.

My Department has also supported this campaign through intensive publicity and advice to farmers including visits to farms identified by the water authority and, more recently, the National Rivers Authority.

Multi-annual Guidance Programme

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what date Her Majesty's Government became a signatory to the multi-annual guidance programme; and who were the signatories on behalf of Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Curry: The United Kingdom multi-annual guidance programme was approved by the Commission's Standing Committee for the Fishing Industry in accordance with the procedure laid down in article 47 of Regulation 4028/86 on 11 December 1987.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what dates the multi-annual guidance programme was debated in the House prior to Her Majesty's Government signing the agreement.

Mr. Curry: The entire MAGP was not debated but one of its main components concerning vessel grants was discussed in the House on 26 October 1987.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what consultations his Department held with representatives of the fishing industry prior to agreement to the multi-annual guidance programme as part of the common fisheries policy.

Mr. Curry: Full consultations were held with fishing industry representatives before the adoption of Council Regulation 4028/86, of which the multi-annual guidance programme forms a part.

Fishing (Hague Preference)

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what date and in which countries the 1978 Hague preference has been implemented by the European Community on behalf of coastal areas dependent on fishing.

Mr. Curry: The 1976 Hague preference has been implemented by the European Community once, in respect of the United Kingdom North sea haddock quota in 1989.

EC Fisheries Inspectorate

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals his Department intends to make to increase appointments to, and the responsibilities of, the Community fisheries inspectorate.

Mr. Curry: Under the common fisheries policy, enforcement is a matter for individual member states. The United Kingdom has, however, always been in the forefront in supporting the need for an effective Community inspectorate to ensure that member states meet their responsibilities. In recent years, the powers of the inspectorate have been strengthened, and it has become a real force throughout the Community. The inspectorate's complement has also been increased and currently stands at 18.

Captive Birds

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food why he has delayed publishing the report on computer study of mortality in quarantine of captive birds in 1988.

Mr. Maclean: The figures will be made available when the implications of the mortality study have been assessed. I hope to make an announcement shortly.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Parole

13. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the staff complement of the parole unit now; and what it was 12 months ago.

Mr. Mellor: The staff complement of the parole unit is 88, as against 79 in December 1988.

45. Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average delay beyond parole eligibility date in each of the four prison department regions.

Mr. Mellor: Information is not maintained in the form requested. We estimate that in England and Wales as a whole about 30 per cent. of cases are delayed by an average of two and a half months.

Prison Population

14. Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the latest figures for the total prison population; and what those figures were one year ago.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the latest figures for the total prison population; and what were those figures one year ago.

Mr. Waddington: On Friday 1 December, the total prison population stood at 48,245. This compares with 50,172 held on Friday 2 December last year.

40. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were in prison at the most recent count.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total prison population in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Mellor: On Friday 1 December the total prison population in England and Wales stood at 48,245. The responsibility for prisons in Scotland and Northern Ireland rests with my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland respectively.

60. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many mentally ill and mentally handicapped persons are at present in prisons in England and Wales.

Mr. Mellor: On 31 March 1989, the latest date for which information is available, 215 prisoners in England and Wales were considered by medical officers to meet the criteria for detention in hospital, as set out in the Mental Health Act 1983. 185 of those prisoners were considered to be mentally ill, within the meaning of the Act. The term "mentally handicapped" is not one of the 4 specific categories of mental disorder defined in part I of the Act.

Visas

15. Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he proposes to extend the number of countries whose nationals will require visas to enter the United Kingdom.

36. Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he proposes to extend the number of countries whose nationals will require visas to enter the United Kingdom.

63. Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he proposes to extend the number of countries whose nationals will require visas to enter the United Kingdom.

69. Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he proposes to extend the number of countries whose nationals will require visas to enter the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Visa policy and practice are kept under constant review but it is long established practice not to comment on the possibility of extending visa requirements to any particular country.

Broadcasting

16. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with the broadcasting authorities in Wales on the future of television and radio services in Wales.

Mr. Mellor: I have regular contact with the Welsh Fourth Channel Authority (S4C), the IBA and the BBC. In particular, there have been a number of discussions with S4C about our proposals for Welsh broadcasting after 1992.

32. Mr. Butcher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next plans to meet the governors of the British Broadcasting Corporation to discuss their effectiveness in achieving political objectivity in news reporting.

Mr. Mellor: I meet the chairman and governors of the BBC from time to time to discuss a wide range of broadcasting matters. Responsibility for ensuring impartiality in the reporting of news rests with the BBC.

33. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the chairman of the Independent Broadcasting Authority; and what matters were discussed.

41. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next plans to meet the chairman of the Independent Broadcasting Authority to discuss broadcasting.

57. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the chairman of the Independent Broadcasting Authority to discuss broadcasting.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend keeps in regular touch with the chairman of the IBA on a wide range of broadcasting matters.

67. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will meet the chairman of the Independent Broadcasting Authority to discuss the future broadcasting of hospital radio.

Mr. Mellor: Following the hon. Member's meeting with my right hon. Friend the Member for Mid Sussex (Mr. Renton) in July and the subsequent meeting of the National Association of Hospital Broadcasting Organisations with the IBA, consideration is being given to their suggestion that a dedicated frequency be provided for hospital radio. The outcome will be made known to the proposed new radio authority, which it is intended will be responsible for licensing all non-BBC radio services, including hospital radio.

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a copy of his letter of 4 December to the hon. Member for Westminster, North on the decriminalisation of television licence fee evasion as recommended in paragraph 152 of the Home Affairs Committee's Third Report of Session 1987-88.

Mr. Waddington: We have now done so.

Electronic Tagging

17. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made on electronic monitoring as both a condition of bail and as an alternative to remand in custody.

54. Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made on electronic monitoring as both a condition of bail and as an alternative to remand in custody.

Mr. John Patten: As at 26 November, 32 defendants have been granted bail subject to the condition that they are electronically monitored. Under the three experimental schemes now in progress the courts are asked to impose electronic monitoring as a condition of bail only in cases where a defendant would otherwise have been remanded in custody.

81. Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now consider abandoning plans to introduce the electronic tagging system.

Mr. John Patten: No. Decisions on the future of electronic monitoring will be taken when the experimental schemes now in progress have been evaluated.

Prison Management

18. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will reconsider plans to reorganise prison management in the light of concerns expressed by the Prison Governors Association.

Mr. Mellor: No decisions have been made on the recommendations of the team which reviewed the organisation and location of the prison service at above establishment level. I have met representatives of the Prison Governors Association to discuss the report and have received a written submission from them. Their views and all the other comments received are being carefully considered.

Violent Crimes

19. Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he plans to take to curb the increase in violent crimes.

Mr. John Patten: Measures to prevent these offences include tougher maximum penalties for violent offences; increases in police manpower; targeting of high crime areas by police; measures to deal with alcohol-related disorder; education, research and crime prevention. Further measures, including new action to tackle domestic violence, are being taken forward by the ministerial groups on crime prevention and women's issues.

"Practical Ways to Crack Crime"

20. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many copies of the Home Office booklet, "Practical Ways to Crack Crime", have now been distributed.

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many copies of the Home Office booklet, "Practical Ways to Crack Crime", have now been distributed.

Mr. John Patten: Two and a half million copies of the first two editions and nearly 300,000 of the recently published third edition of our handbook "Practical Ways to Crack Crime" have now been distributed in England and Wales. We have also produced a new, shorter version called the Family Guide, over one and a half million copies of which have been distributed.

Drugs

21. Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many seizures of illicit drugs have been made by police and Customs in 1989 to date; and what is the estimated value of drugs seized.

Mr. Mellor: As I stated in my reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Chelmsford (Mr. Burns) on 5 December, in the period 1 January to 6 November 1989 Customs reported a provisional total of 6,830 seizures of controlled drugs. It is estimated that these would have had an equivalent street value of some £230 million. Comprehensive figures are not yet available for police seizures in 1989; the latest information is for 1988 when police made 32,947 seizures and customs 5,288 seizures of controlled drugs.

24. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the control of drug trafficking at frontiers by 1992.

Mr. Mellor: As we have said on previous occasions, the Government are determined to maintain the frontier checks necessary to control drug trafficking and to promote close co-operation at the operational level between law enforcement agencies. A European committee to combat drugs has been established and held its inaugural meeting in Brussels on 1 December. My right hon. and learned Friend has nominated me to serve on the committee as United Kingdom national drug co-ordinator. Among the priorities which the committee has been asked to address are those of strengthening of controls at external frontiers and development of closer international co-operation between law enforcement agencies, as well as the need for early ratification by all member states of the 1988 UN convention against illicit drug trafficking.

28. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the latest totals for assets confiscated from convicted drug traffickers and assets frozen pending trials for drug trafficking offences.

66. Sir Michael Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the latest totals for assets confiscated from convicted drug traffickers and assets frozen pending trials for drug trafficking offences.

72. Mr. Thorne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the latest totals for assets confiscated from convicted drug traffickers and for assets frozen pending trials for drug trafficking offences.

Mr. John Patten: In 1988, £8·1 million was ordered to be confiscated by the courts under the Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986. About £600,000 is known to have been recovered in confiscation orders during the financial year 1988-89; this mainly relates to orders made in 1987. The national drugs intelligence unit estimates that confiscation and restraint orders exceeding £13 million and £20 million respectively have been made since the Act came into force in January 1987.

46. Mr. Donald Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers are now employed in regional crime squad drugs wings.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There were 228 officers on the strength of regional crime squads drugs wings on 27 November. In No. 9 region, which covers the Metropolitan police district, drugs investigation is not undertaken by the regional crime squad but by the Metropolitan police central drugs squad. Its strength on 27 November was 110.

My right hon. and learned Friend announced on 23 November at columns 12-13 that he is prepared to approve a further 51 police posts for regional crime squads specifically for their work in connection with drugs.

59. Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated revenue cost of the new anti-drugs network he recently announced.

Mr. Mellor: Subject to Parliament's approval of the Supply Estimates, up to £2·3 million is being made available in 1990-91 for the drug prevention initiative which was announced on 11 October 1989.

64. Sir Fergus Montgomery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many British drug liaison officers are now stationed overseas.

Mr. Mellor: There are at present 17 United Kingdom drug liaison officers based abroad.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many times and on what dates the ministerial group on drugs has met since its creation.

Mr. Mellor: The ministerial group on the misuse of drugs has met 39 times, on the following dates:

1984—23 July, 1 October, 1 November, 12 December

1985—29 January, 4 March, 27 March, 7 May, 5 June, 25 June, 30 September, 29 October, 10 December

1986—29 January, 26 February, 16 April, 20 May, 24 June, 6 October, 18 November, 17 December

1987—26 January, 4 March, 27 April, 6 July, 29 September, 18 November

1988—25 January, 16 March, 4 May, 27 June, 29 September, 21 November

1989—9 February, 11 April, 23 May, 26 July, 16 October, 6 December

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the street value of the drugs destroyed by the authorities over the past 10 years; and if he will state the figure in pounds sterling for each year.

Mr. David Mellor: Records are not kept centrally of drugs destroyed following seizures by police or customs. Information about seizures of controlled drugs over the past 10 years was published in Home Office Statistical Bulletin Issue 30/89 "Statistics of the Misuse of Drugs: Seizures and Offenders Dealt With, United Kingdom, 1988" a copy of which is in the Library.

Alcohol

22. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the deadline for the experimental ban on drinking in public places in Coventry and other areas; what representations he has received as to the success of the experiment; and what has been the reduction in prosecutions for offences involving drunkenness in those areas as a result of the experimental byelaws.

Mr. John Patten: Expiry dates for the experimental byelaw, which is in force in seven areas, range from 31 October 1990 to 16 July 1991. In each case we shall review the results some months before the date when the byelaw would lapse and reach conclusions on the benefits for these and other areas. We shall seek to determine how far a relationship can be established with changes in prosecutions for offences involving drunkeness, but this will not be straightforward because the byelaw is in force only in certain designated zones within the seven local authority areas, for which separate statistics for prosecutions have not been kept in the past.

We have received requests for the byelaw from 105 local authorities.

27. Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he will be taking to implement the proposals contained in the Prison Reform Trust's report "Drink, Delinquency and Prison", for alcohol counselling and education for offenders with drink problems in young offender institutions.

Mr. Mellor: The recommendations contained in this report are being considered. Regime activities in young offender institutions seek to assist inmates to develop personal responsibility and self-discipline and a more positive lifestyle. Many institutions already tackle problems of alcohol abuse as part of their education and training programmes.

Passports

23. Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average time taken between receiving a passport application and its issue at each passport office in 1989; and what he expects the position to be in 1990.

35. Mr. Wall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average time taken between receiving a passport application and its issue at each passport office in 1989; and what he expects the position to be in 1990.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Passport applications are processed according to the applicant's travel requirements, with priority being given to urgent cases. As a result, processing times in a given period vary considerably, and averages are not recorded.

The maximum processing times in working days for straightforward non-urgent postal applications at the six United Kingdom passport offices during 1989 were as follows:

	Days
London	48
Liverpool	110
Peterborough	76
Newport	51
Glasgow	64
Belfast	10

Most applications were processed well within these maximum periods.

Processing times should be reduced next year, as a result of enhancements made to the computer systems at the Glasgow and Liverpool offices, the employment of additional permanent staff at all offices, and other measures.

Domestic Violence

25. Mr. Tracey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many specialist units now exist within the Metropolitan police force coping with cases of domestic violence; and what were the comparable figures one and two years ago, respectively.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There are currently 28 such units. One year ago there were 10 and two years ago one.

Pub Bombings

26. Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met Lord Denning to discuss the case of the Birmingham Six.

Mr. Waddington: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Sheffield, Heeley (Mr. Michie) earlier today.

30. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the Surrey police officers investigating the Guildford pub bombings visited Queen's road police station in Birmingham during the course of their inquiries.

31. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the Surrey police officers investigating the Guildford pub bombings visited Queen's road police station in Birmingham during the course of their inquiries.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the Surrey police officers investigating the Guildford pub bombings visited Queen's road police station in Birmingham during the course of their inquiries.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Members to the written answers given on 30 October at column 40, in which I explained in reply to the hon. Member for Sunderland, South (Mr. Mullin) that no Surrey officer visited Queen's road while those arrested in relation to the Birmingham pub bombings were detained there. No record now exists which will indicate whether any Surrey officer visited Queen's road at any other time.

42. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has copies of the alleged confessions of the men convicted of the Birmingham bombings.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has copies of the alleged confessions of the men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has copies of the alleged confessions of the men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Members to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Islington, North (Mr. Corbyn) earlier today.

DPP

29. Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next plans to meet the Director of Public Prosecutions.

Mr. John Patten: At the moment there are no plans for such a meeting.

Asylum Seekers

34. Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of people likely to seek asylum in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) the European Economic Community over the next five years; and if he intends to review procedures for processing such applications.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: There is no basis for reliably estimating the numbers of asylum applications in future years. Figures for individual countries are liable to considerable fluctuation as a result of changing circumstances, but the overall upward trend seems likely to continue.

Procedures are kept under constant review and adjusted where necessary.

Drink Driving

37. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has recently held with representatives of the Magistrates Association about guidelines for consistency in sentencing persons convicted of driving after consuming excessive alcohol; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: None. Sentencing is a matter for the courts within their overall powers as laid down by legislation and in accordance with the guidance given by the Court of Appeal. I understand that the Magistrates Association is considering the issue of new guidelines on road traffic sentencing to its members.

Police

38. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many uniformed police officers have returned to beat duties in the last five years as a result of civilianisation and other initiatives, in the Metropolitan police district and in England and Wales.

Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many uniformed police officers have returned to beat duties in the last five years as a result of civilianisation and other value-for-money initiatives in the Metropolitan police district and in England and Wales.

61. Mr. Marland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many uniformed police officers have returned to beat duties in the last five years as a result of civilianisation and other value-for-money initiatives, in the Metropolitan police district and in England and Wales.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We estimate that since the 1983-84 financial year up until December 1988, the latest period for which information is readily available, the Metropolitan police have returned 608 officers to operational duties, and provincial forces 3,343, through civilianisation. Estimates of police time saved through other value for money initiatives are not available.

62. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the chief constable of the West Midlands police; and what was discussed.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to a question from the hon. Member for Bradford, North (Mr. Wall) on 5 December at column 181.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has received any indication from Mr. Don Doreston, the assistant chief constable of Derbyshire, as to when his report into the allegations that members of the Leicestershire police force were involved in the leaking of information to Mr. Joseph Wambaugh will be completed.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that the investigation into the allegations of improper disclosure of information by officers from the Leicestershire constabulary has now been completed. The report has been submitted to the Director of Public Prosecutions and to the Police Complaints Authority, who supervised the investigation, for their consideration.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police constables left their jobs in each police authority from 1978 to the present date (a) to retire or (b) to take other jobs outside the police force.

Mr. Lloyd: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

General information on police officers retiring or resigning from provisional forces is available at appendix 9 in reports of Her Majesty's chief inspector of constabulary, copies of which are available in the Library.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers of all ranks have been injured requiring hospitalisation by police authority for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is not collected centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers of all ranks have been (i) suspended for seven days or more and (ii) dismissed by each police authority for each year from 1980 to the current year.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information relating to numbers of officers suspended from duty pending investigation of alleged misconduct is not held centrally.

The table shows numbers of officers punished in disciplinary proceedings by dismissal from their force. Figures for the current year are not yet available.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will produce a series of tables showing, as a percentage of the population, for each police authority by (a) police constables, (b) sergeants, (c) inspectors, (d) chief inspectors, (e) superintendents, (f) chief superintendents and (g) higher ranking officers in descending order by the ratio of (i) police constables, (ii) sergeants, (iii) inspectors, including chief inspectors, (iv) superintendents, including chief superintendents and (v) ranks above chief superintendent to population.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will produce a table showing for each police authority the numbers of (i) police constables, (ii) sergeants, (iii) inspectors, including chief, (iv) superintendents, including chief and (v) ranks above chief superintendent for each year from 1978 to the present.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information on numbers and ranks of police officers in each force is available for each year up until 31 December 1988 in the annual reports of Her Majesty's chief inspector of constabulary, copies of which are available in the Library.

Force establishments by rank as at December 1989 are shown in the table:

[1] Includes ranks of assistant commissioner and above in Metropolitan police, and commissioner in the City of London police.

[2] Includes deputy assistant commissioner in Metropolitan police and assistant commissioner in the City of London police.

[3] Includes commanders in Metropolitan police and City of London police.

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will produce a table showing the percentage increase/decrease in the number of (a) police constables, (b) sergeants, (c) inspectors, including chief inspectors, (d) superintendents, including chief superintendents, and (e) ranks above chief superintendent, by police authority, in ascending order, by police constables and population for each year from 1978 to the latest available date.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The information is not readily available and could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Information on police numbers and ranks in each police force together with police/population ratios is given in the annual reports of Her Majesty's chief inspector of constabulary, copies of which are available in the Library.

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to issue guidance for professional purposes relating to formation of an anti-abortion guild of police officers.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: If such a guild were to be formed, it would be for chief officers of police to consider the possible relevance of paragraph 1 of schedule 2 to the Police Regulations 1987. This provides that a member of a police force shall at all times abstain from any activity which is likely to interfere with the impartial discharge of his duties or which is likely to give rise to the impression among members of the public that it may so interfere.

Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he proposes to meet the Association of Chief Police Officers to discuss the presence of media personnel on police operations.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Mansfield (Mr. Meale) on 5 December 1989 at column 180.

Probation Officers

39. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average caseload of a probation officer in England and Wales; and what are the comparable statistics for recent years.

Mr. John Patten: The information requested up to 1987 is published in Probation Statistics England and Wales 1987 (table 11.1). In 1988 the average caseload, excluding community service, of full time maingrade probation officers on general duties was 29·3 compared with 31·6 in 1984 and 32·1 in 1985.

Assaults on Police

43. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has as to the number of assaults made on police officers during 1988; and what was the figure for 1987.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Arrangements have been made for information on assaults against police officers to be collected centrally for 1989 and subsequent years. We have no realistic estimate for earlier years, because forces recorded such information in a number of different ways and no central collation was made.

Crime Prevention Panels

44. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many crime prevention panels now exist in England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: At the end of June 1989 there were 398 crime prevention panels and 209 junior panels in England and Wales. More than 40 junior panels were formed in the first six months of this year, in addition to a continuing growth in the number of senior panels.

50. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to encourage crime prevention panels to be set up in secondary schools; and what level of success he has met.

Mr. John Patten: Crime Concern, the national crime prevention organisation established last year, is encouraging the setting up of youth crime prevention panels. In July 1989, Crime Concern organised a successful national youth crime prevention panels conference, opened by Her Royal Highness the Princess Royal and attended by Ministers from the Department of Education and Science and representatives from the Home Office. Crime Concern is now planning a programme of work to stimulate the growth of youth crime prevention panels. At the end of June 1989 there were 209 youth crime prevention panels in England and Wales, mostly based in schools, an increase of almost 40 in six months.

Industrial Security

47. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received about promoting industrial security schemes.

Mr. John Patten: No recent representations of this kind have been received although during a visit to Norfolk in October my right hon. Friend the Member for Witney (Mr. Hurd) received an inquiry from a member of the Kings Lynn borough council about the possibility of reduced insurance premiums for firms in industrial watch schemes.

Private Security Industry

48. Mr. John P. Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans the Government have to introduce legislation for the statutory control of the private security industry.

Mr. John Patten: While statutory control is an option, we are considering, in the light of the report of a Home Office working group, whether there is scope for further improvements in self-regulation of the private security industry.

Charities

49. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications to register new charities have been received in the latest year for which statistics are available by the Charity Commissioners.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that during the calendar year 1988 the Charity Commissioners received approximately 4,011 applications to register new charities.

74. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the Charity Commissioner; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. and learned Friend has not yet met the Chief Charity Commissioner, but my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister of State with special responsibility for charities is frequently in touch with him on a wide range of matters concerning charities and the work of the commission.

Racially Motivated Attacks

51. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the figures for the number of racially motivated attacks for the last year that figures are available; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The only available information relates to the Metropolitan police district and is published in the Commissioner's annual report, a copy of which is available in the Library. The total number of racial incidents reported during 1988 was 2,214, an increase of less than 2 per cent. over 1987.

Victim Support Schemes

52. Mr. Couchman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many victim support schemes now operate in England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: Three hundred and fifty-four.

Neighbourhood Watch

53. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many neighbourhood watch schemes now exist in England and Wales.

78. Dr. Woodcock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many neighbourhood watch schemes now exist in England and Wales.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer my hon. Friends to the reply that I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Romsey and Waterside (Mr. Colvin).

75. Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will assess the contribution being made to crime prevention in Greater Manchester by the neighbourhood watch scheme: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Although I am not aware of any specific research into the effects of neighbourhood watch in Greater Manchester as a whole, figures for recorded crime for the 12 months ending in June 1989 show a drop of over 5 per cent. in Greater Manchester. This decrease, coupled with a 8 per cent. decline in the number of recorded burglaries, must be encouraging to all those engaged in crime prevention work, especially members of neighbourhood watch schemes.

The Kirkholt burglary prevention project in Rochdale, which included a variant of neighbourhood watch, has resulted in a substantial drop in the level of residential burglary. A full report of the Kirkholt project is in Home Office crime prevention unit paper No. 13, a copy of which is in the Library.

76. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is aware of any local authorities whose policy it is to refuse to permit neighbourhood watch signs to be erected in highways within their jurisdiction.

Mr. John Patten: We are aware that some local authorities have refused to grant planning permission for the erection of neighbourhood watch signs and I deplore this. The Town and Country Planning (Control of Advertisements) (Amendment No. 2) Regulations 1987 gave deemed consent for the erection of signs relating to properly approved neighbourhood watch schemes which were not to be placed on highway land. Where signs are required on highway land I hope that all highway authorities will follow the Department of Transport's lead in approving such signs unless they cause a hazard to traffic or pedestrians.

Television Licences

55. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will review the provision of reduced fee television licences to old age pensioners.

Mr. Mellor: We have no plans to do so.

Remand Prisoners

56. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the latest figures for numbers of remand prisoners held in police cells; and what were the comparable figures six months and one year ago.

Mr. Mellor: On Wednesday 6 December, there were no remand prisoners held in police cells in England and Wales. Comparable figures for 6 December 1988 and 5 May 1989 were 945 and 210 prisoners respectively, most of whom were on remand.

Phone Tapping

58. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about phone tapping; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: Between 1 January and 30 November this year, 102 letters were received covering a variety of matters relating to the interception of communications.

Bill of Rights

65. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has for the introduction of a Bill of Rights; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The Government have no plans to introduce a Bill of Rights.

Harmondsworth Detention Centre

68. Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last visited Harmondsworth detention centre; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: When I was Minister of State at the Home Office between 1983 and 1987. I hope to make a further visit in due course.

Safer Cities Initiative

70. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will consider increasing the amount of money which he provided for local crime prevention work in the safer cities initiative launched in March 1988.

Mr. John Patten: Subject to detailed scrutiny of estimates and to parliamentary approval, expenditure in excess of £6 million is planned for local crime prevention work under the safer cities programme in 1990-91. It is too early in the life of this new and innovative programme to seek significant increases above this level.

Channel Tunnel

71. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he has given to the conduct of immigration procedures and passport controls for persons travelling in the proposed Channel tunnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We intend to put in place procedures which, without unnecessarily impeding the flow of bona fide travellers, will serve to maintain effective immigration control. I hope to make an announcement on the detail of the procedures shortly.

Manual Records

73. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce further legislation allowing individuals access to manual records concerning themselves held by Government agencies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: There are no present plans to do so.

Prindus

77. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state (a) the finance and (b) the profit or loss of Prindus in the latest available year.

Mr. Mellor: Prindus was a trading name used by the directorate of industries and farms. The directorate has been superseded by Prison Service Industries and Farms and the trading name has not been used for some years. This House voted finance for prison service industries and farms for the year ending 31 March 1990 in the sum of £20,250,016. Provisional trading results for that year have been published in paragraphs 87 and 88 of the report on the work of the prison service April 1988-March 1989 which has been placed in the Library. The net operating cost of PSIF for 1988-89 was £18·1 million.

Police Complaints Authority

79. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what consideration he is giving to the composition and powers of, and access to, the Police Complaints Authority.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans at present for any changes in the composition of, or access to, the Police Complaints Authority. My right hon. Friend the Member for Witney (Mr. Hurd) announced on 27 June 1987 at column 396 our intention to make a number of changes in the arrangements for dealing with complaints against the police—including some changes in the powers of the Police Complaints Authority —in response to recommendations set out in the authority's triennial review 1985-88.

Young Offenders

80. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what initiatives he proposes to take to overcome the added problems facing those who seek to rehabilitate young offenders arising from recent changes in social security regulations.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Barnsley, West and Penistone (Mr. McKay) on 5 December 1989.

Animal Experiments

82. Mr. Steve Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any proposals to amend the licensing arrangements under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have no plans to change the legal framework. My right hon. and learned Friend hopes to make an order bringing into effect the designation of breeding and supplying establishments with effect from January 1990. Other detailed changes are made in the administrative arrangements from time to time.

Animal Welfare

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans for introducing further legislation on animal welfare.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: We have no plans at present for such legislation for England and Wales.

Ethnic Minorities

Mr. John Townend: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the main purposes for which grants under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 are paid to local authorities.

Mr. John Patten: Under section 11 of the Local Government Act 1966 grant may be paid for the employment of staff to local authorities who make special provision for ethnic minorities whose language or customs differ from those of the rest of the community. The grant is an important way in which barriers preventing people from the ethnic minorities from using fully the opportunities for economic, educational and social development can be broken down and to enable them to play a growing and effective part in the mainstream of British life.

Section 11 grant has been the subject of a scrutiny review. The review is currently being considered with a view to ensuring that the grant meets more effectively the needs of the ethnic minorities and we hope to be in a position to announce the results of that consideration in the not too distant future.

Immigration

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent investigations have been undertaken by officers of the immigration service into fraudulent marriages of convenience; and with what results.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will investigate the extent to which fraudulent marriages are used as a means of evading the immigration rules; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Inquiries over the last 18 months have revealed evidence of possible wrongdoing in a number of cases involving applications for settlement on the basis of marriage. These inquiries are continuing.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has had that the personal data of British citizens held at the general registry office are being misused in connection with fraudulent marriages of convenience; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Poole (Mr. Ward) on 31 October 1989 at column 114.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many meetings Ministers in his Department have had on immigration cases with hon. and right hon. Members for each month of the current year.

Mr. Waddington: In addition to telephone conversations and other personal exchanges, Ministers have held formal meetings with right hon. and hon. Members as follows:

	Meetings
January	2
February	4
March	4
April	2
May	2
June	6
July	12
August	0
September	0
October	0
November	3
December	1

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the adequacy of staffing levels of the immigration service at Isis house, SE1 to deal with the volume of immigration offences; and whether he has any plans to increase staffing levels.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The allocation of staff within the immigration service is kept under regular review to ensure the most effective and efficient use of available resources. As far as staffing for future years is concerned, I invite the hon. Member to await the publication in the new year of the Government's public expenditure White Paper.

Judicial System (Appointments)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if any progress has been made concerning the research he has commissioned for an appointments system in (a) the magistrates courts and (b) juvenile courts.

Mr. John Patten: Since the publication last year of the results of research on ways of reducing waiting time on the day, the Home Office has held two seminars for justices' clerks and drawn the attention of all clerks to the reductions in waiting time which can be achieved by better listing practices. In addition, a new quality of service performance indicator is being developed within the magistrates courts management information system, which will, among other things, measure waiting times on the day. This will be introduced during 1990.

Gartree Prison

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has become of the £20 confiscated at Her Majesty's prison Gartree from Mr. Patrick Hill by the deputy governor, Mr. Bushell, on 15 November.

Mr. Mellor: The money, which was in Mr. Hill's unauthorised possession, has been paid into public funds in accordance with standing instructions.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will produce a table showing by police authority for the latest 12 months data available the number of reported (a) burglaries, (b) murders, (c) rapes, (d) cases of sexual abuse against individuals under 16 years, (e) suicide attempts and (f) robberies involving cash greater than £100,000.

Mr. John Patten: The readily available information by police force area is published in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales Supplementary Volume 3" table S3.1, a copy of which is available in the Library. No information is available centrally on attempted suicide.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the total number of crimes committed in England and Wales for each year from 1970 to 1989, inclusive, by police authorities.

Mr. John Patten: The information for 1974-79 and 1981-88 is published in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales"; in Table 2.5 of the latest issue, for 1988, Cm 847. Information for 1970-73 and 1980 is contained in the "Supplementary Tables" for those years. Copies of these publications are available in the Library.

Police National Computer

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what decision he has made regarding the privatisation of the police national computer and the passing of control of the police national computer into the hands of an executive agency.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given today to the hon. Member for Dumbarton (Mr. McFall).

Rating Reform

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans, following the introduction of the community charge, to amend the law to allow overseas residents who are not British citizens but who will have to pay the poll tax, the right to vote in local elections.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: No.

Downing Street (Access)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the criteria laid down for admissions to Downing street of (a) delegations, (b) beggars anxious to elicit charity, (c) tourists and (d) the general public.

Mr. Waddington: The Metropolitan police restrict access to Downing street as necessary in pursuance of their common law duty to prevent crime and disorder.

European Community

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with his European Community counterparts regarding the decisions by West Germany, France and Benelux countries to abolish border checks on people on their common frontiers.

Mr. Waddington: The United Kingdom is not associated with the Schengen agreement, which is an agreement between five neighbouring countries sharing long land frontiers, and we have had no formal discussions about it. The questions of progress under the agreement and its relationship to developments across the Community have, however, arisen from time to time in informal discussions which my predecessor and I have had with Community colleagues, and also in collective meetings of Ministers of member states of the Community. I anticipate further discussions of that kind, and we shall certainly follow developments with close interest.

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has considered the implications of the Schengen agreement and supplementary agreements; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maude: I have been asked to reply.

The Schengen agreement is an arrangement between France, the Federal Republic of Germany, Belgium, Netherlands and Luxembourg to abolish land frontier controls between their countries. Their work is separate from the discussions on free movement of people which are taking place among all member states of the European Community.

We shall naturally be interested in the experience of the Schengen partners in reducing frontier controls.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Student Loans

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has had about the effect acceptance of a top-up loan will have on students' further overdraft facilities.

Mr. Jackson: It will be for the lender to decide what account to take of a client's borrowing under the top-up loans scheme.

Public Appointments

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many persons above the age of (a) 60, (b) 65 and (c) 70 years he has appointed to public bodies in each of the last 10 years.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department's policy is to make the best appointment possible for the task in hand, irrespective of age. No consolidated record of the age of members of public bodies is maintained.

Head Teachers (Wakefield)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many letters he has received since the beginning of the autumn school term from head teachers of schools within the Wakefield metropolitan district; what were the concerns expressed in these letters; and what action is being taken to respond to these concerns.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend receives a number of letters from head teachers about various aspects of education provision. All letters to this Department will continue to receive appropriate replies which I hope the recipients find helpful.

Open University

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the contribution made by the Open university in environmental studies, research and education.

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave him on 16 May 1989 at column 124.

Teacher Appraisal

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he intends to publish a consultative document on teacher appraisal dealing with the mechanism of the process;

(2) when he intends to introduce a scheme of teacher appraisal in schools; and if he will make a statement;

(3) whether he intends all schools to take part in teacher appraisal; and whether there will be training for teachers to assist them in the process;

(4) whether he intends to introduce some independent professionals into the teacher appraisal process; and if he will make a statement;

(5) who will appraise head teachers when teacher appraisal is introduced.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend received in July this year the report of the national steering group (NSG) responsible for overseeing the school teacher appraisal pilot study which ended this summer. The report, which was published in October, sets out recommendations for a national framework within which teacher appraisal should be implemented across England and Wales.

My right hon. Friend has now initiated consultation on the national steering group's recommendations, which cover head teachers and teachers, and deal with both the process of appraisal and the question of who should appraise whom. Consultation ends at Easter next year and will be followed by the issue of guidance for local education authorities and schools. As part of this consultation, we have sought views on the appropriate date for bringing in, through regulations, a national framework which would require the appraisal of all members of the teaching profession.

When regulations are introduced a date will be set by which time appraisal must be extended to all teachers and head teachers. Training to assist teachers and head teachers in the operation of appraisal is important; guidance about this will be given to local education authorities. We are ready to support expenditure on appraisal training of up to £15 million through the Local Education Authority Training Grants Scheme in 1990-91.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Health and Social Services (Appointments)

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list all the executive posts in the Department of Health and Social Services for Northern Ireland which have been recruited in the last four years for which figures are available, together with the salaries and grades; and if he will give the length of contract for each post.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The recruitment of permanent staff to the Northern Ireland Civil Service is the responsibility of the Northern Ireland Civil Service Commission which allocates successful candidates to individual Departments in response to their needs. Details of executive recruits appointed to the Department of Health and Social Services over the last four years are as follows:

Year	Number	Grade	Salary on Appointment
1986	5	Executive officer grade II	£5,250-£8,730
1987	5	Executive officer grade II	£5,820-£9,330
	1	Administrative trainee	[1]£8,000-£10,150
1988	1	Executive officer grade II	£6,134-£9,935
	1	Staff officer (administrative)	[1]£11,600-£14,595
1989	3	Executive officer grade II	£6,715-£10,723 (current scale)
	1	Chief executive for health and personal social services	£37,600-£40,900 (current scale)

[1] The current salary scales for the grades mentioned are as follows:
Administrative trainee: £10,246-£12,074.
Staff officer (administrative) £13,022-£16,336.

Appointments to the grades of executive officer II and administrative trainee/staff officer (administrative) are permanent subject to the satisfactory completion of a probationary period. The chief executive appointment is for an initial period of five years with the possibility of renewal for a further period of conversion to a permanent post.

Irish Prime Minister (Talks)

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he next expects to meet the Irish Prime Minister; and what matters he proposes to discuss.

Mr. Brooke: I have no current plans to meet the Taoiseach. I paid him a courtesy call in Dublin before the last intergovernmental conference on 30 November.

Rivers and Lakes

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the total amount of public expenditure by the Department of Agriculture, Fisheries Division, on the stocking of rivers and lakes with fish, in each year since 1980; and if he will give details by district council area.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 7 December 1989]: Spending by the Department of Agriculture on the stocking of the Department's public angling waters since 1980 has been:

Financial year	Total expenditure on stocking £
1980-81	60,630
1981-82	50,490
1982-83	53,034
1983-84	69,093
1984-85	90,199
1985-86	149,711
1986-87	156,294
1987-88	107,243
1988-89	124,437

It is not possible to allocate expenditure on stocking to individual district council areas as the information is not held in the form requested and it could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

TRANSPORT

British Rail Maintenance Ltd.

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with BR about the operation of British Rail Maintenance Ltd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: None. The operation of British Rail Maintenance Ltd. is a management matter for British Rail.

Railways

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those Welsh lines due to have a super sprinter train service by mid-1990.

Mr. Portillo: Decisions on the allocation of rolling stock to specific railway lines are for the British Railways Board.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on when British Rail plans to electrify the Crewe to Holyhead line.

Mr. Portillo: I am unaware of any plans by British Rail to electrify this line.

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what resources he intends to make available to British Rail to encourage the greater frequency of trains on the Cambrian coast line between Shrewsbury and Aberystwyth and Shrewsbury and Pwllheli.

Mr. Portillo: The Government have approved over £400 million (1989-90 prices) of investment in new rolling stock for the provincial sector since 1983. It is for British Rail to decide the detailed disposition of resources within the sector in the light of the public service obligation which requires the board to continue to provide a level of service generally comparable to that in April 1988. They are free to provide additional services where that does not lead to an increase in grant.

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with British Rail about its plans for direct passenger travel through the Channel tunnel from 1993 (a) from Cardiff and (b) from Holyhead in terms of year of commencement and proposed frequency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: British Rail will be setting out its proposals in the plan which it will shortly be publishing, in compliance with section 40 of the Channel Tunnel Act 1987. I have discussed progress on this work with British Rail from time to time.

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what discussions he has had with British Rail about running passenger through trains on the central Wales line from Manchester to Milford Haven.

Mr. Portillo: Decisions on the routing and timetabling of rail services are for the management of British Rail.

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on when the Paddington to Swansea line will be electrified.

Mr. Portillo: It is for British Rail to come forward with any proposals.

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether British Rail has sought approval for investment in a Berne gauge freight line (a) from the Channel tunnel to south Wales and (b) from the Channel tunnel to north Wales.

Mr. Portillo: No.

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has received a request from British Rail for funding of a main line rail link to Cardiff Wales (Rhoose) Airport.

Mr. Portillo: No.

Roads

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to place a consultancy with the Energy and Environment Research Unit of the Open university on environmental effects of future road planning.

Mr. Atkins: No.

Mr. Terry Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the full roads report referred to in paragraph 32 of the White Paper "Roads for Prosperity" is to be published.

Mr. Atkins: In the new year.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Rented Farms

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has concerning the number of farms available for rent in the private sector for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Maclean: None.

Scrapie

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he proposes to take any action to prevent the sale of scrapie-infected sheep protein for use as feed for pigs.

Mr. Maclean: Scrapie is one of the oldest known animal diseases and has been the subject of extensive research. There is no scientific evidence to indicate that such action is necessary.

Walnut Trees

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if his Department has produced a planting, growing and husbandry manual for walnut trees.

Mr. Maclean: Guidance on growing walnut trees is given in Forestry Commission Bulletin 62, Silviculture of Broadleaved Woodland (ISBN 011 710 154 0), available in the Libary of the House.

Agro-forestry Development

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proposals he has for innovative multi-culture agro-forestry development in the United Kingdom for commercial scale (a) flour, (b) dye and (c) biomass production.

Mr. Maclean: None. My Department is, however, separately funding research on both agro-forestry and novel crops.

Soil Temperature

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he is taking to introduce technologies to increase the mean soil temperature in the United Kingdom by 2°C, and what would be the implications for crop yield of such an increase in soil temperature.

Mr. Maclean: The Minister has no plans to introduce technologies to increase the mean soil temperatures in the United Kingdom by 2°C.

The effect of increased soil temperature on crop yield would be dependent on the extent of seasonal fluctuations in that increase and the effect of other associated climatic changes, for example, in the level and pattern of rainfall. If it is assumed that the temperature increase remains constant throughout the year and is a direct result of increased radiation, and that water supply remains adequate, then yields of cereals and other field crops are likely to increase. In many spring crops such as cereals, potatoes, sugar beet, peas and beans increased yield potential would be a result of warmer spring temperatures allowing earlier planting-sowing so as to avoid the worst effects of mid-summer drought.

THE ARTS

Libraries, Museums and Galleries

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Minister for the Arts in determining public expenditure plans for 1990-91 what provision was made for the cost of (i) libraries and (ii) museums and galleries.

Mr. Luce: In 1990-91 the central Government provision for libraries is £112 million and for museums and galleries £182 million. (These figures do not include local authority spending).

NATIONAL FINANCE

Government Telephone Network

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the latest position in drawing up the specifications for the new Government telephone network; and whether public tenders will be sought from qualified suppliers.

Mr. Ryder: Decisions have not yet been made on whether, or how, to proceed with an integrated voice and data network for Government. The findings of the study announced by my right hon. Friend the then Paymaster General on 6 March 1989 are under consideration.

Value Added Tax

Miss Emma Nicholson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on his policy on the charging of value added tax on goods which facilitate mobility of disabled people.

Mr. Ryder: Most specialised equipment designed for use by disabled people and the charities that serve them is relieved of value added tax, but zero-rating does not extend to general purpose goods or services which can equally well be used by the able-bodied as by the disabled.

European Monetary System

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out the rate of inflation in the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland for each month since the Republic of Ireland became a full member of the European monetary system.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 7 December 1989]: The information requested is as follows:

Household Income

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list in rank order for each region in Britain (a) the average household income by region and (b) social security benefits as a proportion of household income; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 7 December 1989]: The latest regional estimates for average household income and social security benefits relate to households covered in the family expenditure survey for the calendar years 1986 and 1987 and are given in table 31 of the report of the family expenditure survey 1987, a copy of which is in the Library.

Relocation

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what relocations of his Department's staff, or agencies relating thereto, are currently being considered; and what are the numbers of staff affected.

Mr Ryder: A review of the location of the Treasury's activities is currently taking place under the policy that my right hon. Friend the then Paymaster General announced on 31 March 1988 at cols. 610-11. No decisions have yet been taken.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Health Care Professions (Advertising)

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether it is his intention to implement the recommendations of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission obliging health care professions to allow their members to use unsolicited mailshots as a means of promoting their services.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: When the MMC report on the supply of services of registered medical practitioners in relation to restrictions on advertising was published in March 1989, the Director General of Fair Trading was asked to seek undertakings that rules on advertising would be changed in accordance with the findings and recommendations of the MMC in a form to be agreed with him. A number of changes have already been made and the Director General of Fair Trading informs me that negotiations continue on the remaining restrictions, including that of unsolicited distribution of leaflets by general practitioners.

Insider Dealing

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the implementation of the insider dealing directive.

Mr. Redwood: I am today publishing a consultative document on the Government's proposals for changes to the insider dealing law. The proposals reflect both our experience of the operation of our present law, and the insider dealing directive which was unanimously agreed by the Council of Ministers on 13 November.

The directive sets minimum requirements for member states to follow in prohibiting insider dealing. We have in a number of areas gone beyond these requirements. We are also suggesting a substantial change by relating the offence to transactions done by or through authorised persons under the Financial Services Act rather than to the current complex structure of deals done on or off a recognised stock exchange.

We are inviting comments by the end of February 1990. I am arranging for a copy of the paper to be placed in the Library of the House.

Cars and Vans

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many cars and vans were produced in (a) the Federal Republic of Germany, (b) France, (c) Italy and (d) Spain in 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 4 December 1989]: Figures for cars are:

(a) 4·3 million, (b) 3·2 million (c) 1·9 million, (d) 1·5 million.

Figures for vans are not readily available.

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many cars and vans were produced in the United Kingdom in 1988.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 4 December 1989]: 1·2 million.

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has on the percentage of cars and vans which were produced in 1988 in (a) the Federal Republic of Germany, (b) France, (c) Italy and (d) Spain were exported.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 4 December 1989]: Figures for cars are:

(a) 58 per cent., (b) 57 per cent., (c) 36 per cent., (d) 53 per cent.

Figures for vans are not readily available.

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what percentage of the cars and vans which were produced in the United Kingdom in 1988 were exported.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 4 December 1989]: 18 per cent.

BAT Factory (Liverpool)

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will estimate (a) the total loss in receipts to the Exchequer and (b) the extra cost to Government Departments arising from the closure of the British American Tobacco factory in Liverpool; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 6 December 1989]: No realistic estimates are practicable. As to the possible principal effects, no significant loss of tobacco duty or VAT is expected since the factory manufactures for export. Corporation tax payable by BAT will depend upon the company's overall trading results. Unemployment benefits and social security costs depend upon the number of claimants, their individual circumstances and the time before they find other work. The Government's existing programmes to assist enterprise and creation of new jobs are of course available in this area but any such costs would be met from existing provisions.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will assess the effect on the economy of Liverpool of the proposed closure of the British American Tobacco factory; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 6 December 1989]: No realistic assessment is practicable. British American Tobacco would no longer pay rates on the site but, in that it intends to offer the factory free to the Merseyside development corporation, it seems likely that the premises will again be beneficially occupied and thus rates will again become payable. Unemployment benefits and social security costs depend upon the number of claimants, their individual circumstances and the time before they find other work.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will meet the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside and other Liverpool Members to discuss the implications of the proposed closure of the British American Tobacco factory in Liverpool.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 6 December 1989]: I would be happy to meet the hon. Members concerned.

Non-oil Exports

Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the total non-oil export volume in the United Kingdom for each of the last five years.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I have been asked to reply.

The information required is in the Monthly Review of External Trade Statistics, copies of which are available from the Library.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Crack

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much crack by weight and volume was confiscated in the United Kingdom or entering the United Kingdom in (a) 1987, (b) 1988 and (c) each month of 1989.

Mr. Mellor: Seizures of crack reported by the police to the National Drugs Intelligence Unit were:

Year	Seizures
1987	12
1988	27
[1]1989	124

[1] January—November.

Weights of crack seizures by the police analysed by the forensic science service were:

	Grammes
1987	6·7
1988	113·7
1989
January	2·3
February	85·1
March	26·3
April	6·4
May	22·3
June	2·8
July	8·9
August	41·8
September	9·6
October	12·2
November	21·6

In addition Customs reported one seizure of 1 gm of crack in 1987, one of 0·9 gm in 1988 and two in March 1989 amounting to 138 gm.

Courts (Expenditure)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in determining public expenditure plans for 1990-91 what provision was made for the cost of (i) coroners' courts, (ii) probation and (iii) magistrates' courts.

Mr. Waddington: Under the new planning total, the Government no longer make expenditure plans or provision for local authority spending but only for central Government support towards that spending. Central Government provide specific grant at the rate of 80 per cent. towards the costs of the probation service and magistrates courts.

The planned grant provision in 1990-91 for magistrates courts is £184·1 million for current expenditure and £40·6 million for capital expenditure, and for the probation service £198·8 million for current expenditure and £7·5 million for capital expenditure. In addition, credit approvals for capital expenditure will be made available totalling £10·5 million for magistrates' courts and £3·8 million for probation. Coroners courts are supported not through specific grant but through revenue support grant.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Scheme

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to improve the working of the criminal injuries compensation scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waddington: The Criminal Injuries Compensation Board's annual report, for the year ended 31 March 1989 (Cm. 900, published on 6 December) shows that it received 43,385 applications—a record number—during the year. This year's intake is expected to show a further unprecedented rise to over 50,000 applications. The board has a backlog of some 96,000 cases, with consequent delays to all claims.

My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and I have taken steps to meet these problems. We have increased staff from 220 in 1987 to 320. We have appointed more board members. Two thirds of the work is now dealt with by locally-recruited staff in a new office in Glasgow. A major computerisation programme will begin early next year. Despite the substantial increase in applications and the disruption caused by relocation of work to Scotland, the board resolved 38,830 cases last year, compared with 29,965 in the best previous year. On past performance we can expect far more cases to be resolved when the changes in staffing, location, and procedures have been fully absorbed. Meanwhile we have discussed with the chairman of the board the need for further improvements.

The Criminal Justice Act 1988 provides for the scheme to be placed on a statutory footing. The board says in its report that to make the scheme statutory now would disrupt work and add to arrears. We accept that judgment. In view of the urgent need to tackle the backlog and improve the board's service to present and future claimants I have decided, with the agreement of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland, and the board, not to make the scheme statutory yet but to make changes in the present non-statutory scheme to streamline it.

The revised scheme will come into effect on 1 February 1990. The principal changes to which I should call attention are the discretion given to the board to delegate decision-making in the first instance to staff, and revised provisions for oral hearings. Delegation will allow more flexibility and efficiency. Under revised hearings provisions all applicants will retain a right to have their cases reviewed by at least two members of the board, but applications for a hearing may be considered by two members of the board on the papers and a hearing will be held only if the case warrants.

I should also draw attention to an increase in the lower limit for compensation awards. This was last increased on 7 November 1986 to £550. The purpose of the limit is to exclude relatively minor injuries from the scope of the scheme and to concentrate resources on cases most deserving of compensation. With the passage of time it is right to raise the limit to £750. The new limit will apply to new applications.

While not bringing the scheme set down in the Criminal Justice Act 1988 into effect, I am taking this opportunity to incorporate Parliament's wishes on several points. The revised scheme will cover claims arising from offences of trespass on a railway; payment of compensation in fatal injury cases to the cohabitee of the deceased person; payment to victims of a set sum for a child born as a consequence of rape; a limit on compensation for loss of earnings of one and a half times gross average earnings and removal of compensation for damage or loss of clothing.

The Government are determined that victims should receive proper recognition under the criminal justice system, including the timely payment of compensation for personal injuries resulting from crime. The revised scheme will allow for better use of resources to achieve that end and contribute towards an improvement in the quality of service to claimants.

The revised scheme is as follows:

Criminal Injuries Compensation Scheme

Administration

1. The Compensation Scheme will be administered by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board, which will be assisted by appropriate staff. Appointments to the Board will be made by the Secretary of State, after consultation with the Lord Chancellor and, where appropriate, the Lord Advocate. A person may only be appointed to be a member of the Board if he is a barrister practising in England and Wales, an advocate practising in Scotland, a solicitor practising in England and Wales or Scotland or a person who holds or has held judicial office in England and Wales or Scotland. The Chairman and other members of the Board will be appointed to serve for up to five years in the first instance, and their appointments will be renewable for such periods as the Secretary of State considers appropriate. The Chairman and other members will not serve on the Board beyond the age of 72, or after ceasing to be qualified for appointment, whichever is the earlier except that, where the Secretary of State considers it to be in the interests of the Scheme to extend a particular appointment beyond the age of 72 or after retirement from legal practice, he may do so. The Secretary of State may, if he thinks fit terminate a member's appointment on the ground of incapacity or misbehaviour.

2. The Board will be provided with money through a Grant-in-Aid out of which payments for compensation awarded in accordance with the principles set out below will be made. Their net expenditure will fall on the Votes of the Home Office and the Scottish Home and Health Department.

3. The Board, or such members of the Board's staff as the Board may designate, will be entirely responsible for deciding what compensation should be paid in individual cases and their decisions will not be subject to appeal or to Ministerial review. The general working of the Scheme will, however, be kept under review by the Government, and the Board will submit annually to the Home Secretary and the Secretary of State for Scotland a full report on the operation of the Scheme, together with their accounts. The report and accounts will be open to debate in Parliament.

Scope of the Scheme

4. The board will entertain applications for ex gratia payments of compensation in any case where the applicant or, in the case of an application by a spouse or dependant (see paragraphs 15 and 16 below), the deceased, sustained in Great Britain, or on a British vessel, aircraft or hovercraft or on, under or above an installation in a designated area within the meaning of section 1 subsection (7) of the Continental Shelf Act 1964 or any waters within 500 metres of such an installation, or in a lighthouse off the coast of the United Kingdom, personal injury directly attributable—

(a) to a crime of violence (including arson or poisoning); or

(b) to the apprehension or attempted apprehension of an offender or a suspected offender or to the prevention or attempted prevention of an offence or to the giving of help to any constable who is engaged in any such activity; or

(c) to an offence of trespass on a railway.

Applications for compensation will be entertained only if made within three years of the incident giving rise to the injury, except that the Board may in exceptional cases waive this requirement. A decision by the Chairman not to waive the time limit will be final. In considering for the purposes of this paragraph whether any act is a criminal act a person's conduct will be treated as constituting an offence notwithstanding that he may not be convicted of the offence by reason of age, insanity or diplomatic immunity.

5. Compensation will not be payable unless the Board are satisfied that the injury was one for which the total amount of compensation payable after deduction of social security benefits, but before any other deductions under the Scheme, would not be less than the minimum amount of compensation. This shall be £750. The application of the minimum level shall not, however, affect the payment of funeral expenses under paragraph 15 below or, where the victim has died otherwise than in consequence of an injury for which compensation would have been payable to him under the terms of the Scheme, any sum payable to a dependant or relative of his under paragraph 16.

6. The Board may withold or reduce compensation if they consider that—

(a) the applicant has not taken, without delay, all reasonable steps to inform the police, or any other authority considered by the Board to be appropriate for the purpose, of the circumstances of the injury and to co-operate with the police or other authority in bringing the offender to justice; or

(b) the applicant has failed to give all reasonable assistance to the Board or other authority in connection with the application; or

(c) having regard to the conduct of the applicant before, during or after the events giving rise to the claim or to his character as shown by his criminal convictions or unlawful conduct—and, in applications under paragraphs 15 and 16 below, to the conduct, or character as shown by the criminal convictions or unlawful conduct, of the deceased and of the applicant—it is inappropriate that a full award, or any award at all, be granted.

Further, compensation will not be payable—

(d) in the case of an application under paragraph 4*(b)* above where the injury was sustained accidentally, unless the Board are satisfied that the applicant was at the time taking an exceptional risk which was justified in all the circumstances.

7. Compensation will not be payable unless the Board are satisfied that there is no possibility that a person responsible for causing the injury will benefit from an award.

8. Where the victim and any person responsible for the injuries which are the subject of the application (whether that person actually inflicted them or not) were living in the same household at the time of the injuries as members of the same family, compensation will be paid only where—

(a) the person responsible has been prosecuted in connection with the offence, except where the Board consider that there are practical, technical or other good reasons why a prosecution has not been brought; and

(b) in the case of violence between adults in the family, the Board are satisfied that the person responsible and the applicant stopped living in the same household before the application was made and seem unlikely to live together again; and

(c) in the case of an application under this paragraph by or on behalf of a minor, ie a person under 18 years of age, the Board are satisfied that it would not be against the minor's interests to make a full or reduced award.

For the purposes of this paragraph, a man and a woman living together as husband and wife shall be treated as members of the same family.

9. If in the opinion of the Board it is in the interests of the applicant (whether or not a minor or a person under an incapacity) so to do, the Board may pay the amount of any award to any trustee or trustees to hold on such trusts for the benefit of all or any of the following persons, namely the applicant and any spouse, widow or widower, relatives and dependants of the applicant and with such provisions for their respective maintenance, education and benefit and with such powers and provisions for the investment and management of the fund and for the remuneration of the trustee or trustees as the Board shall think fit. Subject to this the Board will have a general discretion in any case in which they have awarded compensation to make special arrangements for its administration. In this paragraph "relatives" means all persons claiming descent from the applicant's grandparents and "dependants" means all persons who in the opinion of the Board are dependent on him wholly or partially for the provision of the ordinary necessities of life.

10. The Board will consider applications for compensation arising out of acts of rape and other sexual offences both in respect of pain, suffering and shock and in respect of loss of earnings due to consequent pregnancy, and, where the victim is ineligible for a maternity grant under the National Insurance Scheme, in respect of the expenses of childbirth. Compensation will not be payable for the maintenance of any child born as a result of a sexual offence, except that where a woman is awarded compensation for rape the Board shall award the additional sum of £5,000 in respect of each child born alive having been conceived as a result of the rape which the applicant intends to keep.

11. Applications for compensation for personal injury attributable to traffic offences will be excluded from the Scheme, except where such injury is due to a deliberate attempt to run the victim down.

Basis of compensation

12. Subject to the other provisions of this Scheme, compensation will be assessed on the basis of common law damages and will normally take the form of a lump sum payment, although the Board may make alternative arrangements in accordance with paragraph 9 above. More than one payment may be made where an applicant's eligibility for compensation has been established but a final award cannot be calculated in the first instance—for example where only a provisional medical assessment can be given. In a case in which an interim award has been made, the Board may decide to make a reduced award, increase any reduction already made or refuse to make any further payment at any stage before receiving notification of acceptance of a final award.

13. Although the Board's decisions in a case will normally be final, they will have discretion to reconsider a case after a final award of compensation has been accepted where there has been such a serious change in the applicant's medical condition that injustice would occur if the original assessment of compensation were allowed to stand, or where the victim has since died as a result of his injuries. A case will not be re-opened more than three years after the date of the final award unless the Board are satisfied, on the basis of evidence presented with the application for re-opening the case, that the renewed application can be considered without a need for extensive enquiries. A decision by the Chairman that a case may not be re-opened will be final.

14. Compensation will be limited as follows—

(a) the rate of net loss of earnings or earning capacity to be taken into account shall not exceed one and a half times the gross average industrial earnings at the date of assessment (as published in the Department of Employment Gazette and adjusted as considered appropriate by the Board);

(b) there shall be no element comparable to exemplary or punitive damages.

Where an applicant has lost earnings or earning capacity as a result of the injury, he may be required by the Board to produce evidence thereof in such manner and form as the Board may specify.

15. Where the victim has died in consequence of the injury, no compensation other than funeral expenses will be payable for the benefit of his estate, but the Board will be able to entertain applications from any person who is a dependant of the victim within the meaning of section 1(3) of the Fatal Accidents Act 1976 or who is a relative of the victim within the meaning of the Schedule 1 to the Damages (Scotland) Act 1976. Compensation will be payable in accordance with the other provisions of this Scheme to any such dependant or relative. Funeral expenses to an amount considered reasonable by the Board will be paid in appropriate cases, even where the person bearing the cost of the funeral is otherwise ineligible to claim under this Scheme. Applications may be made under this paragraph where the victim has died from his injuries even if an award has been made to the victim in his lifetime. Such cases will be subject to conditions set out in paragraph 13 for the re-opening of cases and compensation payable to the applicant will be reduced by the amount paid to the victim.

16. Where the victim has died otherwise than in consequence of the injury, the Board may make an award to such dependant or relative as is mentioned in paragraph 15 in respect of loss of wages, expenses and liabilities incurred by the victim before death as a result of the injury whether or not the application for compensation in respect of the injury has been made before the death.

17. Compensation will not be payable for the loss of or damage to clothing or any property whatsoever arising from the injury unless the Board are satisfied that the property was relied upon by the victim as a physical aid.

18. The cost of private medical treatment will be payable by the Board only if the Board consider that, in all the circumstances, both the private treatment and the cost of it are reasonable.

19. Compensation will be reduced by the full value of any present or future entitlement to—

- (a) United Kingdom social security benefits;
- (b) any criminal injury compensation awards made under or pursuant to statutory arrangements in force at the relevant time in Northern Ireland;
- (c) social security benefits, compensation awards or similar payments whatsoever from the funds of other countries; or
- (d) payments under insurance arrangements except as excluded below which may accrue, as a result of the injury or death, to the benefit of the person to whom the award is made.

In assessing this entitlement, account will be taken of any income tax liability likely to reduce the value of such benefits and, in the case of an application under paragraph 15, the value of such benefits will not be reduced to take account of prospects of remarriage. If, in the opinion of the Board, an applicant may be eligible for any such benefits the Board may refuse to make an award until the applicant has taken such steps as the Board consider reasonable to claim them. Subject to paragraph 18 above, the Board will disregard monies paid or payable to the victim or his dependants as a result of or in consequence of insurance personally effected, paid for an maintained by the personal income of the victim or, in the case of a person under the age of 18, by his parent.

20. Where the victim is alive compensation will be reduced to take account of any pension accruing as a result of the injury. Where the victim has died in consequence of the injury, and any pension is payable for the benefit of the person to whom the award is made as a result of the death of the victim, the compensation will similarly be reduced to take account of the value of that pension. Where such pensions are taxable, one-half of their value will be deducted; where they are not taxable, eg where a lump sum payment not subject to income tax is made, they will be deducted in full. For the purposes of this paragraph, "pension" means any payment payable as a result of the injury or death, in pursuance of pension or other rights whatsoever connected with the victim's employment, and includes any gratuity of that kind and similar benefits payable under insurance policies paid for by employers. Pension rights accruing solely as a result of payments by the victim or a dependant will be disregarded.

21. When a civil court has given judgment providing for payment of damages or a claim for damages has been settled on terms providing for payment of money, or when payment of compensation has been ordered by a criminal court, in respect of personal injuries, compensation by the Board in respect of the same injuries will be reduced by the amount of any payment received under such an order or settlement. When a civil court has assessed damages, as opposed to giving judgment for damages agreed by the parties, but the person entitled to such damages has not yet received the full sum awarded, he will not be precluded from applying to the Board, but the Board's assessment of compensation will not exceed the sum assessed by the court. Furthermore, a person who is compensated by the Board will be required to undertake to repay them from any damages, settlement or compensation he may subsequently obtain in respect of his injuries. In arriving at their assessment of compensation the Board will not be bound by any finding of contributory negligence by any court, but will be entirely bound by the terms of the Scheme.

Procedure for determining applications

22. Every application will be made to the Board in writing as soon as possible after the event on a form obtainable from the Board's offices. The initial decision on an application will be taken by a single member of the Board, or by any member of the Board's staff to whom the Board has given authority to determine applications on the Board's behalf. Where an award is made the applicant will be given a breakdown of the assessment of compensation, exept where the Board consider this inappropriate, and where an award is refused or reduced, reasons for the decision will be given. If the applicant is not satisfied with the decision he may apply for an oral hearing which, if granted, will be held before at least two members of the Board excluding any member who made the original decision. The application for a hearing must be made within three months of notification of the initial decision; however the Board may waive this time limit where an extension is requested with good reason within the three month period, or where it is otherwise in the interests of justice to do so. A decision by the Chairman not to waive the time limit will be final. It will also be open to a member of the Board, or a designated member of the Board's staff, where he considers that he cannot make a just and proper decision himself to refer the application for a hearing before at least two members of the Board, one of whom may be the member who, in such a case, decided to refer the application to a hearing. An applicant will have no title to an award offered until the Board have received notification in writing that he accepts it.

23. Applications for hearings must be made in writing on a form supplied by the Board and should be supported by reasons together with any additional evidence which may assist the Board to decide whether a hearing should be granted. If the reasons in support of the application suggest that the initial decision was based on information obtained by or submitted to the Board which was incomplete or erroneous, the application may be remitted for reconsideration by the member of the Board who made the initial decision or, where this is not practicable or where the initial decision was made by a member of the Board's staff, by any member of the Board. In such cases it will still be open for the applicant to apply in writing for a hearing if he remains dissatisfied after his case has been reconsidered and the three-month limitation period in paragraph 22 will start from the date of notification of the reconsidered decision.

24. An applicant will be entitled to an oral hearing only if—

- (a) no award was made on the ground that any award would be less than the sum specified in paragraph 5 of the Scheme and it appears that applying the principles set out in paragraph 26 below, the Board might make an award; or
- (b) an award was made and it appears that, applying the principles set out in paragraph 26 below, the Board might make a larger award; or
- (c) no award or a reduced award was made and there is a dispute as to the material facts or conclusions upon which the initial or reconsidered decision was based or it appears that the decision may have been wrong in law or principle.

An application for a hearing which appears likely to fail the foregoing criteria may be reviewed by not less than two members of the Board other than any member who made the initial or reconsidered decision. If it is considered on review that if any facts or conclusions which are disputed were resolved in the applicant's favour it would have made no difference to the initial or reconsidered decision, or that for any other reason an oral hearing would serve no useful purpose, the application for a hearing will be refused. A decision to refuse an application for a hearing will be final.

25. It will be for the applicant to make out his case at the hearing, and where appropriate this will extend to satisfying the Board that compensation should not be withheld or reduced under the terms of paragraph 6 or paragraph 8. The applicant and a member of the Board's staff will be able to call, examine and cross-examine witnesses. The Board will be entitled to take into account any relevant hearsay, opinion or written evidence, whether or not the author gives oral evidence at the hearing. The Board will reach their decision solely in the light of evidence brought out at the hearing, and all the information and evidence made available to the Board members at the hearing will be made available to the applicant at, if not before, the hearing. The Board may adjourn a hearing for a reason, and where the only issue remaining is the assessment of compensation may remit the application to a Single Member of the Board for determination in the absence of the applicant but subject to the applicant's right to apply under paragraph 22 above for a further hearing if he is not satisfied with the final assessment of compensation. While it will be open to the applicant to bring a friend or legal adviser to assist him in putting his case, the Board will not pay the cost of legal representation. They will, however, have discretion to pay the expenses of the applicant and witnesses at a hearing. If an applicant fails to attend a hearing and has offered no reasonable excuse for his non attendance the Board at the hearing may dismiss his application. A person whose application has been dismissed by the Board for failure to attend a hearing may apply in writing to the Chairman of the Board for his application to be reinstated. A decision by the Chairman that an application should not be reinstated will be final.

26. At the hearing the amount of compensation assessed by a single member of the Board or a designated member of the Board's staff will not be altered except upon the same principles as the Court of Appeal in England or the Court of Session in Scotland would alter an assessment of damages made by a trial judge.

27. Procedure at hearings will be as informal as is consistent with the proper determination of applications, and hearings will in general be in private. The Board will have discretion to permit observers, such as representatives of the press, radio and television, to attend hearings provided that written undertakings are given that the anonymity of the applicant and other parties will not in any way be infringed by subsequent reporting. The Board will have power to publish information about its decisions in individual cases; this power will be limited only by the need to preserve the anonymity of applicants and other parties.

Implementation

28. The provisions of this Scheme will take effect from 1 February 1990. All applications for compensation received by the Board on or after 1 February 1990 will be dealt with under the terms of this Scheme except that in relation to applications in respect of injuries incurred before that date the following provisions of the 1990 scheme shall apply:

- (a) Paragraph 4(c);
- (b) Paragraph 8, but only in respect of injuries incurred before 1 October 1979 where paragraph 7 of the 1969 Scheme will continue to apply;
- (c) Paragraph 10 but only insofar as it requires the Board to award an additional sum of £5,000 in the circumstances therein prescribed;
- (d) Paragraphs 15 and 16 but only insofar as they enable the Board to entertain applications from a person who is a dependant within the meaning of section 1(3)(b) of the Fatal Accidents Act 1976 or who is a relative within the meaning of paragraph 1(aa) of Schedule 1 to the Damages (Scotland) Act 1976 other than such a person who is applying only for funeral expenses.

29. Applications for compensation received by the Board before 1 February 1990 will continue to be dealt with in accordance with paragraph 25 of the Scheme which came into operation on 1 October 1979 ("the 1979 Scheme") or the Scheme which came into operation on 21 May 1969 ("the 1969 Scheme") except that the following paragraphs of this Scheme will apply in addition to or in substitution for provisions of these schemes as specified below:

- (a) Paragraph 3 of this Scheme will apply in substitution for paragraph 4 of the 1969 Scheme and paragraph 3 of the 1979 Scheme;
- (b) Paragraph 6(c) of this Scheme will apply in substitution for paragraph 17 of the 1969 Scheme and paragraph 6(c) of the 1979 Scheme;
- (c) Paragraph 14 of this Scheme will apply additionally to applications otherwise falling to be considered under the 1969 or 1979 Schemes but only insofar as it allows the Board to require an applicant to produce evidence of loss of earnings or earning capacity;
- (d) Paragraphs 22, 23 and 25 of this Scheme will apply in substitution for paragraphs 21 and 22 of the 1969 Scheme and paragraphs 22 and 23 of the 1979 Scheme;
- (e) Paragraph 26 of this Scheme will apply additionally to applications otherwise falling to be considered under the 1969 or 1979 Schemes:
- (f) Paragraph 27 of this Scheme will apply in substitution for paragraph 23 of the 1969 Scheme and paragraph 24 of the 1979 Scheme;

30. Applications to re-open cases received before 1 February 1990 will continue to be dealt with under the terms of paragraph 25 of the 1979 Scheme. Applications to re-open cases received on or after 1 February 1990 will be considered and determined under the terms of this Scheme.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Lebanon

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many officials in his Department are detailed to handle the monitoring of, and plans to seek the release of, British hostages in the Lebanon.

Mr. Maude: A considerable number of officials both in London and in missions overseas are concerned with the hostage issue. The number involved at any one time depends upon the circumstances.

Nuclear Tests

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those states which are party to the partial test ban treaty but at the present time oppose its amendment to constitute a comprehensive ban on nuclear testing; and what are the declared reasons for each state's opposition.

Mr. Maude: It would not be appropriate for us to speculate on the views of other parties to the Treaty, or to reveal what has been said to us privately on this subject. However, 23 countries abstained or voted against the UN General assembly L25 resolution calling for the PTBT to be converted into a comprehensive test ban treaty. Those countries were the United Kingdom, the United States of America, Austria, Australia, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, Federal Republic of Germany, Finland, Greece, Ireland, Iceland, Italy, Israel, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden and Turkey.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action the United Kingdom Government have taken since May 1979 to achieve the discontinuance of all test explosions of nuclear weapons.

Mr. Maude: The United Kingdom participated in the unsuccessful trilateral negotiations on this subject, which took place from 1977 to 1980. But, for the foreseeable future, our security will depend on deterrence, based in part on the possession of nuclear weapons. That means a continuing need to test these weapons to ensure they remain effective and up to date. A comprehensive test ban therefore remains a long term goal.

Eastern Europe

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has consulted with academic experts at the School of Slavonic and East Europe Studies at the University of London in formulating his policies in response to changing socio-political developments in eastern Europe in the past six months.

Mr. Maude: No, but Ministers and officials of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office have frequent contacts with experts from the school, as they have with other academics, during which such matters are discussed.

India

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he expects to have the opportunity to discuss with the new Foreign Minister of India the possibility of India joining the nuclear non-proliferation treaty.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no plans yet to meet the new Foreign Minister of India.

Montserrat

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the chief Minister and other Ministers in Montserrat have been consulted about the adequacy of British aid to the island following the devastation caused by hurricane Hugo; and if he is satisfied that the aid given is adequate in terms of the island's medical and rehousing needs.

Mr. Sainsbury: There has been, and continues to be, close consultation with the Government of Montserrat, particularly through our development division in Barbados. I have visited Montserrat twice since hurricane Hugo for discussion with the chief Minister and others. I am satisfied with the aid provided so far. Much remains to be done and we are urgently considering the longer term needs. The chief Minister is meeting ODA officials today, 8 December.

Scientific Culture

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the achievements of the programme for progress in scientific culture, run by the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation advanced studies unit at Erice, Italy.

Mr. Maude: NATO runs an advanced study institutes programme which makes grants to individuals who apply to organise summer schools at post graduate level. Some of these have taken place at the Ettore Majorama centre for scientific culture which is an Italian institution and not organised or directly funded by NATO. This programme is of benefit to scientists from both the United Kingdom and other NATO countries.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what benefits accrue to the United Kingdom Exchequer from the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation advanced study unit at the Ettore Majorama centre for scientific culture in Erice, Italy; and what is the annual upkeep grant made available to this centre.

Mr. Maude: NATO's advanced study institutes programme makes grants to individuals who apply to organise summer schools at post-graduate level. The programme is of benefit to the scientific community in the United Kingdom and in other Alliance countries. An analysis of the precise financial benefit is not available. Some of the summer schools have taken place at the Ettore Majorama centre for scientific culture. However, this is an Italian institution and is not organised or directly funded by NATO.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Market Research

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many market research and sample surveys were carried our by or for his Department in the last 12 months; what was the cost of each; what was the total cost; how many were carried out in house; how many were carried out for his Department by outside organisations; and what percentage of the total expenditure was paid to outside organisations.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The latest period for which information is available is from 1 April 1988 to 31 March 1989. During this period, 35 market research, sample surveys and similar studies were carried out on behalf of the Department. None was carried out in-house. The costs involved were:

	Number
Under £5,000	6
£5,000 to £10,000	6
£10,000 to £20,000	13
£20,000 to £30,000	4
Over £30,000	6

Total cost = £1,257,896.

Note: These studies were at differing stages of development—not all involved client interface during 1988-89.

The Department also sponsors part of the social policy research unit at York university. They were involved in seven studies during 1988-89 at a total cost of £184,363·50.

AIDS

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will update the figures given in the reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe, on 23 June, Official Report, column 276, for the cost of diets for people with AIDS or HIV infection; if he will also give figures for the income support available to people under 25 years of age who are unemployed but still capable of work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Based upon the food component of the September 1988 retail prices index, the diet costed at £14·19 would now cost £15·43 and that of £9·46 would now cost £10·29. The income support available to people under the age of 25 years is £27·40 a week for all 18 to 24 year olds, and certain 16 to 17 year olds who, of necessity, have to live away from home; 16 to 17-year-olds who live in someone else's household may qualify for £20·80 a week.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what recent consultations he has had concerning the financial needs of people with AIDS/ARC and HIV; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what representations he has received concerning the financial needs of people with AIDS/ARC/HIV; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I have received various representations from organisations, including the Terrence Higgins trust, and from individuals. Officials have also had recent consultations with the Department of Health.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects to be able to send a substantive reply to the letter of 12 July from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe, on income support for people with AIDS/ARC/HIV; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I hope to be able to reply to the right hon. Gentleman today.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will specify any difference in treatment in regard to means-tested benefits between payments under the Vaccine Damage Payments Act 1979 and the £20,000 payments from the Macfarlane trust in respect of (a) children and (b) adults.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: All payments from the Macfarlane trust are disregarded for benefit purposes. Lump sump payments made under the Vaccine Damage Payments Act 1979 are normally taken into account as capital, unless they are placed in trust for the recipient. They are then disregarded.

(a) if the payment is for a child, until he or she is no longer a dependant;

(b) if the payment is for an adult, for 2 years, or longer in certain circumstances.

Any payments from a trust will be taken into account as income or capital in the normal way.

ENVIRONMENT

Dogs

83. Mr McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to introduce legislation for the establishment of a national registration and licence system for dogs.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We do not agree that the main problems caused by dogs would be solved by a national dog registration scheme, though consideration is being given to alternative schemes to deal with straying and fouling. Our proposed solutions are set out in the consultation paper "Action on Dogs" issued in August. Controls on dangerous dogs have already been significantly strengthened by the Dangerous Dogs Act 1989.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he intends to introduce legislation relating to dog registration; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave yesterday to the hon. Member for Dundee, East (Mr. McAllion).

European Environmental Agency

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if data deposited with the proposed European Environmental Agency will be subject to the provisions of the Official Secrets Act.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Under the terms of the draft regulation on the proposed European Environment Agency, data supplied or or emanating from the agency may be published and shall be made accessible to the public, subject to compliance with the rules of the Commission and the member states on the dissemination of information.

CFCs

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the meeting of the states parties to the Montreal protocol on chlorofluorocarbon control held in Geneva in November; and how the decisions taken at this meeting will affect Her Majesty's Government's policies to combat the greenhouse effect.

Mr. Trippier: The meeting was one of a series of preparatory meetings for the second meeting of the parties to the Montreal protocol in London next summer. Its purpose was to identify the amendments and adjustments to the protocol which will be proposed at that meeting. This was achieved. The United Kingdom, acting in concert with the European Community, has taken a leading position on the timetable for phasing out CFCs which are greenhouse gases as well as ozone depleting substances.

"Inside Sellafield"

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek to obtain for his Department's library from Channel Four television or Pip Limited a copy of (a) the transcript and (b) the videotape of the programme "Inside Sellafield" broadcast on 9 November.

Mr. Trippier: The programme has been seen and studied by several of the Department's scientific and administrative staff. There are no plans to buy a transcript or videotape for the library.

Nature Conservancy Council

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the trade unions representing the Nature Conservancy Council work force in Scotland concerning his proposed reorganisation of the National Conservancy Council; and if he will make a statement as to the nature of these representations.

Mr. Trippier: None.

Transport Planning

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has received any recent communication from the Open university's energy and environment research unit on the matter of environmental aspects of transport planning.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No.

Acid Rain

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of acid rain deposition, and contamination of groundwater by acidity is caused by monocultural foresty development in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Trippier: The Department's acid waters review group in their second report, copies of which have been placed in the Library of the House, concluded that the primary cause of acidification in sensitive areas of the United Kingdom was acid deposition from the atmosphere. Afforestation might increase the deposition of pollutants by 30 per cent. in a mature stand. The effect of the contamination of groundwater is difficult to quantify. Research by the Forestry Commission and within the Department's air pollution research programme on quantifying the effect of afforestation, including monocultural forestry, on acid deposition is continuing.

Hazardous Waste

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the number of large facilities which can handle low and intermediate level radioactive wastes for treatment and volume reduction in (a) the European Community, excluding the United Kingdom, and (b) the rest of the world.

Mr. Trippier: The Department does not maintain a comprehensive list of large overseas facilities which can handle low and intermediate-level radioactive wastes for treatment and volume reduction.

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many large chemical incinerators there are in Britain that can handle special wastes;

(2) if he will give details of the amounts found by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution of polychlorinated biphenyls and dioxin in the flue gases from the Rechem international incinerator plant at Ponteg, Pontypool; and what information he has on comparable figures of large chemical incinerators in the mainland of Europe;

(3) if he will provide an estimate of the total amount of special wastes dumped at the Leigh environmental waste disposal site at Walsall;

(4) if he will summarise the results found by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution of tests for polychlorinated biphenyls and dioxin in herbage and soil samples around the Rechem incinerator plant at Ponteg, Pontypool;

(5) what amounts of chemical waste were incinerated at the Rechem plant in Pontypool in each year from 1985 to the present time; and what quantities of polychlorinated biphenyls contaminated waste were handled each year;

(6) what estimate he has of the cumulative total amount of polychlorinated biphenyls manufactured over the last 30 years in (a) the Monsanto chemical works in Newport, Gwent, (b) Britain, (c) western Europe and (d) worldwide;

(7) what information he has as to the amount of special waste incinerated on board ships during 1988 (a) in the North sea, and (b) in European waters;

(8) what information he has as to the number of large chemical incinerators which can handle special wastes in (a) the European Community, excluding the United Kingdom, and (b) the rest of the world;

(9) what information he has as to the number of large chemical incinerators for toxic wastes worldwide having (a) a double door with an air-lock, and (b) a single door;

(10) what information he has of alternative methods to incineration now being developed or considered for the destruction of polychlorinated biphenyls;

(11) what is the total amount of special wastes that have been subjected to the Leigh environmental sealofsafe solidification process; and what proportion of this is in a non-solid form;

(12) what quantities of flyash have been imported through Swansea docks for every year from 1979 to the present time; and what are the results of analyses carried out for dioxin in such flyash;

(13) what quantities of special wastes were imported into Britain for incineration for every year from 1979 to the present time;

(14) whether Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution will consider the installation of continuous monitoring equipment to measure the amounts of polychlorinated biphenyls dioxin in the flue gas from the Rechem plant in Pontypool.

Mr. Trippier : I wrote to the hon. Member on 5 December.

Public Expenditure

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in determining public expenditure plans for 1990-91 what provision was made for the cost of (i) refuse disposal, (ii) land drainage, (iii) cemetaries and cremation, (iv) environmental and port health, (v) planning control and implementation, (vi) recreation, (vii) refuse collection and (viii) community charge collection.

Mr. Patten: Information is not available in the form requested.

An assessment of local authorities' revenue needs for these services and others was made in the standard spending assessment (SSA) for the other services block. The total SSA for other services for 1990-91 is £4,491 million. Within this total, £160 million was identified for land drainage.

The public expenditure planning total includes the credit approvals issued to local authorities and central Government grants towards local authority capital expenditure but does not include local authority self-financed capital expenditure. The provision for 1990-91 includes credit approvals and capital grants of £9 million for land drainage. There is also provision of £193 million for credit approvals for local environmental services, which include the services mentioned in the question. Of this, £33 million will be issued to authorities needing to carry out remedial works on the build up of landfill gas at waste disposal sites and £39 million will be issued to the authorities responsible for waste disposal expenditure in Greater London and the metropolitan counties.

The public expenditure planning total also includes provision for expenditure of £44 million by the Sports Council and £24 million by the Countryside Commission.

Environmental Audits

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will encourage British companies to conduct environmental audits.

Mr. Trippier: I welcome the growing practice of environmental auditing which has been adopted by industrial corporations. Such audits help to safeguard the environment by ensuring a more judicious use of resources and energy and minimising waste.

Housing (Repossession)

Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to publish the University of Bristol research report on possession action cases by local authorities.

Mr. Chope: I welcome this report by researchers at the university of Bristol which underlines the need for early action by housing managers when local authority rent arrears arise. Court proceedings can too easily substitute for effective housing management practice.

The report, published today, was based on a study of 1,200 possession action cases brought by local authorities most of which were actions to recover rent arrears. It showed that there were considerable variations in the level of rent arrears before local authorities took action in the courts. Delays meant that rent arrears often increased substantially before cases were heard in court.

The Lord Chancellor's civil justice review recommended several improvements to the current procedures for possession actions and suggested a new streamlined rent action to speed debt recovery and avoid some possession cases coming to court.

Highway Maintenance

Sir Michael Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will review the data used in calculating the highway maintenance element of the standard spending assessment relating to the treatment of winter maintenance.

Mr. David Hunt: Following representations from my hon. Friend and others, I have concluded that the formula for the highway maintenance component of standard spending assessments (SSAs) does not reflect my right hon. Friend's desired treatment of winter maintenance. We have therefore today notified the local authority associations and informed all local authorities of a revised formula. After allowing for some other data changes, this will increase the standard spending assessments component for this service for a number of non-metropolitan counties which have a high incidence of snow. I have put details in the Library. As a result the standard spending assessment for north Yorkshire will increase by £3·1 million, which is equivalent to a £6 per head reduction in the community charge bill.

Carnwath Report

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to issue a consultative paper on the recommendations of the Carnwath report.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 7 December 1989]: My right hon. Friend the then Secretary of State announced the publication of the report and his intention to consult widely about it on 5 April.

Civil Servants

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many civil servants in his Department work (a) full time and (b) part time on (i) heritage, (ii) archaeology and (iii) the royal parks.

Mr. Chris Patten [holding answer 7 December 1989]: The complement of headquarters civil servants dealing with heritage and archaeology is 392·5 full time equivalents. Within this complement there are about 17 part-time workers—most employed at the new Historic Palaces Agency. Ten officers work full-time in the Department on archaeological casework to do with the scheduling of monuments and sites. However, responsibility for advising Government on archaeological matters and for grant-aiding particular projects lies with English Heritage. Its ancient monuments division has 45 staff and a further 22 are engaged on monuments scheduling work.

The royal parks have a complement of 599 full-time equivalent staff. Within this complement there are three part-time workers.

Nature Conservancy Council

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those representations he has received (a) welcoming and (b) opposing his plans to dismember the Nature Conservancy Council.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 7 December 1989]: My Department has received a large number of representations, about the proposals to reorganise the Nature Conservancy Council. It is not possible to allocate these in a meaningful way to the precise categories envisaged by the hon. Member. A number of representations contained elements both of support and of criticism.

EMPLOYMENT

Earnings

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide for both full-time adult males and females figures corresponding to those given in his answer of 1 November Official Report, column 240, in cash and in percentages for the period 1979 to 1989, together with the number of employees represented by each category at each of the dates.

Mr. Nicholls: The available information is provided in the table:

Increases in weekly earnings, April 1979 to April 1989 and estimates of employees in employment, March 1979 and 1989

	Average earnings		Median earnings		Employees in employment
	Cash £	Per cent.	Cash £	Per cent.	Thousands 1979	1989
Males
Manufacturing	162·8	160	142·4	149	na	3,518·8
Non-manufacturing	173·6	176	145·3	161	na	7,257·5
Females
Manufacturing	99·1	165	86·0	149	1,603·1	1,226·9
Non-manufacturing	123·6	191	107·2	180	3,902·5	4,635·5

Notes:

1. Earnings data relates to full-time adult employees in Great Britain whose earnings were not affected by absence.
2. Estimates of employees in employment in Great Britain are taken from the regularly published employment series.
3. na denotes not available.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the increase in output per head and the corresponding averages and medians for manual and non-manuals in each case with a further breakdown for each of the principal manufacturing industry groups for the last 10 years to April.

Mr. Nicholls: Information is not available on output per head in the form requested. Output per head for the principal manufacturing industry groups is given in table 7.2 of the Monthly Digest of Statistics.

Ambulance and Nursing Services

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether men in the ambulance and nursing services are regarded as manual or non-manual workers.

Mr. Nicholls: Ambulance men are regarded as manuals and nurses as non-manuals in the classification of occupations used for statistical purposes by my Department.

Training Schemes

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what training schemes were referred to in the published decisions of the adjudication officers in the period between April and June 1989 that 300 claims for unemployment benefit were disallowed because of refusal or premature termination of training.

Mr. Eggar: A person can be disqualified from receiving unemployment benefit only in cases of refusal or premature termination of training, if it is a training scheme approved by the Secretary of State for the purposes of section 20(1)8(e)-(g) of the 1975 Social Security Act.

The only training scheme approved by the Secretary of State is the youth training scheme.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employment trainees have secured permanent employment in the Seaham and Peterlee areas following completion of their training.

Mr. Nicholls: Information about the destinations of people leaving employment training in the Seaham and Peterlee areas is not available.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employment trainees there are in the Seaham and Peterlee areas.

Mr. Nicholls: On 1 December 1989, the latest date for which information is available, there were 705 trainees on employment training in Seaham and Peterlee.

Older Workers

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will monitor the demand for older people to return to the work force due to the decreasing numbers of young skilled workers and ensure that returning older workers are not exploited.

Mr. Nicholls: The changing patterns of older workers' participation in the labour market are monitored through the labour force survey.

The onus is on employers to offer terms and conditions which encourage older workers to remain in or return to the labour force. The Government have emphasised the impact on employers of the declining number of young people and will continue to stress to employers the importance of making the best use of the abilities and skills of all people in the labour force, particularly under-utilised groups such as older workers.

Lead

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what level of lead in the bloodstream is considered to be medically safe for industrial workers working on processes which bring them into regular contact with lead; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The Control of Lead at Work Regulations 1980 and the accompanying approved code of practice specify that where the level of lead in the blood is greater than 70 microgrammes per 100 millilitres (or 40 microgrammes per 100 millilitres for a women of reproductive capacity), the worker should be removed from further exposure to lead until the blood-lead levels have fallen below these concentrations.

Working Mothers

Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the proportion of mothers of children aged five years to 11 years who are in (a) part-time, and (b) full-time work for the latest year that figures are available.

Mr. Nicholls: Among women in Great Britain whose youngest dependent child was aged at least five years but under 11 it is estimated, using information from the labour force survey, that in spring 1988 just over 45 per cent. were in part-time employment and about 18½ per cent. were in full-time employment.

Disabled Persons

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the reasons for his decision not to hold centrally information about the numbers of firms adhering to the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944; and whether these compliance levels will be analysed centrally before any recommendation concerning the future of the quota system is made by him.

Mr. Eggar: Information about the number of firms adhering to the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944 is held centrally. However, this does not include the more detailed information about specific industries requested in the hon. Gentleman's question on 6 November 1989 at column 478. To assemble and hold such information centrally would be disproportionately costly.

Information on quota compliance levels is being considered in the internal review of services to people with disabilities which this Department is currently undertaking.

SCOTLAND

Health Boards

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for each health board the amount spent on advertising for each of the last three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information available from health boards' annual accounts about advertising costs is shown in the table:

Health board	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89
Argyll and Clyde	69,071	102,687	90,722
Ayrshire and Arran	63,175	71,459	98,574

Western Isles	17,852	21,956	18,282
Total	773,105	984,455	1,122,993

Public Appointments

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many persons above the age of (a) 60, (b) 65 and (c) 70 years he has appointed to public bodies in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Rifkind: I do not have comprehensive information of this kind. If the hon. Lady has any particular point in mind, I should be glad if she would write to me about it.

Enterprise Companies

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much he expects to be spent in the present financial year to assist the development of local enterprise companies in Scotland.

Mr. Lang: It is not possible to identify separately the administrative costs incurred by the Scottish Office, Scottish Development Agency, Highlands and Islands Development Board and Training Agency in 1989-90 in relation to the development of local enterprise companies. The provision of development funding to local enterprise companies—in the lowlands to be made jointly by the Scottish Development Agency and Training Agency, and in the highlands and islands to be made jointly by the Highlands and Islands Development Board and Training Agency—is not likely to exceed £0·2 million in 1989-90.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland under which class of the Scottish Office vote moneys are to be paid out for the development of local enterprise companies.

Mr. Lang: The provision of development funding to local enterprise companies in the lowlands will be made jointly by the Scottish Development Agency and Training Agency and in the Highlands and Islands by the Highlands and Islands Development Board and Training Agency. My right hon. and learned Friend funds the Scottish Development Agency and the Highlands and Islands Development Board from subheads A1 and B1 respectively of class XVI, vote 3. Resources for the Training Agency's activities in Scotland are provided under class XVI, vote 4, subhead A1.

Tourism

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much was spent by (a) Scottish Development Agency and (b) the Highlands and Islands Development Board in promoting tourism and the tourist industry in each of the last five financial years.

Mr. Lang: The most recent figures available are as follows:

(a) Scottish Development Agency

Financial year	Expenditure £ million
1984-85	0·3
1985-86	0·3
1986-87	3·7
1987-88	0·1
1988-89	Nil

(b) Highlands and Islands Development Board

Financial year	Expenditure £ million
1984-85	8·2
1985-86	9·0
1986-87	8·7
1987-88	8·2
1988-89	8·8

Notes:

1. The Scottish Development Agency figures cover loan and equity finance for tourism projects which meet its normal investment criteria and tourist projects under schemes for urban and rural development. In addition, a number of feasibility studies, land engineering and property development projects funded by the agency may have tourism benefits.
2. Provision by the Highlands and Islands Development board is through its marketing and projects programmes and under its section 8 assistance scheme. The above figures do not include expenditure on salaries and administration.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he anticipates roles for the tourist industry and those involved in promoting tourism within the proposed local enterprise companies, Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: I expect local enterprise companies to reflect the importance of tourism in their areas. Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise will be able to draw upon tourism expertise in the same way as the Highlands and Islands Development Board, the Scottish Development Agency and the Training Agency.

Voluntary Organisations

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement about his Department's decision to withdraw funding from the East Lothian Council for Voluntary Service; and if he has any proposals for alternative support for voluntary organisations in East Lothian.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 30 November 1989]: I shall write to the hon. Member.

DEFENCE

Nuclear Submarines (India)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment his Department has made of the security implications for the United Kingdom of the acquisition of nuclear powered submarines by India.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: There are no apparent security implications for the United Kingdom arising from the acquisition of nuclear-powered submarines by India.

Nuclear Tests

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the United Kingdom Government's current approach to the seismic verification of treaties constraining nuclear testing;

(2) if he will outline the important verification difficulties that remain to be resolved before an agreement can be reached by the United Kingdom Government on a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. and learned Friend the Member for Putney (Mr. Mellor) on 27 June 1988 at column 61, and to the working paper on seismic monitoring tabled in the conference on disarmament in 1985 (CD 610), a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many scientific personnel are currently employed by the United Kingdom Government or by Government-sponsored enterprises working on verification of a global comprehensive test ban treaty.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Ministry of Defence's research establishment at Blacknest, near Aldermaston, employs 27 scientific personnel, including a number of contract staff, who undertake seismological research which could be used in establishing the requirements of a verification regime for further constraints on nuclear testing.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the United Kingdom Government's annual expenditure, for each year since May 1979, on verification of a global comprehensive test ban treaty.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Information on the costs of seismological research undertaken at Blacknest, near Aldermaston, dating back to 1979 could be provided only at disproportionate cost. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 19 October 1989 at column 251 concerning the costs of this work for the financial year 1988-89.

Officers and Other Ranks

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the levels of recruitment and outflow for officers and other ranks in all three services in the periods January to September 1988 and January to September in the current year.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Numbers for intake to the services from civil life and outflow from the services are as follows:

	Intake January to September		Outflow January to September

RAF Cadets (Exchange)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the implication for national security of the proposed exchange of Royal Air Force flying cadets from Bracknell and Cranwell colleges with Soviet flying cadets from the Gagarin Air Academy in Moscow.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: A successful exchange of visits has taken place this year between the directing staff of the Royal Air Force Staff College Bracknell and the Gagarin Academy. Further exchanges are being considered but there are no plans for an exchange of air force cadets. Care has been taken to ensure that defence contacts with the Soviet Union meet security requirements.

Long-range Air-launched Missiles

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether approval has been sought from the United States Government for the Anglo-French co-production of a long range air-launched missile.

Mr. Alan Clark: It is not clear what long-range air-launched missile the hon. Member has in mind, but in no case has such approval been sought.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions have taken place with (a) British Aerospace, (b) Thomson-CSF and (c) the French Government about the co-production of a long-range, air-launched missile.

Mr. Alan Clark: None.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what specifications have been provided to British Aerospace in respect of the production of a new long-range, air-launched missile.

Mr. Alan Clark: None.

BAe and Thomson-CSF

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions the Government have had with the joint venture company recently formed by British Aerospace and Thomson-CSF.

Mr. Alan Clark: The MOD has been informed by BAe and Thomson-CSF of the companies' proposal to form a joint venture defence weapon system company to be known as Eurodynamics. Subject to consideration of national security and competition implications in the light of the detailed proposals by the companies, the MOD would welcome the proposition.

Royal Navy (Defence Missile System)

Mr. Lee: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the Royal Navy's requirement for a support defence missile system.

Mr. Neubert: I can announce today that we intend, subject to the satisfactory conclusion of negotiations with the other participating nations, to join a 24-month project definition phase for the local area missile system (LAMS) variant of the family of anti-air missile systems next year. We have therefore decided, after very careful consideration, not to participate in the next phase of the NATO anti-air warfare system (NAAWS) project.

The choice between these two collaborative programmes has been an extremely difficult one because both projects offer the prospect of a highly capable ship defence system. Many complex factors have had to be assessed; particular consideration has been given to the balance between technical performance and programme cost and risk. The United Kingdom's requirement for a SDMS is linked to the MOD's plans to procure an anti-air warfare (AAW) escort ship to come into service at the turn of the century to replace the type 42 destroyers. On balance, it has been concluded that, of the two projects, FAMS offers the better prospect of providing an affordable and capable system within that time scale.

Running Costs Limit

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he proposes to make any change to the 1989-90 running costs limit for his Department.

Mr. Tom King: The running costs limit for the Ministry of Defence will be reduced by £12,907,000 from £5,162,254,000 to £5,149,347,000. It reflects a decrease of £28,907,000 to compensate for an overspend in 1988-89 offset by a £16,000,000 increase for additional security measures. This follows the normal practice of reducing the limit for one financial year by the amount of any overspend in the previous year.

HEALTH

Ambulance Service

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list, for each year since 1979, the total number of ambulance vehicles, staff and costs, at 1989 prices by region.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested is shown in the tables:

Notes to the table:

1. The figures have been expressed at 1988-89 prices by the use of the Gross Domestic Product Deflator.
2. From 1987-88 the South West Thames regional health authority accounts for the expenditure of the London Ambulance Service. In earlier years the costs were shared by the four Thames regional health authorities.

AIDS

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he will be taking to prevent double counting in anonymous AIDS testing.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In any anonymous survey there is a possibility of double counting. However, this problem is taken into account in the survey design and can also be minimised by appropriate statistical methods.

Funding (Leicestershire District Health Authority)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on representations he has received for additional funding for the Leicestershire district health authority.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. and learned Friend has received no recent representations for additional funding for Leicestershire health authority.

Doctors and Dentists Review Body

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will indicate how much additional money he has recommended to the doctors and dentists review body as the sum needed to take into account the extra work for general practices arising from the new contract;

(2) if he will publish his Department's evidence to the doctors and dentists review body.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No. There is a long-standing agreement between the parties concerned that evidence to the doctors and dentists review body is not published until after the Government have announced their decisions on the recommendations made by the review body.

Child Migrants

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action his Department is taking on grants to assist child migrants; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department is considering a grant application from the Child Migrants trust. Officials have met and are in contact with representatives of the Child Migrants trust to discuss how the Department might assist. We are unable to make a decision about the trust's grant application until extra information requested is provided and considered.

Phoenix House, Liverpool

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many drug addicts used services provided by Phoenix house, Liverpool during the past 12 months; and if he will make a statement on the future of Phoenix house.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not held centrally. Phoenix house is a major non-statutory organisation providing a variety of services for drug misusers to which the Government have allocated over £1 million under the central funding initiative to develop drug misuse services.

WALES

Health Service

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many and which community health councils in Wales have made representations to him opposing the National Health Service White Paper "Working for Patients".

Mr. Grist: The White Paper includes a wide range of measures to improve the organisation and management of the NHS so as to maximise patient care. Community health councils are in frequent correspondence with the Department about many issues. In recent months many such representations have concerned one or more aspects of individual White Paper proposals, and have included views supporting or expressing concern about them. It would be possible only at disproportionate expense to analyse these in the manner requested by the hon. Gentleman.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the number of National Health Service beds available for the elderly in each Welsh health authority area from 1985 to 1988 inclusive.

Mr. Grist: The number of beds in specialities designated as geriatric, psychogeriatric and elderly mentally infirm is shown in the following table. Elderly patients can, however, be treated in beds allocated to other specialities.

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how any representations he has received from general ractitioners in Wales (a) opposing and (b) supporting he National Health Service White Paper "Working for atients".

Mr. Grist: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my reply of 6 ecember to the hon. Member for Ynys Môn (Mr. Jones).

Pensioners

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the number of pensioners aged (a) 75 to 85 years and (b) 85 years and over in each Welsh county in numbers, and as a percentage of the total population in the areas concerned.

Mr. Grist: The estimated populations aged 75 to 85 and aged 85 and over of each county in numerical and percentage terms are shown in the following table:

	Aged 75-84 inclusive		Aged 85 and over

Rural Transport

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for ales what plans he has for co-ordinating bus and coach metables in rural Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: None. It is for bus operators to issue eir own timetables. County councils have powers to romote bus and coach services in conjunction with ommercial operators if they so wish.

Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for ales what plans he has to provide a subsidy to Dyfed ounty council to assist in providing a bus-rail link from ampeter to Llandovery.

Mr. Peter Walker: None. The county council have owers to subsidise a service from their own resources.

Mentally Handicapped People

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to visit the St. Augustinusstichting village at Gemep, Holland, to investigate the pioneering work undertaken to create a village community for the mentally handicapped.

Mr. Grist: The principles underlying the provision of mental handicap services in Wales are set out in the Government's all Wales mental handicap strategy. There are no proposals to alter these principles.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he is considering alternative futures for Llanfrechfa Grange hospital on the lines of the village community for the mentally handicapped at St. Augustinusstichting, Gemep, Holland.

Mr. Grist: Proposals for any substantial variation in the service provided in a district are a matter in the first instance for the health authority.

Drug Addicts

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what centres exist for the treatment of drug addicts residing in each of the counties of Wales; and whether he has any proposals for increasing the provision.

Mr. Grist: The provision of services and facilities for drug misusers in their area is essentially a matter for individual health and local authorities to determine. Existing and planned local services will suffice for the needs of the majority of problem drug misusers but there remains a small number of cases where more specialist help is needed. Two in-patient units exist with special interest in such cases. These are the Adfer unit in South Glamorgan and a unit at the North Wales hospital, Denbigh. In addition, we are aware of two voluntary sector projects which can provide residential rehabilitation facilities for drug misusers. These are the Rhoserchan project near Aberystwyth, and Teen Challenge at Llanelli.

To supplement and support those local services the Government established in 1986 the central initiative to combat drug misuse. That initiative provides additional increasing resources for statutory and voluntary services. The current annual provision is around £1·5 million, details of which I announced in April of this year. Copies of that announcement are available in the Library of the House. Future provision will be announced in the new year.

Water

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales for which sites in Wales he has exercised his power under section 42 of Part II of the Control of Pollution Act 1974 to issue certificates exempting discharges from the public register held by the water authority; what was the name of the plant operator; and on what dates the certificates were issued.

Mr. Grist: None.

Welsh Language Teaching

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to announce his decisions in respect of the secondary schools which have applied for exemption from the provision in the national curriculum to teach Welsh to pupils in years one to three.

Mr. Peter Walker: I am currently considering responses to the consultation on my proposals for Welsh in the national curriculum and aim to publish draft orders for attainment targets and programmes of study around the end of the year.

I shall reach decisions about the case for exempting individual schools in good time for the beginning of implementation in Autumn 1990. Before doing so I shall want to consult the local education authorities for their views.

Correspondence

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many letters his Department has received during the 1988-89 parliamentary Session from hon. Members representing Welsh constituencies; and what was the average length of time between the receipt of the correspondence and the sending of a reply.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 5 December 1989]: My Department received 2,997 letters from hon. Members representing Welsh constituencies during the 1988-89 parliamentary Session. Replies were sent, on average, 17 working days after receipt.

ENERGY

Market Research

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many market research and sample surveys were carried out by or for his Department in the last 12 months; what was the cost of each; what was the total cost; how many were carried out in-house; how many were carried out for his Department by outside organisations; and what percentage of the total expenditure was paid to outside organisations.

Mr. Wakeham: All 46 surveys carried out for my Department in the last year were placed with outside organisations at a total cost of £705,000. Individual amounts are commercially confidential.

"Inside Sellafield"

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will seek to obtain for his Department's library from Channel Four television or Pip Limited a copy of (a) the transcript and (b) the videotape of the programme "Inside Sellafield" broadcast on 9 November.

Mr. Wakeham: No.

Retired Miners

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many (a) retired miners, (b) miners retired early through ill health and (c) miners made redundant, are in receipt of fuel or cash in lieu of allowances; and how many widows are in receipt of fuel or cash in lieu of allowances.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Concessionary fuel is a matter for the British Coal Corporation. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Greenhouse Effect

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a year-by-year projection for the period of 1990 to 2010 on the likely introduction of gas-fired power plants for electricity production, by mine output; and what contribution this will make to mitigation of the greenhouse global warming effect.

Mr. Michael Spicer: It is for the electricity industry to determine the type and amount of plant needed to meet expected demand. Gas-fired generating plant will have a contribution to make to reduction in emission of carbon dioxide, one of the greenhouse gases.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to paragraph 1.6 of Her Majesty's Government's response, HC611, to the Energy Committee's fourth special report on energy policy implications of the greenhouse effect, if he will specify what is meant by bottom-up pressure of sensible ideas; and how he defines sensible ideas in this context.

Mr. Peter Morrison: In the context of research relating to the greenhouse effect, it is appropriate that objectives should be specified clearly, in advance, before projects are funded. The scientific and engineering community continues to put forward a variety of suggestions for research, which can be appraised against appropriate objectives. These suggestions represent a bottom-up pressure of ideas. Those proposals which can make a contribution to our scientific understanding, or to possible ways of dealing with the consequences of the greenhouse effect, are examples of sensible ideas.

Research

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if his Department, or the energy technology support unit at Harwell, is currently conducting any collaborative research with the Swedish National Energy Administration; and whether there are any plans for future collaboration.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The primary vehicle for collaborative research with Sweden is under the auspices of International Energy Agency. Both the United Kingdom and Sweden are very active within the Agency and there is collaboration on a large number of topics, including, coal combustion, solar heating and cooling and wind energy. In addition, separated agreements exist between the Swedish national energy administration and the energy technology support unit on research, development and demonstration of bioenergy and with my Department on the energy database. My Department is always receptive to opportunities for appropriate research and development collaboration.

Collaboration on geothermal hot dry rocks took place in 1986 when my Department funded and participated in a viscous stimulation of a 500m hole drilled in Sweden.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what publications produced by (a) the energy research group and (b) the energy and environment research unit of the Open university are in his departmental library; and if he will make a statement on the utility of Open university energy research publications in informing his policies.

Mr. Wakeham: The Department of Energy's library holds the following publications of the Open university energy research group:

Combined heat and power: a discussion of Energy paper 20—R. Armson. 1977.
A critique of the electricity industry. 1976.

The library holds no publications by the Open university energy and environment research unit.

The library purchases or borrows publications when so requested by officers of the Department or when their contents seem relevant to current departmental work and to the Department's policy-making.

Electricity

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the total amount per annum of dry weight biomass available for combustion to produce electricity; and how much of this fuel source is currently used in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The extent to which biomass can be made available for electricity generation depends on the arrangements made for its collection and combustion and their economics. Energy Paper 55, published by my Department estimated that biomass could contribute between 4 million and 15 million tonnes of coal equivalent per year to United Kingdom energy supplies by 2025. In principle all this could be used for electricity generation. Current utilisation is estimated to be about 0·8 million tonnes of coal equivalent per year.

Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what recent suggestions his Department has received from non-governmental organisations in regard to policy proposals for Her Majesty's Government's delegation to the fourth review conference of the non-proliferation treaty in Geneva in August 1990.

Mr. Michael Spicer: None.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what specific assistance in energy conversion and electricity production technologies, including pollution abatement controls, have been made available to each Comecon member state in eastern Europe in each year since 1979; and what plans there are to increase assistance in the future;

(2) what technologies designated to improve energy efficiency in the domestic, commercial and industrial sectors have been made available to eastern European member states of Comecon since 1979.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My Department has a co-operation agreement with the Soviet Union covering:

(a) oil and gas
(b) energy efficiency
(c) coal, and
(d) electricity production.

A number of Comecon countries also have access to the results of the Department's passive solar design R & D programme through the United Kingdom's participation in the UN Economic Commission for Europe's energy efficiency programme.

The Department participates in a scientific collaboration agreement with Hungary. Other assistance to Comecon countries in the energy field is given through trade, within Comecom rules: energy efficiency technology, for example, has been supplied to a number of Comecon countries. As I said in my speech to energy technologists at Cambridge recently, developments in eastern Europe underline this area as an important market for the future and I believe there are real commercial opportunities for the United Kingdom.

Plutonium

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects to publish the civil plutonium production figures for 1988-89; and what it has cost him to prepare this data.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The figures were published on 5 December and copies placed in the Library of the House. My Department's role is to co-ordinate the information for publication. The bulk of the work has been done by the Central Electricity Generating Board, the South of Scotland Electricity Board, British Nuclear Fuels plc and the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority.

Efficiency

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many companies are currently involved in their best efficiency practice scheme in the sectors of steel, ceramics, chemicals, food and drink, motors and drivers, and textiles.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The direct involvement of companies in these sectors in the Best Practice programme which started in April 1989 is currently as tabulated. In addition many more companies have been involved by way of participation in consultations leading to future participation in projects or to future development of the programme.

Sector	Companies involved in projects	Companies involved in supply of quantative information.
Steel	5	23
Ceramics	0	55
Chemicals	8	31
Food and drinks	4	30
Motors and drives	5	0

Oil Price

Mr. Rost: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what change in the demand for energy he anticipates occurring in 30 years if the real price of oil rises (a) to $43 a barrel, and (b) to $23 a barrel.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Future energy demand will depend —amongst other things—on the rate of economic growth, the price of fuels and technological progress.

The Department of Energy produced a set of scenarios for energy demand—based on IEA price assumptions—in a report entitled:

> "'An Evaluation of Energy Related Greenhouse Gas Emissions and Measures to Ameliorate Them'" October 1989."

The figures reported are baseline scenarios against which various technical options could be set. The report forms part of the United Kingdom contribution to the work of the intergovernmental panel on climate change and a copy has been lodged in the House of Commons Library.

THE ARTS

Public Libraries

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will make a statement on the Government's spending plans for public libraries.

Mr. Luce: The Government do not plan local authority spending on public libraries or on other services. Revenue support grant is paid in support of local authorities' revenue expenditure generally. For 1990-91, it is proposed to distribute revenue support grant on the basis that it is appropriate for authorities in England in aggregate to incur revenue spending of £32·8 billion, in the provision of services. Of this amount, £5·004 billion is assumed to be spent on the other services block, a group of smaller services including libraries.

CIVIL SERVICE

Early Retirement

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service how many civil servants have taken early retirement for each year since 1979.

Mr. Ryder: I have been asked to reply.

The earliest year for which this information is readily available is 1982-83. The details are as follows:

Non-industrial civil service

1982-83	1983-84	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88	1988-89[1]

Building Societies

Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will make a statement on the role of the Building Societies Commission on the proposed merger of the Guardian building society and the Cheltenham and Gloucester building society;

(2) if he will take steps to enable the Building Societies Commission to ensure that members of the Guardian and Cheltenham and Gloucester building societies are provided with statements of the case for and against the merger of those societies, and are given sufficient time to reach a considered decision.

Mr. Ryder: The Building Societies Commission has two statutory functions placed upon it under the provisions of sections 93 to 96 and schedule 16 (mergers) of the Building Societies Act 1986. First, it has to approve the contents of the statement required to be sent to all members under schedule 16 to the Act and, second, if the members approve the requisite resolutions, to confirm the merger. The commission has approved the statutory statements issued by the societies in connection with the proposed merger between the Guardian building society and the Cheltenham and Gloucester building society. If the special and borrowing members resolutions are passed, the commission intends to consider the societies' applications for confirmation on 14 February 1990, when it will consider any representations made by interested parties. That hearing must be directed to consideration of whether the statutory procedures and the provisions of the 1986 Act and the societies' rules have been complied with. It is not for the commission to consider the merits of the terms of a merger.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Ministerial Responsibilities

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what additional responsibilities have been assumed by the Minister for the Economy in Northern Ireland in the Department of Economic Development since 25 July;

(2) what are the current responsibilities of the Minister for the Environment in Northern Ireland;

(3) what changes have been made to the budget of the Minister for the Environment in Northern Ireland since 25 July;

(4) what changes have been made to the budgets of the Minister for the Economy in Northern Ireland in the Department of Economic Development and the Department of the Environment since 25 July.

Mr. Brooke: All Northern Ireland Departments are under my direction and control and I have allocated economic development and environment responsibilities as follows:

Mr. Needham
Urban Regeneration;
Urban Development Grant;
Belfast Action Teams;
Promotion of Belfast City Centre;
Planning Service;
Lands Service; and Ports and Harbours.

Mr. Peter Bottomley
The remainder of the Department of Environment functions.

The main changes to budgetary allocations since 25 July are summarised in the table and have been reflected as necessary in the autumn Supplementary Estimate approved on 4 December.

Department of Economic Development
Industry Trade and Employment;
Increase of £42 million reflecting additional provision for Shorts and Harland and Wolff offset by emerging savings on Industrial Development and Labour Market services.
Energy;
Reduction of £8 million through additional loan repayments by NIE.

Department of Environment
Mr. Needham's responsibilities
Reduction of £2 million mainly reflecting delays in Urban Development Schemes coming forward for grant.
Mr. Bottomley's responsibilities
Roads and Transport;
Net reduction of £1 million reflecting several minor changes.
Housing;
Reduction of £42 million reflecting interest savings from the write-off of loans to NIHE. The reduction did not affect the resources available for physical housing programmes. Indeed the availability of increased Housing receipts has facilitated an increase in the gross expenditure by the NIHE.
Environmental and Miscellaneous Services;
Additional £1 million reflecting several minor changes.

The changes to budgets do not involve any increase in total public expenditure.

Motorways (Accidents)

Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many road accidents have been reported involving stationary vehicles on motorway hard shoulders in each of the years 1980 to 1989; and how many people were (a) injured and (b) killed.

Mr. Cope: The Chief Constable of the RUC has advised me that the relevant records were computerised in 1986 and information for the years prior to that could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. The information for the years 1986 to 1989 is set out in the following table:

	Number of accidents	Persons killed	Persons injured
1986	3	—	4
1987	3	—	8
1988	3	—	4
[1]1989	1	—	1

Shorts Base

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what date construction work commenced on the new building, roadworks, car park and entrance at the Shorts base at Lough Mann situated on the Downpatrick-Ballynahinch road in South Down.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Construction work had already started on the building without the required planning permission in May 1989. A temporary access for which permission had been granted for a period of one year on 24 January 1989 had already been completed by May 1989. No new car parking facilities are proposed.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what date or dates the planning department carried out inspections at the site of the building currently under construction at the Shorts base at Lough Mann situated on the Downpatrick-Ballynahinch road in South Down.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: An inspection was carried out on 16 May 1989 when Short Brothers plc was told that planning permission was required for the works already commenced. A further site inspection took place on 1 September 1989.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consultations were held between the local farmers, householders, etc. and the town and country planning service about the building under construction, new roadworks, new entrance and car park at the Shorts base at Lough Mann situated on the Downpatrick-Ballynahinch road in South Down.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Prior to 5 December 1989 the planning application received from Short Bros. plc was for a temporary access to the site for which planning permission was granted on 24 January 1989 for a period of one year. This application was advertised and processed in the normal way and attracted no local representations.

A planning application for the remainder of the works was made complete on 5 December 1989 and it will be advertised and processed in the normal way.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consultations were held between the management of Shorts aircraft factory and officials in the Department of the Environment town and country planning service and the Department of the Environment roads service about the building currently under construction, the new car park, and the new entrance at the Lough Mann base situated on the Downpatrick-Ballynahinch road in South Down.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Following a meeting on site in May 1989 with the divisional planning officer, Short Bros. contacted the Department on several occasions and obtained advice on the information required to allow for the proper processing of a planning application. The application was not made complete until 5 December 1989.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what inspections were carried out by the planning department at the site of the building under construction at the Shorts base at Lough Mann situated on the Downpatrick-Ballynahinch road in South Down.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Two site inspections were carried out, one in May 1989 and the other in September 1989.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what type of work will be carried out in the new building currently under construction at the Shorts base at Lough Mann situated on the Downpatrick-Ballynahinch road in South Down.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A current planning application describes the proposed development as an extension to the firm's storage and assembly facility at Lough Mann.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when was the planning application in respect of the new entrance and new car park at the Shorts base at Lough Mann situated on the Downpatrick-Ballynahinch road in South Down submitted and when was approval issued.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: An application for planning permission for a temporary access on to the Downpatrick-Ballynahinch road was received on 31 October 1988 and approved for a period of one year on 24 January 1989. No new car parking facilities were shown on this application.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when was the planning application made and approval issued in respect of the two signs erected on either side of the Downpatrick/Ballynahinch road adjacent to the new entrance at the Shorts base at Lough Mann situated on the Downpatrick-Ballynahinch road in South Down.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: An application for planning permission was not made for the erection of these signs. As Short Bros plc has undertaken to remove the signs by 24 January 1990, the DOE(NI) does not intend to take any action on the matter.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when was the planning application submitted and approved in respect of the new building under construction at the Shorts base at Lough Mann situated on the Downpatrick-Ballynahinch road in South Down; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: An incomplete planning application was made on 8 September 1989, and completed on 5 December 1989. This application will be subjected to the normal consultation process before Down district council is asked to consider the DOE(NI) opinion on the proposal.

Security

Mr. Ron Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the security situation in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Cope: So far this year, 60 people have died as a result of the security situation in Northern Ireland; including nine RUC officers, 12 Regular soldiers (including two members of the UDR) and 39 civilians.

The security threat remains at high, but the professional and courageous efforts of the security forces have resulted in 360 people being charged with serious terrorist-type offences. A large amount of weaponry, ammunitions and explosives has also been recovered in the Province. There have also been substantial finds of arms and explosives by the Garda Siochana in the Republic of Ireland.

Adrian Carroll (Murder)

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the Royal Ulster Constabulary has in its possession a gun the ballistics of which match the weapon used in the murder of Adrian Carroll in Armagh in November 1983.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 8 December 1989]: This is a matter for the Chief Constable, but I understand that police checks on recovered weapons which it is believed could have been used in the murder of Mr. Carroll have not revealed a matching weapon.

Civil Service

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentages of the Northern Ireland civil servants described in the third report of the equal opportunity unit for the Northern Ireland Civil Service as being educated outside Northern Ireland or whose religion was not known were (a) non-industrial civil servants, (b) in higher grades or (c) born in Great Britain.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 4 December 1989]: Of the 2,933 Northern Ireland civil servants educated outside Northern Ireland or whose religion was not known at 1 January 1989; 57·1 per cent.—1,675—were non-industrial civil servants; 12·1 per cent.—355—were in higher grades; deputy principal equivalent or above in the non-industrial Civil Service.

The Northern Ireland Civil Service does not monitor the number of staff born in Great Britain and the information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many employees of the Northern Ireland Civil Service were educated in Great Britain.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 7 December 1989]: At 1 January 1989, the Northern Ireland Civil Service had 754 staff who, in its equal opportunities monitoring system, were classified as having been educated outside Northern Ireland. It is not known how many were educated in Great Britain and the information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Rivers and Lakes

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total number of (a) rivers and (b) lakes maintained by the Department of Agriculture, Fisheries Division, in each district council area in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 7 December 1989]: The Department of Agriculture currently maintains a total of 61 waters consisting of rivers, lakes and reservoirs for angling by those members of the public who purchase a Department permit.

The location and details of all Department of Agriculture fisheries are published in an angling guide and I have arranged for a copy to be sent to the hon. Member.

It is not possible to allocate fisheries to individual district council areas as the information is not held in the form requested and some of the fisheries can run through two or more district council areas.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total number of Northern Ireland Civil Service employees who are classified by the equal opportunities unit as being either educated outside Northern Ireland or their religion was not known; and how many of these employees are employed at grade H, and each other higher grade, in the non-industrial sector.

Mr. Cope [holding answer 7 December 1989]: A total of 2,933, as at 1 January 1989, of whom the following were in the non-industrial Civil Service.

Grade Level	A	81
	B	97
	C	177
	D	172
	E	438
	F	250
	G	206
	H	254

Roads

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the estimated hourly vehicle capacity of (a) Ballyrobin road, Templepatrick side of traffic lights (b) Ballyrobin road; airport side of traffic lights, (c) Killead road, Killead village and (d) Oldstone road, north of traffic lights.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 8 December 1989]: There is no agreed definition of capacity for roads. It is not possible to provide these figures.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Training

34. Mr. Cran: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners, how much is spent each year on the training of the clergy.

Mr. Alison: The commissioners have no responsibility for the training of the clergy, and their funds are not available for the purpose. However, I understand that the latest figure (for 1988) was £3·9 million, though I must explain that this relates exclusively to ordination training. Should my hon. Friend wish to pursue his interest in this area, I will willingly give him the name and address of the body with which he should correspond.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

ODA Debt

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total outstanding Overseas Development Administration debt in (a) 1982, (b) 1988 and (c) for each country in 1988; how much was repaid each year between 1982 and 1988; and under what terms the credits had been made available.

Mrs. Chalker: The figures for the calendar year 1988 are not yet available and therefore the following figures are given on a financial year basis for the sake of consistency. The outstanding debt totals at the end of 1982-83 and 1988-89 were £1,208,126,092 and £1,176,970,296 respectively; the breakdown of the latter by country is shown in table 1. The figures do not include loans which at the relevant dates had been converted to grants under the retrospective terms adjustment arrangements or written off. In the case of India an equivalent measure to retrospective terms adjustment was adopted in the form of local costs finance equal to the payments due. The amounts repaid between 1982-83 and 1988-89 are shown in table 2. The terms of loans varied considerably and details of all loans could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Staff (Ages)

38. Mr. Livsey: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, what proportion of House staff employed on 1 November were (a) under 18 years, (b) under 25 years and (c) over 50 years.

Mr. Beith: The total number of staff employed at 1 November 1989 was 988 of whom (a) 1 (or 0·1 per cent.) was under 18; (b) 111 (or 11·23 per cent.) were under 25; and (c) 274 (or 27·73 per cent.) were over 50 years of age.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Maladministration

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General if he will propose an amendment of the law to enable maladministration by judges and court officials to be reviewed by the Parliamentary Commissioner when they are not acting in a purely judicial capacity.

The Attorney-General: No.

Judicial Appointments

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Attorney-General (1) how many black judges he estimates there will be in the year 2000; and what percentage of the total this will be;

(2) what percentage and number of county court judges are black;

(3) what percentage and number of judges who sit full time in the Crown court are black;

(4) what percentage and number of judges who sit in the Court of Appeal and Court of Criminal Appeal are black;

(5) what percentage and number of judges who sit in the Divisional Court are black;

(6) what percentage and number of judges who sit in the High Court are black;

(7) what percentage and number of those who sit in the House of Lords in its capacity as an apellate court are black;

(8) what percentage and number of recorders are black.

The Attorney-General: Records are not kept of the ethnic origin of members of the judiciary or of candidates for judicial appointment but our understanding of the present position is as follows.

There are no black Lords of Appeal in Ordinary, Lord Justices of Appeal or High Court judges. There are 422 circuit judges of whom one is black (0·2 per cent.). There are 703 recorders of whom five are black (0·7 per cent.).

It is impossible to produce a meaningful estimate of the number of individuals from ethnic minorities who will hold judicial office in the year 2000. Every effort however is being made to encourage black lawyers in the appropriate age groups to put themselves forward for judicial office, and it is the Lord Chancellor's hope that by 2000 there will be many more black judges.

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Attorney-General (1) how many female judges he estimates there will be in the year 2000; and what percentage of the total this will be;

(2) what percentage and number of county court judges are female;

(3) what percentage and number of judges who sit full-time in the Crown courts are female;

(4) what percentage and number of judges who sit in the Divisional Court are female;

(5) what percentage and number of recorders are female;

(6) what percentage and number of those who sit in the House of Lords in its capacity as an appellate court are female;

(7) what percentage and numbers of judges who sit in the Court of Appeal and Court of Criminal Appeal are female;

(8) what percentage and number of judges who sit in the High Court are female.

The Attorney-General: The following figures are correct as at 1 December 1989.

There are 10 Lords of Appeal in Ordinary, of whom none is female.

There are 27 Lords Justices of Appeal, of whom one is female (3·7 per cent).

There are 81 High Court judges, of whom one is female (1·2 per cent).

There are 422 circuit judges, of whom 17 are female (4 per cent).

There are 703 recorders, of whom 25 are female (3·6 per cent).

It is impossible to produce a meaningful estimate of the number of female judges there will be in the year 2000.

Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Attorney-General (1) what steps he is taking to increase the number of female judges; (2) what steps he is taking to increase the numbers of black judges.

The Attorney-General: Candidates for judicial appointment are considered on their merits, regardless of sex or ethnic origin. The Lord Chancellor has, however, made it clear on a number of occasions that he would very much like to appoint more women and members of ethnic minorities to judicial office, and has urged groups representing women lawyers and lawyers from ethnic minorities to encourage those of their members in the appropriate age groups to put themselves forward as candidates for appointment.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Procedural Reform

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make a statement on his assessment of the case for reform of the procedures of the House.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes).

Facilities (Visitors)

43. Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will review the earliest time at which visitors can be admitted at St. Stephen's Entrance; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The arrangements for visitors are kept under review by the Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee and I understand that it would be hard to justify the additional costs of opening St. Stephen's entrance earlier than the present time of 9 am on sitting days due to the small numbers of visitors seeking entrance at that hour.

European Community Debates

44. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make a statement about the number of hours spent debating European Economic Community matters during the 1988-89 Parliament.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The number of hours spent debating European Community matters during the 1988-89 Session was approximately 90 hours, including three debates totalling 16 hours on the six-monthly White Papers on developments in the European Community covering the period January 1988 to June 1989, 11·5 hours in Standing Committee and four hours on ministerial statements. This total excludes time spent in discussion of European Community matters during debates on wider issues or at other times such as Question Time.

Prime Minister's Press Secretary

45. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Lord President of the Council what facilities are provided in the Palace of Westminster for the Prime Minister's Press Secretary.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: None.

Members of the European Parliament

46. Mr. Aitken: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he expects to bring forward any proposals that will allow Members of the European Parliament to participate in committees or any other proceedings of the House.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: I have no plans at this stage to bring forward such proposals. However, the report of the Select Committee on Procedure on the scrutiny of European legislation published on 30 November contains recommendations on developing the links between Parliament and MEPs. I cannot comment on detailed points in the report at this stage, but I have already assured the House that the Goverment will look carefully and constructively at all the report's recommendations.

PRIME MINISTER

Nuclear Arms

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if, during the debriefing meeting of NATO nations' heads of state and government in Brussels on 4 December, President Bush indicated whether the issues of the fourth review conference of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty and non-proliferation policies were discussed by Presidents Bush and Gorbachev in Malta.

The Prime Minister: No. The President gave no indication that these issues had been discussed.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister when she last took the opportunity to discuss with President Bush the forthcoming amendment conference of the partial test ban treaty.

The Prime Minister: I have not discussed this issue with President Bush.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister when she last took the opportunity to discuss with President Bush joint United States-United Kingdom initiatives that may be taken to strengthen the 1968 nuclear non-proliferation treaty before the fourth review conference of that treaty.

The Prime Minister: I have not discussed this with President Bush. There is, however, frequent contact with the United States on such matters at official level.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister when she last took the opportunity to discuss with President Bush (a) the adequacy of NATO nation expenditure on nuclear weapons and (b) initiatives that may be taken on nuclear disarmament.

The Prime Minister: I last met President Bush at the NATO summit on 4 December; defence issues were among those discussed at the summit.

Human Rights

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Prime Minister if she intends to discuss the issues of Palestinian human rights and self-determination when she next meets her Israeli counterpart.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to meet Mr. Shamir.

Rain Forests

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will give details of the allocation to individual projects of £100 million United Kingdom support announced in her speech to the United Nations for rain forest protection.

The Prime Minister: We currently have in preparation over 50 projects in 22 countries. Allocations from the £100 million I announced on 8 November will be made for these and other projects. Since August ODA forestry missions have visited Brazil, Cameroon, India, Malaysia, Nepal, Nigeria, Tanzania and Zimbabwe. Details of particular projects will be made known when formal agreement has been reached with the country concerned. The £100 million is for commitment over the next three years.

Nuclear Energy

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister what actions the Government have taken, and intend to take, to encourage those parties to the nuclear non-proliferation treaty that have not yet negotiated their mandatory safeguards agreement with the International Atomic Energy Agency, to do so.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 8 December 1989]: The negotiation and conclusion of a safeguards agreement pursuant to article III of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty (NPT) are matters for each NPT party and the International Atomic Energy Agency. However, we take every appropriate opportunity to underline the importance we attach to the fulfilment of obligations under the NPT.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister what steps the Government intend to take to assist in increasing the funding for International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards activities.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 8 December 1989]: The International Atomic Energy Agency's safeguards activities are financed from its regular budget. These activities play a vital role in guarding against the proliferation of nuclear weapons, and the whole international community benefits. When the agency's board of governors discusses the budget for 1991-92, the United Kingdom will continue to argue that safeguards activities deserve the highest priority.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make it her policy to raise at the Strasbourg summit of European Community Heads of Government with the President and Prime Minister of France, France's export policies for nuclear materials and sensitive nuclear technology and prospects of France joining the nulear non-proliferation treaty.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 8 December 1989]: I did not raise these issues at the European Council meeting in Strasbourg.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if, during her meeting with President Roh Tae Woo of South Korea in London recently, she discussed the dangers to peace in the Korean peninsular of the North Korean development of a military nuclear materials production capability based on a United Kingdom designed reactor and the fourth review conference of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty next August and its role in preventing nuclear proliferation in the Korean peninsula.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 8 December 1989]: Neither subject was raised.

Cambodia

Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Prime Minister when the two officials referred to in her letter of 4 December to the hon. Member for Halifax will arrive in Phnom Penh.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 8 December 1989]: The British officials arrived in Cambodia on 8 December 1989.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Buttons

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what representations he has received from the British Button Manufacturers Association relating to the statutory instrument, 1989 No. 1291; and whether he will seek to amend the instrument in the light of the representations;

(2) what consultation his Department held with representatives of the British button industry on the provisions of statutory instrument 1989 No. 1291.

Mr. Redwood: The British Button Manufacturers Association has made representations for exempting from the provisions of the Food Imitations (Safety) Regulations 1989 buttons which resemble food. These regulations implement from 1 January 1990 the European Community dangerous imitations directive and within the terms of the directive it would not have been permissible to accede to these representations.

Mail Charges

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whose approval was required for the Post Office to revise their scale of surcharges for understamped mail; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: Decisions on the level of postal tariffs, including surcharges, are a matter for the Post Office. However, the Post Office is required to consult the Post Office Users National Council before making changes.

Companies Act Investigations

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what policies his Department operates about the employment on privatisation of accountancy firms criticised in his Department's reports on Companies Act inquiries; how these are enforced; and what rules he lays down about the use of individual accountants and practices criticised in these reports.

Mr. Redwood: Firms, including accountancy firms, are invited to tender for the provision of advisory services to the Department on the basis of its assessment of their suitability to provide those services. In making its assessment, the Department pays due regard to adverse criticisms of individual firms particularly where they might be relevant to the particular work for which the firms could be invited to tender.

Security Interests in Property

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what responses have been received to consultation following the publication of the Diamond report, "A Review of Security Interests in Property"; and when the Government expect to be able to make a statement about reform of the law in this area;

(2) if, now that the Diamond report, "A Review of Security Interests in Property", has been published and the consultation period is ended he will ask the Scottish Law Commission to resume its work on floating charges and include any appropriate recommendations that arise from their consultative memorandum No. 72, "Floating Charges and Receivers", published in October 1986;

(3) what steps he intends to take to remove the present prohibition in the law of Scotland on taking security over moveable property without possession; and what representations he has had on this subject.

Mr. Redwood: A significant number of responses have been received to the proposals outlined in part II of Professor Diamond's report, "A Review of Security Interests in Property" published by HMSO in January. Professor Diamond recommends radical reform in a complex area of the law which will need careful consideration. The Government will make public their conclusions, in the light of the responses received, in due course.

Professor Diamond's report pays particular attention to the restrictions of current Scots security law and a number of respondees commented on this aspect. It will be given due weight in the Government's consideration of what action should be taken in response to the report.

The question whether the Scottish Law Commission decides to resume its work on floating charges and receivers will to some extent depend upon the conclusions the Government reach on Professor Diamond's report. The work was not suspended at the request of the Government.

Privatisation

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what principles his Department has developed as a basis of common practice for firms and businesses to be privatised in the valuation of (a) property assets, (b) subsidiary shareholding, (c) stocks, (d) good will, (e) other assets, and (f) debt; what consultations he had with the accountancy profession in developing these standards; and how they are reviewed after each individual privatisation.

Mr. Redwood: My Department takes appropriate professional advice on the basis of the particular circumstances and requirements of each firm or business to be privatised.

Auditors

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action is taken by his Department in dealing with auditing firms that deliver poor audits.

Mr. Redwood: Complaints about auditors' conduct of statutory audits of companies are normally referred to the relevant professional body and the outcome of the referral is noted.

Mobile Telecommunications

Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any plans for introducing further competition into mobile telecommunications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: On 22 June 1989 the then Secretary of State, Lord Young, announced that a consortium led by Mercury Communications Ltd. or its parent company, Cable and Wireless, would be offered a licence to operate a mobile telecommunications network within the frequency range of 1·7 to 2·3 GHz, subject to the submission of an acceptable proposal. He also invited applications for one or two further licences to operate such networks. Seven applications were received by the closing date on 14 September.

The proposal from the consortium headed by Mercury, and the other applications have been fully assessed by the Director General of Telecommunications, who has made recommendations to the Secretary of State. We are grateful to the director general and his staff for their careful and thorough assessment.

Following his advice, I can confirm I am offering a licence to Mercury PCN Ltd., a consortium comprising Mercury Communications Ltd. Motorola Ltd. and Telefonica.

I am also offering licences to a consortium consisting of British Aerospace (Space Communications) Ltd., Matra Communication, Millicom UK, Pacific Telesis UK (3) Ltd. and Sony; and a consortium consisting of STC, US West, Thorn EMI and Deutsche Bundespost Telekom, which will operate under the name of Unitel Ltd.

These licences will permit the operators to run personal communications networks (PCNs) in the frequency range 1·7-1·9 GHz. They will come into service in the early 1990s. We expect them to compete initially with the services offered by the two existing cellular radio operators, Cellnet and Racal-Vodafone at that time. By the mid to late 1990s, the cost and convenience of equipment may make the use of a PCN a competitive alternative not only to the cellular operators' services but to the fixed telephone network.

The details of operating licences and radio spectrum allocation will now be discussed with the successful licensees. As the announcement of 22 June indicated, they will be able to provide their own radio-based network infrastructure between cells. They will also be permitted to share infrastructure in rural areas if they wish to do so.

The announcement on 22 June specified that the networks should be based on either the GSM standard developed for the pan-European cellular network or the digital European cordless telephone (DECT) technology. In order to allow for full consultation within Europe we have decided not to take a final decision on these two technologies at this stage. This consultation will be undertaken by the successful licensees, with the support of my officials, through the European Telecommunications Standards Institute (ETSI). However, our objective of a common technical standard as a framework for competitive United Kingdom PCN services remain the same, and we expect this to be based upon a European technology or a combination of technologies currently being standardised in Europe.

PCNs will take the development of telecommunications in the United Kingdom a major step forward. They will allow the same telephone to be used at home, at work and on the move. The United Kingdom will be the first country in the world to offer PCN services. The prominent international companies involved in both the successful and unsuccessful applicants attest to the position of this country as a world leader in mobile communications. The United Kingdom companies leading the consortia also make clear the strength of our own telecommunications sector. The quality of applications for these licences was excellent, and I am sure that those we have selected will make PCNs a powerful competitive force in the telecommunications world of the 1990s.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many civil servants in his Department work (a) full time and (b) part time on (i) the film industry, (ii) the record industry, (iii) the publishing industry, (iv) the press, (v) the design industry, (vi) the fashion industry, (vii) leisure and (viii) tourism.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 7 December 1989]: The industries specified do not, in all cases, relate directly to the division of industry responsibilities within my Department. The responsibility for tourism rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment. In total, approximately 28 staff are directly concerned with the industries listed and devote all or part of their time to them.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the expenditure by his Department in the last financial year on (a) the film industry, (b) the record industry, (c) the publishing industry. (d) the Press, (e) the design industry, (f) the fashion industry, (g) leisure and (h) tourism.

Mr. Forth [holding answer 7 December 1989]: In 1988-89 expenditure on the film industry was £2 million and expenditure in support of the Depatment's design policies was £7·8 million, mainly for grant in aid to the Design Council. The responsibility for tourism rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment. My Department has no specific expenditure programme related to the other industries, although all companies eligible can apply for assistance under the Department's various initiatives and programmes.

Government Shareholdings

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the shareholdings held by the Government in two categories (a) golden shares and (b) other shareholdings and give the percentage holding and the current market value in each case.

Mr. Lilley: I have been asked to reply.

The Government hold special shares in the following companies, Mersey Docks and Harbour Company; Britoil; Cable and Wireless; Jaguar; Sealink; British Telecom; British Aerospace; VSEL Consortium; British Gas; Rolls-Royce; BAA; British Steel; Anglian Water; Northumbrian Water; North West Water; Severn Trent; South West Water; Southern Water; Thames Water; Welsh Water; Wessex Water; and Yorkshire Water.

Details of the Government's other shareholdings are given in the "Consolidated Fund and National Loans Fund Accounts 1987-88: Supplementary Statements" (HC59). The 1988-89 supplementary statements will be laid before the House on 18 December. The Government will retain residual shareholdings in each of the 10 water companies. Precise details of the numbers of those shares are not yet available. The current market value of the shareholdings can be established from the International Stock Exchange official list.

Mr. Norris: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the amount of Government debt written off in each of the privatisations effected by Her Majesty's Government since 1979.

Mr. Lilley: I have been asked to reply.

The normal practice on privatisation of a nationalised industry or company wholly or majority owned by Government is to repay, rather than write off debt. This repayment may be financed from the company's existing resources, the injection of new equity, or new debt finance. In some cases, the Government provide the finance to repay debts, for example, by an equity injection. Such finance is shown in the relevant departmental programme of the public expenditure White Paper. Subsequent sales of the Government's interests in a company are recorded in the privatisation programme in the PEWP.

National loan fund debt has been formally written off only in the following privatisation cases:

Year and company	Amount £
1980-81
National Freight Corporation (under Section 45 of the Transport Act 1980)	100,000,000
1982-83
British Transport Docks Board (under Section 6(1) of the Transport Act 1981)	81,293,616
1984-85
British Telecom (BT (Extinguishment of Loans) Order 1982	2,789,865,772
1986-87
BAA (under section 3 of the Airports Act 1986)	43,503,340
1989-90
Water Companies (under section 86 of the Water Act 1989)	5,028,346,588

These write-offs had no direct effect on public expenditure in as much as they represented a reconstruction of the balance sheets of the industries concerned. In each case, having had NLF debt written off, the successor company issued new securities to be held by the Secretary of State as assets of the consolidated fund pending realisation.

Public dividend capital has been reduced in three privatisation cases:

Year and Company	Amount £
1980-81
British Airways Board (under the Civil Aviation Act 1980 S1(1))	160,000,000
1980-81
British Aerospace (under the British Aerospace Act 1980)	60,000,000
1988-89
British Steel (under the British Steel Act 1988)	500,000,000

A further £3,480,000,000 of borrowing by British Steel under section 18(1) of the Iron and Steel Act 1982 was written off on privatisation.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

School Buses

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the progress of his review of school bus three-to-a-double-seat policy.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I have nothing to add to the answer that I gave my hon. Friend on 23 October.

Magnet Schools, Bradford

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his replies of 5 December, whether Bradford local education authority informed him of its public statement announcing a postponement of the magnet schools programme; whether Bradford local education authority has indicated any intention of withdrawing supplementary bids linked to the development of magnet schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend is aware of the announcement made in October by Bradford LEA postponing its magnet schools programme. In subsequent discussions with officials of the Department, the LEA confirmed that it wished my right hon. Friend to proceed with his consideration of its supplementary bids for funds to support the programme, in preparation for a commencement in September 1991.

Students' Awards

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will announce his decisions in respect of the levels for 1990-91 of students' maintenance awards, and of awards for mature students, and mature students' dependants allowances.

Mr. MacGregor: I intend to make an announcement at around the usual time.

Peto Clinic, Budapest

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many British school children are currently undertaking training at the Peto clinic in Budapest; and how many of these are funded by their local education authority.

Mr. Alan Howarth: This information is not collected centrally.

Open University (Vice-Chancellor)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to meet the new Vice-Chancellor of the Open University.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend and I met the Vice-Chancellor, Dr. John Horlock, on 30 November. His successor, Dr. John Daniel, now of Laurentian university in Canada, will not be in post until July 1990.

Grant-Maintained Schools

Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the number of schools which have been granted grant-maintained status, and the number of such applications so far received.

Mrs. Rumbold: To date 51 schools have voted in favour of applying for grant-maintained status, of which 48 have so far published proposals. My right hon. Friend has taken decisions on 41 cases, of which 32 have been approved for grant-maintained status. Decisions on the remaining applications will be taken on their merits in due course.

National Curriculum

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he intends to publish for consultation the draft order with attainment targets and programmes of study for English in the national curriculum for pupils aged eight to 16 years.

Mr. MacGregor: I have today published for consultation a draft order with an associated document setting out the attainment targets and programmes of study for English in the national curriculum, as I am required to do by section 20(5) of the Education Reform Act. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales is consulting on the draft order under the provisions of section 22(3) of the Act. Copies have been placed in the Library.

The draft order relates to key stages 2 to 4—pupils aged eight to 16. The order for key stage 1 was laid before the House in May this year and took effect from September.

The new draft order has been prepared in the light of advice from the National Curriculum Council, following its consultation on the Government's proposals published in June. I have accepted the council's recommendations for attainment targets and programmes of study in full. I believe that the draft order will be widely welcomed as providing a challenging framework for the raising of standards of English in our schools. The consultation period ends on 22 January 1990. I intend to make the final order in March 1990, in good time for implementation starting in the autumn.

Teacher Training

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students were recruited to courses of initial teacher training in the current year.

Mr. MacGregor: A survey undertaken by my Department shows that 21,757 students entered courses of initial teacher training in 1989, an increase of 1,574 over 1988. Recruitment to primary courses was 12·7 per cent. higher than last year. Intakes to secondary courses overall were 1·5 per cent. above last year, and intakes to science courses were 3·2 per cent. up on last year, although recruitment in the shortage secondary subjects continued to fall short of targets. I am placing the principal results of the survey in the Library.

Student Loans

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what progress has been made by the Student Loans Company Limited on preparatory work for the student loans scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The Student Loans Company Limited has signed a contract with Electronic Data Systems (EDS) for the provision of the main administrative system for the student loans scheme. EDS was selected by the financial institutions after an extensive evaluation of competing bids by an independent panel. As foreshadowed in the memorandum of understanding, my Department has contracted with the company for this purpose. My Department has also contracted with the company to fund items of miscellaneous expenditure required for preparatory work on the student loans scheme.

EMPLOYMENT

Claimants

Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) how many claimants have been issued with the explanatory warning letter when employment service staff have considered the claimant has not sufficiently actively sought work in each week from 9 October and for each region;

(2) how many claimants have been referred to an adjudication officer, either directly or via an unemployment benefit office for failing to meet the actively seeking work requirement; how many claimants were (i) allowed, (ii) disallowed benefit or credits by the adjudication officer; and how many had benefits or credits suspended for each week from 9 October and for each region;

(3) how many claimants have been referred to the adjudication officer, either directly or via the unemployment benefit office, for refusing employment and for whom a UB195 has been completed; and how many were (a) disqualified and (b) not disqualified from receiving benefits or credits for up to 26 weeks, for each week from 9 October and for each region.

Mr. Eggar: Figures in the precise form requested are not available. The table shows statistical information for the period 9 October to 27 October on questions of actively seeking and refusal of employment. Decisions outstanding as at 27 October will be recorded in the subsequent statistical returns.

Earnings

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the increase in weekly and hourly earnings of full-time adult male manual workers in manufacturing and other full-time adult males not in the public sector in each year from 1979 to 1989.

Mr. Nicholls: The available information from the new earnings survey is provided in the table:

[3] males aged 21 and over on all rates; 1980 SIC definition of manufacturing

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish tables showing for each standard region, Scotland and Wales the average gross weekly earnings and average gross hourly earnings of full-time employees on adult rates whose pay was unaffected by absence, males and females separately, analysed into the age groups; under 18 years, 18 to 20 years, 21 to 24 years, 25 to 29 years, 30 to 39 years, 40 to 49 years, 50 to 59 years, and 60 to 64 years, for each of the years 1979 and 1989 and in cash and real terms using April 1989 prices.

Mr. Patrick Nicholls [holding answer 7 December 1989]: Due to the extensive amount of information requested, I will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish in the Official Report tables showing the proportion of (1) manual, (2) non-manual and (3) all full-time employees earning less than (a) £157, (b) £160, (c) £163, and (d) half average earnings a week, for (i) men, (ii) women and (iii) all full-time employees, including overtime, shift and public borrowing requirement premia, in each county and standard economic region in England and in each London borough.

Mr. Nicholls: Due to the extensive amount of information requested, I will write to the hon. Member.

Employment Training

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish up-to-date figures for Great Britain and each Training Agency region for each month since June, of the cumulative number of (a) referrals to employment training from the employment service to training agents, (b) agreed employment training action plans at training agents, (c) starts with employment training training managers, (d) the number in training on employment training each month and (e) the number on continuation training.

Mr. Nicholls: The information on referrals, action plans, starts and in-training figures is provided in the tables. Information is not separately available for those on continuation training.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what were the destinations of all the people surveyed in the pilot survey of trainees who had left employment training; how many of the trainees contacted left employment training early; and whether he will place a copy of the full results of the pilot survey in the Library.

Mr. Nicholls: The destinations of people leaving employment training are many and varied. They include jobs, self-employment and other training or further education. Information is not available on the numbers to whom a questionnaire was sent who had left employment training early.

The results of the pilot exercise will not be placed in the House of Commons Library. This exercise was primarily designed to test the questionnaire and the methodology of the 100 per cent. follow-up survey and does not form part of the now established ongoing evaluation of the programme.

Job Clubs

Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what numbers of people moved from job clubs to (i) full time, and (ii) part-time employment in the period August 1988 to August 1989 in (a) Great Britain, (b) Tyne and Wear, (c) Gateshead, and (d) Newcastle.

Mr. Eggar: In the 12-month period 1 August 1988 to 28 July 1989, the total numbers of people leaving job clubs to go into employment were:

		Number
(a)	Great Britain	70,814
(b)	Tyne and Wear	2,316
(c)	Gateshead	391
(d)	Newcastle	508

No statistics are available which differentiate between people going into full or part-time employment.

Claimants (Questionnaire)

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, under what circumstances unemployed claimants who are studying part-time are asked to complete the questionnaire attached to ES notice 178/89 and distributed throughout the employment service; what plans he has to use such a standard questionnaire after March 1990; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The questionnaire to which the hon. Lady refers has been used for some time where unemployed claimants are studying, or intending to study, part-time to establish whether they are available for employment. It will continue to be used for the foreseeable future.

Mines (Health and Safety)

Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will take steps to ensure that full consultation is undertaken by the Health and Safety Commission with the British Association of Colliery Managers and representatives of other professional and engineering staff in the coal industry before the proposed new regulations on the management of safety and health in mines and the proposed approved code of practice are considered by Ministers.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Commission has consulted widely with all interested parties and my right hon. Friend is satisfied that its procedures for consulting on proposals for regulations and approved codes of practice are satisfactory.

YTS

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will take action to ensure that trainees placed with companies through YTS have a choice of methods of wage or salary payment.

Mr. Nicholls: The Training Agency, which administers YTS, already advises on methods of payment of training allowance to non-employed trainees, but the choice of method is the responsibility of the relevant managing agent. Arrangements for payment of wages or salary to employed trainees are the responsibility of the employer.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action he is taking to prevent YTS trainees from being forced by employers to work overtime.

Mr. Nicholls: Under the terms of the YTS contract the attendance of non-employed YTS trainees for training is subject to a maximum of 40 hours per week, taking one week with another and excluding meal breaks. Attendance outside those hours is entirely a matter for negotiation between the training provider and the trainee, but cannot be required as a condition for the provision of training.

The maximum hours of attendance for employed trainees are determined by their contracts of employment.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of employees in employment in Wales for each year since 1979-80 and what is the percentage change between 1979 and the latest available year for (a) the whole economy, (b) the services sector and (c) the manufacturing sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Patrick Nicholls: [holding answer 7 December 1989]: The number of employees in employment in Wales for the years requested is given in the table:

Employees in Employment in Wales

(Unadjusted for seasonal variation) (Thousands)

(June each year)	Employees in employment (whole economy)	Employees in service sector (1)	Employees in manufacturing (2)

(2) 'Manufacturing' standard industrial classification 1980, divisions 2 to 4.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will publish employment statistics, on a regular basis in the Employment Gazette, on the arts, cultural industries and the media.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 7 December 1989]: The Department's estimates of employment are categorised according to the 1980 standard industrial classification (SIC80). This classification does not specifically identify the arts, cultural industries and the media. However, quarterly estimates of employees in employment are published in table 1.4 of the Employment Gazette for SIC80 class 97 (recreational services and other cultural services). This class covers:

Film production, distribution and exhibition;
Radio and television services, theatres, etc;
Authors, music composers and other own account artists, not elsewhere specified;
Libraries, museums, art galleries, etc;
Sport and other recreational services.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on the current level of employment in (a) the arts, (b) crafts, (c) museums, (d) libraries, (e) heritage, (f) archaeology, (g) royal parks, (h) film and cinema, (i) the press, (j) broadcasting and video, (k) publishing, (l) fashion, (m) design, (n) sound recording, (o) leisure and (p) tourism.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 7 December 1989]: The Department's estimates of employment are categorised according to the 1980 standard industrial classification (SIC80). This classification does not specifically identify the industries requested. Detailed results for some of the industries are given by the 1987 census of employment and these are shown in the following table. Where more recent data are available, these are also shown in the table.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Data Protection Act (Registration Fee)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to reduce the registration fee required under the Data Protection Act; whether he will review the charges; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We have no present plans to do so.

Market Research

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many market research and sample surveys were carried out by or for his Department in the last 12 months; what was the cost of each; what was the total cost; how many were carried out in house; how many were carried out for his Department by outside organisations; and what percentage of the total expenditure was paid to outside organisations.

Mr. Waddington: Fifteen surveys which meet the description of sample population surveys rather than market research surveys were carried out for or by the Home Department in the past 12 months. The total cost was £419,100. Three surveys were carried out in house at a cost of £5,000. Seven projects were carried out by outside organisations on behalf of the research and planning unit (RPU), and one project for the statistical department. Four projects were commissioned by the Central Office of Information for the public relations branch. Ninety-nine per cent. of total expenditure (discounting associated internal management costs) was paid to outside organistions.

Firearms

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applicants have handed in firearms for compensation under the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988; how many weapons this covers; and how many applicants have been (a) paid and (b) refused.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: A total of 2,896 applications in England and Wales have been submitted claims, in respect of 3,548 weapons, surrendered to the police or otherwise disposed of, for a payment under the Government buy-in scheme for weapons newly prohibited under the Firearms (Amendment) Act 1988.

Of these applicants, 2,690 have had payments authorised and 71 have been refused as ineligible under the scheme; 135 claims have yet to be resolved.

Broadwater Farm

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report on the reasons why the inquiry, conducted by the Police Complaints Authority, into the Broadwater Farm disturbances of 1985 has taken two and half years to complete.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Supervision of the investigation of complaints against the police is the responsibility of the Police Complaints Authority. The time elapsed is accounted for by the various stages in the process laid down in the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984. I understand that in this case the investigation, which was carried out by officers from the Metropolitan police under the supervision of the Police Complaints Authority, was extremely detailed and wide ranging. All the papers were considered by the Police Complaints Authority to ensure that the investigation had been carried out to their satisfaction, and by the Crown prosecution service to establish whether criminal charges should be brought against any police officer. There then followed further consideration by the Police Complaints Authority of the proposals relating to disciplinary proceedings.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether a date has yet been fixed for the disciplinary tribunal to hear charges against Detective Chief Superintendent Graham Melvin, arising out of his command of the Metropolitan police's investigation into the Broadwater Farm disturbances of 1985.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: I understand that no date has yet been set for the discipline hearing. The charges arose from the investigation into criticisms made by the judge at the trial of one of those arrested following the disturbances.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police for the Metropolis as to why no black or minority ethnic press or media were represented in the media group that accompanied the police on the raid on Broadwater Farm on 29 September; what plans the police have for inviting the non-white press and media to accompany them on such raids in future: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The planning of such operations is a matter for the commissioner and his senior colleagues. Invitations to the media are an important part of the commissioner's policy of encouraging greater public understanding of police operations, and are an example of the accountability of the police to the public. Decisions on representation on individual operations are taken in the light of circumstances and with a view to effective coverage for all parts of the community.

Broadcasting Complaints Commission

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what in each year of its formation has been the annual cost of the Broadcasting Complaints Commission.

Mr. Mellor: Since the commission came into operation on 1 June 1981, its net expenditure for each financial year has been as follows:

1981-82	97,956·13
1982-83	145,723·29
1983-84	150,638·00
1984-85	182,595·94
1985-86	172,711·54
1986-87	182,303·34
1987-88	200,320·90
1988-89	209,198·24

Broadcasting

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is proposing to take to include provision for the deaf in his new Broadcasting Bill.

Mr. Mellor [holding answer 7 December 1989]: The Government believe that it is important for there to be proper provision of broadcasting services for the deaf and hard of hearing. As a consequence, Channel 3 licence holders will, in the first year of the licence, be required to provide 10 per cent. more hours of subtitling than was achieved on average by the TV companies in the previous year. The Channel 5 licensee will have to provide a similar proportion of subtitled programmes. The ITC will thereafter set a reasonable target each year for an increase in subtitling on Channel 3 and 5 services.

The BBC and Channel 4 will continue to be bound by public service commitments and therefore can be expected to continue to provide subtitling. The BBC is working towards the time when nearly all pre-recorded peak-time programmes will carry subtitles.

European Community

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on EC document COM(89)524 published in the Official Journal of the European Communities on 18 November.

Mr. Peter Lloyd [holding answer 7 December 1989]: The Commission's proposals for a directive on voting rights for Community nationals in local elections were the subject of an explanatory memorandum submitted by the Home Office to the Select Committee on European Legislation on 17 October 1988, copies of which are available in the Library.

WALES

Health Authorities

14. Mr. Rogers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met the chairmen of health authorities in Wales; and what topics were discussed.

Mr. Peter Walker: I last met the chairmen of Welsh health authorities on 15 May 1989, when we discussed the implementation of the proposals in the White Paper "Working for Patients".

Council House Sales

15. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the progress of council house sales in Wales.

Mr. Grist: Between the introduction of our right-to-buy scheme and September 1989 about 74,000 council dwellings had been sold to sitting tenants in Wales. Owner-occupation now stands at 70 per cent.

Heartbeat Wales

16. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement in the progress of the Heartbeat Wales campaign.

Mr. Grist: Heartbeat Wales, run by the Health Promotion Authority for Wales, continues its programme to combat the high incidence of coronary heart disease in Wales. Evaluation of the project will begin next year, but interim sample surveying has shown encouraging trends in risk behaviour patterns. The authority was recently visited by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister who was most impressed by the authority's work.

Gynaecological Services

17. Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement about the availability of gynaecological services in rural Wales.

Mr. Grist: The availability of gynaecological services to the residents of rural Wales is a matter for the relevant district health authorities.

Local Government Finance

18. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement indicating the level of community charge and non-domestic rates in Wales for the next financial year.

Mr. Peter Walker: On present plans I will be laying the necessary reports and making a statement about the 1990-91 local authority grant settlement before Christmas. The House will have the opportunity to consider the issues then, and to debate the reports early in the new year.

National Health Service

20. Mr. Geraint Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the present state of the National Health Service in Wales.

Mr. Grist: The NHS in Wales is treating and caring for more people than ever before, as a result of the efforts of all who work in the service to make the best use of the record levels of resources that we are providing. By 1990-91 funding for the NHS in Wales will have increased by nearly a half in real terms since 1978-79.

24. Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received in favour of his Government's proposals for reform of the National Health Service.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend and I have received a considerable number of written representations from the medical, nursing and other health professions, from other interested bodies and organisations and from members of the public, supporting the objectives for the further improvement of the NHS in Wales set out in the White Paper "Working for Patients" (Cm. 555) which are to improve the management and effectiveness of the NHS and thus to improve patient care.

We have also had extensive detailed discussions with the health authorities, family practitioner committees and representatives of the medical and nursing professions and others working in the NHS which have shown a substantial degree of support for our objectives. In particular there is support for the introduction of assurance control in all hospital and general practice, including medical audit; the distribution of resources to ensure that money follows the patient and an end to the so-called "efficiency trap"; investment in up-to-date information systems to ensure that the maximum health care is provided from available resources; and indicative drug budgets which will not infringe in any way the right of a GP to prescribe all those medicines which individual patients need.

Inward Investment

21. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much inward investment has taken place in Wales over the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Peter Walker: In the five-year period to the end of 1988, a total of 258 individual overseas investment projects were secured in Wales promising over 31,000 jobs. 1988 was a record year in which Wales received 22 per cent. of the new jobs associated with inward investment to the United Kingdom. The associated capital investment for that year was over £1 billion.

Income

22. Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to increase per capita income in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: Per capita income in Wales will continue to rise as more people in the Principality secure quality jobs in modern, competitive industries and services. The Government's policies by encouraging indigenous enterprise, promoting inward investment and modernising the existing industrial base are directed to that end.

Labour Statistics

23. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the latest unadjusted figures for unemployment in (a) Newport, (b) Gwent and (c) Wales; and if he will give the equivalent figures for 1979 on the most nearly comparable basis.

Mr. Peter Walker: On 12 October 1989 the numbers of unemployment claimants in the Newport district, Gwent and Wales were 4,602, 13,797, and 86,514 respectively. Unadjusted figures for 1979 are not available on a basis that enables a valid comparison to be made.

Waste

25. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy towards the dumping of mixed toxic and household waste in sites in Wales.

Mr. Grist: Such deposit is an acceptable disposal route given suitable site conditions where specified by a waste disposal authority in a waste disposal licence issued under the Control of Pollution Act 1974.

South Glamorgan Health Authority

26. Mr. Rhodri Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met the chairman of the South Glamorgan health authority; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend met the chairman of South Glamorgan health authority in his capacity as chairman of the Welsh health authorities chairmen's group on 7 November 1989. We discussed the financial positions of health authorities in Wales.

East Dyfed Health Authority

27. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on current financing difficulties facing East Dyfed health authority and other health authorities in Wales.

Mr. Grist: I have been fully briefed on the financial position of health authorities in Wales as a result of my Department's annual round of review meetings with authorities in September and a meeting which my right hon. Friend had with the chairman of the Welsh health authorities chairmen's committee on 7 November.

Flint Bypass

28. Mr. Raffan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his decision to call in the application by Clwyd county council for planning permission to construct a bypass road for Flint.

Mr. Grist: The application raises issues of more than local importance and my right hon. Friend decided, therefore, to call it in for his decision. Arrangments are being made for an inspector to hold a public local inquiry and my right hon. Friend will arrive at his decision on the application as soon as possible after the inquiry has closed.

Area Health Authorities

29. Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met the chairmen of area health authorities in Wales; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Peter Walker: I last met the chairmen of Welsh health authorities on 15 May 1989, when we discussed the implementation of the proposals in the White Paper "Working for Patients".

Homelessness

30. Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what assesment he has made of the adequacy of homelessness statistics produced by local councils in Wales.

Mr. Grist: Homelessness returns were reviewed and extended in 1987 to provide a wider range of information on homelessness in the Principality. Additional guidance was given to local authorities to improve consistency in their recording practices and further consideration may be given to the return in the light of the measures I am introducing to tackle homelessness.

It is essential that vigorous efforts should be maintained to help those who are entitled to assistance in securing a home under part III of the Housing Act 1985, in Wales as elsewhere. The Act remains important as a long-stop measure to help people in need who have become homeless through no fault of their own. This was implicit in the recent review of homelessness legislation.

In large part, the review deals with the situation arising in London and the south-east of England. In Wales, the pressures are comparatively less intense. Detailed statistical information on homelessness in the Principality is given in section 7 of "Welsh Housing Statistics, No. 9, 1989"—a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. These data show that the problems associated with homelessness vary in extent between districts. They are not confined to any one specific area: they should certainly be considered together with wider issues in the development of effective housing strategies, both locally and at the all-Wales level. Indeed, in that context, the review makes some very important comments on lessons and conclusions for the future. I hope that all those concerned with housing in the Principality will take note of them. Arrangements have already been made for copies of the review to be distributed widely in Wales. But as regards substantive action, we shall: carry out a separate consultation in Wales on measures of guidance for local authorities, to secure a better, more consistent service for homeless people in Wales under the Housing Act 1985; as announced, allow for an increase in gross provision of £30 million for local authority capital expenditure on housing in the next financial year, with no limit on expenditure for certain home renovation grants, against the £197 million in 1989-90. This increased provision will be of general assistance to local authorities, not least in carrying out their statutory responsibilities in securing accommodation for homeless people, in close liaison with all housing providers, whilst taking account of their own local needs and priorities.

We shall also encourage local authorities to make use of a new cash incentive scheme to help council tenants buy homes elsewhere, so releasing homes to let to the homeless —details of the scheme will be announced very soon—and introduce new measures to assist local authorities to build on improvements they have already made in the management of their own stock, for example over the management of "voids" in Wales, to enhance customer care, to target resources still more effectively and to develop partnership arrangements for the provision of homes for homeless people. The impetus for this work has been given by the "quality circle initiative" sponsored by the Secretary of State and the Council of Welsh Districts. It will take account of recently published studies on good practice in housing management, including those of the Audit Commission, and will include consultation with local authorities on the introduction of performance indicators, and on the development and refinement of operationally useful data. It will be supported by an increase of over 30 per cent. in funding for my Department's successful management education and training programmes which benefit all housing providers —and for which the budget will substantially exceed three quarters of a million pounds for the first time in 1990-91.

We shall ensure that additional weighting is given to practical schemes to alleviate homelessness in approving bids for the urban programme 1990-91—a sum of around £1 million will be released by that route next year—and assist housing associations to extend substantially their current commitment to tackling homelessness. Provision for Housing for Wales has been raised by some £27 million for 1990-91—an increase of 40 per cent. compared with 1989-90. This will stimulate a major increase in the provision of dwellings for which homeless families will be eligible. Housing for Wales is already working with local authorities to devise joint strategies to deal with the most pressing priorities within each district. The next step is to secure nomination arrangements to help local authorities in getting homeless families housed. Housing for Wales will be monitoring the performance of housing associations in realising the benefits of this significant new approach.

We shall pursue the possibility of introducing a cash incentive scheme to help housing association tenants move into the private sector, thereby releasing those properties to let for homeless families, and substantially increase the planned availability of central funding for those voluntary organisations in Wales that have the capacity to be of real help in dealing with homelessness. Next year we shall significantly more than double the £143,000 made available to this sector in 1989-90. In addition, my officials will initiate discussions with voluntary bodies about the best way of building upon the wide range of high-quality services that these organisations already provide—especially in matching those who need accommodation with those who can offer it, for example through the organisation of lodging schemes in co-operation with local authorities.

We shall ensure that special attention is paid to the needs of Wales in relation to the development of a comprehensive advice service for people in the early stages of housing problems, and initiate further discussions on the implementation of the new structure for promoting mobility between local authority and housing association sectors within the Principality.

We shall also give priority to issues of homelessness in deploying resources available from the Department's housing top slice. For the coming financial year, £2 million has been set aside. Bids will be invited in advance of the HSIP round for 1990-91. This will extend the arrangement made for 1989-90 involving the allocation of around £1 million for areas experiencing particular difficulties.

I am confident that, taken together, these measures will be of very considerable assistance in dealing constructively with issues of homelessness within the Principality both now and for the future. At a time when we in Wales have a growing population and increasing numbers of households—when indeed, we have more people, better housed than ever before, for the most part in their own homes, it is all the more essential that we tackle homelessness positively and with the utmost care.

Market Research

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many market research and sample surveys were carried out by or for his Department in the last 12 months; what was the cost of each; what was the total cost; how many were carried out in-house; how many were carried out for his Department by outside organisations; and what percentage of the total expenditure was paid to outside organisations.

Mr. Peter Walker: My Department undertakes a wide range of regular surveys. An analysis of these to provide the information required would be disproportionately costly. On the basis of the information identified in the time available, there have been nine one-off market research and sample surveys either undertaken or commissioned solely and directly by my Department in 1989—two of which were conducted in-house, the remaining seven by outside organisations. The individual costs were:

	70,000
	5,000
	14,650
	1,730

	2,450
	4,194
	12,678
	2,075
	88,353
TOTAL	201,130

Of this total, 83 per cent. was paid to outside organisations.

Holiday Homes

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he has taken to ensure that the new house repairs and renovation grant system is sufficiently tightly drawn to avoid grant money being used for improvement of holiday homes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The conditions in the Local Government and Housing Act 1989 on owner-occupation and availability for letting will enable local authorities to ensure that grant money is not used for second or holiday homes.

Poultry Flocks

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many premises in each county of Wales require inspection under the provisions of the testing of poultry flocks orders.

Mr. Peter Walker: The number of main agriculture holdings in each county in Wales in 1988 where 25 or more domestic fowls were kept to produce eggs for human consumption, and the number of breeding premises and hatcheries subject to testing was:

	Laying flocks	Breeding flocks	Hatcheries
Wales	1,190	60	3
Powys	197	9	1
Gwynedd	208	13	1
Dyfed	342	17	1

The Poultry Laying Flocks (Testing and Registration) Order 1989 also requires the testing of laying flocks of less than 25 birds if the eggs are sold for human consumption. Information is not available on how many of the 4,876 main holdings in Wales where fewer than 25 hens are kept sell some or all of their eggs for human consumption; nor is information available on minor holdings which might be affected.

TRANSPORT

Speed Restraints

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list his criteria for speed humps, rumble strips and road-narrowing measures in residential areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Specific provisions for road humps are contained in the Highways (Road Humps) Regulations 1986 SI.1986 No. 1856, and detailed guidance on them was published in traffic advisory leaflet 3/87. We are consulting on revised regulations aimed at allowing road humps to be installed more widely. The Department has drawn attention to a number of other traffic calming measures in traffic advisory leaflet 1/87. Standards and criteria have not been laid down. Decisions on when and where to install such traffic calming measures are for individual highway authorities to take. Copies of SI.1856 and supporting publications have been placed in the Library.

British Rail

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Ipswich (Mr. Irvine), Official Report, column 4, of 4 December 1989, he will make a statement on how much of the investment in British Rail over the next three years will be spent on the East Suffolk line from Lowestoft to Ipswich and the Wherry line from Lowestoft to Norwich.

Mr. Portillo: It is for British Rail to decide the detailed allocation of resources. I understand that British Rail plans to invest at least £1 million in infrastructure on these routes over the next three years. The region will also benefit from wider programmes of investment in new rolling stock.

Buses

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the suitability of the height and design of the steps of the Volvo double deck buses to be leased on to the LBL, London General Bus subsidiary to provide adequate access for women with young children, the elderly and people with walking disabilities.

Mr. Atkins: Bus design is generally a matter for bus operators. I understand that these buses comply with design standards laid down by London Regional Transport. The Department takes every opportunity to remind the bus industry of the special needs of elderly and disabled passengers. We recently launched a video which demonstrates the features recommended by the disabled persons transport advisory committee in its "Recommended Specification for Buses Used to Operate Local Services". The video is now available on free loan to local authorities and bus operators.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will instruct LRT to stop the further tendering of further bus routes to those companies which have failed to fulfil their contractual obligations in the past and had routes taken away from them as a consequence.

Mr. Portillo: The tendering of bus routes and the selection of contractors is a matter for London Regional Transport. I understand that, in assessing bids, it takes account of the operators' previous performance.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the proportion of LBL buses running late during the current year over previous years; and what steps he has taken to improve the quality of service to the public.

Mr. Portillo: Statistics for London Regional Transport's timetable bus services for the first three quarters of 1989 show that there was an 18 per cent. chance of a bus departing between five and 15 minutes late, and an 11·5 per cent. chance of a bus departing more than 15 minutes late or not arriving. This compares with 19·5 per cent. and 10·5 per cent. respectively for the same period in 1988. My right hon. Friend will shortly be setting quality of service objectives for LRT's bus and railway activities.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the numbers of accidents involving PSV vehicles in London in each of the last five years; and how many of these accidents involved buses with fewer than 24 seats.

Mr. Portillo: The number of accidents involving PSV vehicles in the Greater London area during the last five years is as follows. The seating capacity of buses in accidents is not recorded on the STATS19 accident report form.

Year	Number of accidents
1984	3,553
1985	3,326
1986	3,226
1987	2,920
1988	2,993

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps are being taken to regrade the designed construction of mini-midi buses to provide greater passenger safety.

Mr. Atkins: All buses, including mini and midi-sized buses, are subject to construction regulations to ensure adequate passenger safety.

The European Commission has announced an intention to make a directive next year to cover the construction of buses, including coaches and minibuses. We have pressed, and shall continue to press, for that directive to contain provisions that set a high standard of safety. We are particularly concerned to ensure that seat belts of good quality, which are simple to use and have retractor mechanisms, are specified for all seats in minibuses and coaches.

We also want to see that steps and hand rails are specified which will make it easier for elderly people to get on and off buses safely.

I very much hope that manufacturers and operators will now voluntarily provide these simple and obvious safety features, without having to wait for legislation.

Manchester Airport

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what further negotiations his Department has had on additional transatlantic flights to and from Manchester airport; what has been the outcome; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McLoughlin: Negotiations were held with the United States between 29 November and 1 December. The United Kingdom is seeking a balanced expansion of opportunities for the airlines on both sides to enable additional transatlantic services to be introduced to serve Manchester airport. Arrangements are in hand to resume these talks in the near future.

Random Breath Tests

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many representations he has received in favour of the introduction of random breath tests.

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary invited representations in a consultation paper earlier this year and most comments for and against will have been directed to him. Since April the Department have received some 25 representations in favour of introduction.

Railway Closures

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many stations and railway lines closed in the 1960s and 1970s have been reopened.

Mr. Portillo: Approximately 70 stations and 24 stretches of line. In addition since 1978 BR has opened 106 new stations and constructed seven new lines.

Oil Discharges

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many cases of alleged illegal discharges of oil from non-United Kingdom ships in United Kingdom waters have been passed since 1978 to the flag states of the vessels concerned.

Mr. McLoughlin: Figures prior to 1985 are not readily available. Since then eight cases of possible illegal oil discharges by non-United Kingdom ships in United Kingdom waters have been referred to the competent authorities in the relevant flag states for investigation.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Carrington: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has agreed British Rail's proposals for investment in rolling stock for Channel tunnel rail services.

Mr. Parkinson: I am pleased to announce today my approval of British Rail's proposals for investment totalling more than £350 million for the purchase of trains to run from 1993 between London and Paris and London and Brussels. This represents British Rail's share of the combined passenger fleet of 30 trains which will be using the tunnel from June 1993. It amounts to a major investment in the provision of rail services through the Channel tunnel. It is another important step towards achieving the goal of London-Paris and London-Brussels direct train services. I look forward to receiving further investment proposals from British Rail for the rolling stock required for passenger services beyond London and for freight services.

Mr. Moate: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the terms and scope of the contract between British Rail and Trafalgar house with regard to the Channel tunnel link and with regard to international traffic on existing or improved rail routes; if he will arrange for a copy of the contract or of the heads of agreement to be placed in the Library; and if he will describe the respective roles of the contracting parties if the high speed link should not proceed.

Mr. Portillo: These matters are currently being negotiated between British Rail and their private sector partners. Some of the terms may require my right hon. Friend's approval: others may be confidential to the parties.

Public Appointments

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many persons above the age of (a) 60, (b) 65 and (c) 70 years he has appointed to public bodies in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Atkins: The information requested is not held centrally. It could be provided, if at all, only at disproportionate cost. However, I can assure my hon. Friend that we endeavour to appoint members from as broad a range of age groups as possible.

M1 (Improvements)

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how long he expects the interim improvement scheme at junction 21 of the M1 motorway to last; what will it cost; and when he expects the full widening and junction improvements at junction 21 to be done and completed; and at what cost.

Mr. Atkins: The interim improvement of junction 21 would accommodate normal traffic growth until the late 1990s. However, proposals for major developments close to the junction could reduce this by about five years. The interim improvement is intended to relieve congestion and improve safety for motorway traffic. The estimated cost is £1·008 million.

The long-term improvement of junction 21 is part of the scheme for widening and junction improvements on the M1 included in the White Paper "Roads for Prosperity". The known pressures at the junction will be monitored and taken into account in assessing the timing of the junction 21 element of this major project. The budget cost of the long-term improvement is £10 million, although the eventual cost will depend on a layout to be determined from further detailed traffic and economic analysis.

Traffic Delay (London)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will state, or take steps to ascertain, the approximate proportion of incidents of traffic delay in the Greater London area occasioned by (a) illegal parking, (b) traffic light faults, (c) shed loads, (d) vehicle breakdowns, (e) accidents, (f) road repairs, (g) water main bursts, (h) demonstrations or marches, (i) official events and (j) bomb alerts; and if he will name the agency or body from which he has obtained, or can obtain such information and indicate the manner in which such information is, or could be, made available to the public on a periodic basis.

Mr. Atkins: The Metropolitan police have set up a working party with the traffic control systems unit for London to review contingency plans for blockages at vital junctions. It will be for them to consider whether it would be worth while to collect, monitor and publish the causes of congestion in the way the hon. Member suggests.

London Underground (Delays)

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he possesses, or regularly receives, concerning delays on London Underground services caused by (a) shortage of staff, (b) signal failure, (c) non-availability of rolling stock, (d) mechanical or electrical failure, (e) fire or (f) other causes.

Mr. Portillo: I receive regular reports on overall quality of service, including punctuality and reliability. Day-to-day operations are a matter for London Underground Limited, which records individual delays and their causes.

Road Use (Smart Pricing)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to hold a meeting with transport researchers at the Open university's energy and environment research unit to evaluate the technical prospects of smart pricing for road use.

Mr. Atkins: My right hon. Friend does not plan to do so at present.

Hazardous Cargoes

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will consider making it necessary for all road tankers carrying dangerous chemicals to be fitted with external warning lights whilst in transit.

Mr. Atkins: Road tankers are already required to be clearly marked to indicate when they are carrying dangerous substances. There are no plans to impose additional requirements.

A45 (Accidents)

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the number of accidents reported to the police on that section of the A45 between the Westley roundabout to the west and Rookery crossroads to the east of Bury St. Edmunds during the last 12 months for which figures are available.

Mr. Atkins: In 1988, the last full year for which records are available, the number of injury accidents on this length of road was 12, including one fatal accident, and the number of non-injury accidents was seven.

Roads

Mr. Terry Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will deposit in the Library a scale map of the proposed Greater Manchester western and northern relief road M6 to M66, as shown in diagrammatic form in the White Paper, "Roads for Prosperity."

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 8 December 1989]: The Greater Manchester western and northern relief road is being dealt with in three sections. We have announced a proposed route for the southern section between the M6 and the M56. I shall arrange for a copy of the plan to be placed on deposit in the Library. Consultants are currently investigating solutions for the northern section of the road between the M62 and M66 motorways and we have recently appointed consultants for the centre section between the M56 and M62.

Mr. Terry Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will seek the views of the public on possible routes for the Greater Manchester western and northern relief road, M6 to M66.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 8 December 1989]: We are currently consulting the public on a proposed route for the southern section of the Greater Manchester western and northern relief road between the M6 and M56 motorways. Work on the remaining lengths between the M56 and M66 motorways is at an early stage. It is too soon to say when we shall be able to seek the views of the public.

ENVIRONMENT

Commons Crypt (Baptismal Font)

47. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the fabric of the baptismal font in Welsh marble in the Commons Crypt was last inspected.

Mr. Christopher Chope: I will write to the hon. Member.

Market Research

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many market research and sample surveys were carried out by or for his Department in the last 12 months; what was the cost of each; what was the total cost; how many were carried out in house; how many were carried out for his Department by outside organisations; and what percentage of the total expenditure was paid to outside organisations.

Mr. Chris Patten: In the past year, 25 market research and sampling surveys (excluding those connected with water privatisation) have been carried out for my Department at total cost of around £1 million. A further six projects were carried out in house. These figures include sample surveys of businesses and local authorities, as well as of members of the general public.

The cost of individual contracts are a matter of commercial confidentiality, and those of in-house surveys cannot be given except at disproportionate cost. The costs of water privatisation will be announced to Parliament in due course in the usual way.

London Docklands Development Corporation

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the approximate breakdown of the expected expenditure by the London Docklands development corporation of £1,100 million and the amount and breakdown of private investment in the area over the next five years.

Mr. Moynihan: The London Docklands development corporation's broad expenditure plans and forecast of private investment in its area are given in its recently published 1989 corporate plan, copies of which are in the Library.

Housing Tenancies

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many new tenancies have entered the private sector of the housing market since the introduction of assured tenancies under the Housing Act 1988; and how many of them are part of a business expansion scheme.

Mr. Howard: Information on the number of assured tenancies created under the Housing Act 1988 is not yet available. However, initial impressions are very encouraging. In particular it is estimated that more than £350 million has been invested in business expansion scheme companies letting on assured tenancies. With an average price of £50,000 per property, that means an extra 6,000 to 7,000 homes available for letting.

Local Authority Dwellings

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total value of dwellings owned by local authorities calculated on the basis of 1988-89 right-to-buy sales and the total loan debt outstanding on these local authority dwellings.

Mr. Howard: The Government do not possess figures on the value of dwellings in local authority ownership. Under part VI of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989, in determining housing revenue account subsidy, the Secretary of State may infer aggregate values of houses and other property within local authorities' housing revenue account from the average values of any of the houses and other property they have disposed of. The Department of the Environment is currently consulting local housing authorities in England on the figures for the subsidy determination for 1990-91.

The total outstanding loan debt on dwellings in local authority ownership for 1988-89 as reported to the Department of the Environment by local authorities was £23·1 billion.

Residuary Bodies

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many transactions have taken place between residuary bodies and local authorities, where assets previously owned by those local authorities have been purchased, in order for those successor authorities to carry out their functions; and what is the value of these transactions.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Residuary body property required by local authorities for the purpose of carrying out their functions is transferred to them at nil cost by statutory order. There have been 25 orders transferring residuary body property since 1986. Authorities can also purchase surplus residuary body property at market value. Information on the number and total value of properties acquired by local authorities is not centrally available.

West Yorkshire Residuary Body

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking on the representations made to him by Wakefield Civic Society, concerning the future of land currently the responsibility of the West Yorkshire residuary body.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Department replied to the letter from the Wakefield Civic Society on 6 December. I am sending a copy to the hon. Member.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total capital value of assets disposed of by (a) West Yorkshire residuary body and (b) all residuary bodies since the abolition of metropolitan county councils.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Total capital receipts from property disposals by the residuary bodies up to 30 November 1989 are as follows:

	£ million
London	605·10
Greater Manchester	23·04
Merseyside	7·50
South Yorkshire	13·70
Tyne and Wear	13·10
West Midlands	30·30
West Yorkshire	30·00
TOTAL	722·74

Waste Paper

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he intends to take to assist charities and other bodies who are in financial difficulties because of the collapse of the market in waste paper.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Government have no plans to intervene in this way.

Recycling

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is considering setting up a recycling agency to advise charities and other bodies on suitable materials to collect for recycling.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Since 1987 my Department has supported Waste Watch, a voluntary organisation based at the National Council for Voluntary Organisations (NCVO). It offers advice and training on recycling to voluntary and other bodies. My hon. Friend the Minister for Environment and Countryside recently launched the national directory of recycling information compiled by Waste Watch.

Runhag

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will approve the transfer of the new town housing at Runcorn to the housing associations known collectively as Runhag.

Mr. Chope: The Commission for the New Towns has asked for my approval to transfer about 7,000 dwellings at Runcorn to the five housing associations in Runhag. I have considered the views of tenants expressed in the recent ballot and the terms and conditions of the proposed transfer. I am satisfied that the terms are reasonable and that tenants want the relevant member of Runhag to be their new landlord. I have therefore approved the transfer. I understand that the transfer will take place today.

I am delighted that the new town tenants have voted in favour of transferring to the housing associations. I know that this vote was the culmination of over two years hard effort by Runhag and the New Town Residents Federation to achieve transfer on the best terms possible for existing tenants. I am very grateful for their perseverence and commitment.

Ministerial Visit

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the purpose of the visit to Holmewood estate, Bradford, by his Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State on Wednesday 15 November; what was the cost; what meetings were held and with whom on that date; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: On 15 November I visited the Holmewood estate and several other inner-city housing schemes in Bradford, improvements to which my Department has helped fund. The purpose of my visit was to see the work that has been done so far, to learn the extent of remaining problems and to listen to the views of residents. The total cost of the visit, for myself and my private secretary, was £240 approximately. At Holmewood I had a meeting with local community representatives, council members and officers. I also visited a housing association scheme at Grosvenor road where I met residents and representatives from the housing association. I was encouraged by the progress being made in Bradford in improving existing housing estates and developing new homes in the inner city.

Business Rates

Mr. Gould: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to bring to the attention of the public and Parliament the contents of, and summarised information arising from, the proposed local non-domestic rating lists required to be deposited with local authorities by 31 December, with particular reference to (i) his estimated dates of such depositing, (ii) his estimated dates of press releases from his Department or the Inland Revenue, (iii) his plans to notify individual ratepayers of the proposed valuations and (iv) any statement he might make to Parliament before or after the Christmas recess.

Mr. Chris Patten: The valuation office will send the new draft rating lists to local authorities on 20 December. Authorities are required by the Local Government Finance Act 1988 to deposit the lists and to give notice that they have done so as soon as reasonably practicable after their receipt. Ratepayers will be informed of their rateable values when rate bills for 1990-91 are sent out, but meanwhile the draft lists will be available for public inspection at the offices of local authorities and of the valuation office. I shall send to all ratepayers an explanation of the new rating system, but it will not be possible to include individual rateable values. I shall make available to Parliament and publish an analysis of the effects of the uniform business rate and of revaluation as soon as the necessary information is available.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the expected yield from non-domestic rates in 1989-90 in England; and what are the adjustments that have to be made to this figure to allow a proper comparison to be made with the NNDR distributive amount of £10,428·5 million for 1990-91.

Mr. David Hunt: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Correspondence

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment why he has not yet replied to the letter to him dated 31 July from the right hon. Member for Manchester, Gorton with regard to a complaint by Mr. R. Gorman of 14 Welby street, Manchester and if he will now reply.

Mr. Chris Patten: I wrote to the right hon. Member on 14 October and apologised on that occasion for the delay in replying.

Groundwork Foundation

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 7 December, when the Groundwork Foundation submitted an application to Bradford council; on what date the meeting between an officer of the Groundwork Foundation, Councillor Pickles and council officials took place; what the trust to be established in Bradford in 1990-91 will do during that period; and how much grant it will receive from Bradford council.

Mr. Trippier: An officer of the Groundwork Foundation met Councillor Pickles on 27 April 1989 and had meetings with Bradford council officials between February and June 1989. Subsequently on 10 July Bradford's policy and resources committee resolved to support in principle the establishment of a Groundwork Trust in the city. The council has allocated £40,000 for the project in its 1990-91 budget. It is understood that the preparation of a firm proposal for the trust is at present in hand.

Mersey Basin

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the environment how much the Mersey basin campaign unit in Manchester has cost his Department to run for every year since 1984.

Mr. Chris Patten [holding answer 7 December 1989]: The Mersey campaign unit works alongside a range of other bodies—public, private and voluntary—on both the water quality and landward aspects of the Mersey basin campaign; and supports the campaign chairman, whose post is an honorary unsalaried appointment.

The unit's staff costs are:

Year	£
1987-88	100,399
1988-89	115,668
1989-90	121,981

The figures for earlier years are not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Palace of Westminster

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to ensure that adequate information about the scope for energy conservation in the Palace of Westminster is available to all those who work there.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 8 December 1989]: The Parliamentary Works Office regularly advises Members and staff of the House about the operation of the heating controls in offices and committee rooms. Occupants are expected to adopt a common sense approach towards the use of electric lighting but the staff of the Parliamentary Works Office have a continuing brief to switch off unnecessary lights as they go about their business around the Palace of Westminster. The security staff who patrol the Palace are also asked to switch off lights left on in empty rooms.

Greenhouse Effect

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on current developments in eastern Europe as they affect policies to mitigate greenhouse global warming.

Mr. Trippier [holding answer 8 December 1989]: We believe that international action is essential for an effective response to global warming. Several countries from eastern Europe already participate in the work of the inter-governmental panel on climate change, and we would welcome any increased involvement by eastern European countries in this work whether that resulted from the changes those countries are undergoing or any other reason.

Water Privatisation

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what further progress he has made with the water share offers.

Mr. Howard [pursuant to his reply, 22 November 1989, c. 3]: The water share offers closed on 6 December. The United Kingdom public offers were 5·7 times subscribed in aggregate, triggering both overseas and institutional clawback in each of the offers. This represents a very satisfactory outcome.

I have placed in the Library of the House details of the allocation of shares to applicants.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Poland

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to make available resources, scientific expertise and technology through the Overseas Development Administration to Poland, for the purposes of environmental protection and pollution clean-up.

Mr. Waldegrave: We plan to discuss with the Polish authorities their general requirements for assistance including, where appropriate, measures to improve the environment. We have also sent a reconnaissance mission to look at the electricity generation sector, and the report will, inter alia, consider the environmental effects of the operation of the electricity utility.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much of the £50 million aid package to Poland is repayable.

Mr. Waldegrave: None.

Middle East

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he intends to invite the chairman of the Palestine Liberation Organisation to visit the United Kingdom for talks on the middle east peace process.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has at present no plans to do so.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last held and when he next intends to hold a meeting with the United States Secretary of State to discuss the situation in the middle east.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs discussed a wide range of issues with Mr. Baker earlier today.

Israel

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government monitor abuses of human rights in the Israeli-occupied west bank and Gaza strip; and whether Her Majesty's Government intend to discuss such matters with the Israeli Government.

Mr. Waldegrave: We follow closely reports of human rights abuses in the occupied territories and take every opportunity to remind the Israeli authorities of their obligation to administer the occupied territories in accordance with international law and human rights standards.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government will press Israel to recognise the Palestine Liberation Organisation and accept its offer of negotiations to settle the Palestine problem.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have repeatedly urged the Israelis over the last year to recognise that it is in their own interests to test the PLO's new policy of moderation in face-to-face negotiations.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government will press the United Nations Security Council to condemn Israel for its present stance in refusing to negotiate with the Palestine Liberation Organisation.

Mr. Waldegrave: No.

PLO

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he has any plans to meet senior officers of the Palestine Liberation Organisation to discuss the Palestine Liberation Organisation's position regarding peace in the middle east.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs has no such plans at present. But we maintain regular contact with senior members of the PLO.

Sarawak

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what studies he has made of the situation of indigenous peoples of the rain forests of Sarawak; what were the results of such studies; what representations he has made to the Government of Malaysia; and what response he has had.

Mr. Sainsbury: We have noted reports of the arrest of nomadic Penan tribespeople for blockading logging roads.

The Malaysian authorities are aware of international interest in the effects of deforestation on the global environment and on tribespeople. We have expressed concern to the Malaysian authorities, who state that their aim is to resettle the Penans and provide education, health care and an improved quality of life.

Combat Aircraft

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 27 November, Official Report, column 99, what categories of aircraft are included under the definition of combat aircraft.

Mr. Waldegrave: The definition proposed on 13 July by allied negotiators for the purpose of the CFE negotiations for combat aircraft is as follows:

> "a fixed-wing or swing-wing aircraft permanently land-based of a type initially constructed or later converted to drop bombs, deliver air-to-air or air-to-surface missiles, fire guns/cannons, or employ any other weapons of destruction. Any permanently land-based version or variant of these aircraft which has been modified to perform another military function is also included. An aircraft type should not, however, be included unless a combat variant of the type concerned exists within the ATTU area in the armed forces of a member state of the same treaty of alliance to which the participating state owning the aircraft belongs."

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what additional categories of aircraft have been included in the overall figure for combat aircraft given in the Official Report, 27 November, column 99, additional to those given in "Conventional Forces in Europe: The Facts".

Mr. Waldegrave: Those of aircraft in storage, together with versions and variants of combat aircraft which have been modified to perform another military function, such as training.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the reasons for the differences between the figures for North Atlantic Treaty Organisation combat aircraft in the region from the Atlantic to the Urals (a) provided in "Conventional Forces in Europe: The Facts", and (b) upon which North Atlantic Treaty Organisation has based its arms proposal to the conventional forces in Europe talks in Vienna; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Because in their proposal at the Vienna talks the allies included, principally in order to enhance the viability of the verification regime, certain versions and variants of combat aircraft which were not included in the publication "Conventional Forces in Europe: The Facts".

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the present level of North Atlantic Treaty Organisation combat aircraft in the region from the Atlantic to the Urals.

Mr. Waldegrave: On the basis of the definition of combat aircraft proposed by the allies at the Vienna talks, the current overall level is around 6,700.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on the continued production of chemical weapons under the terms of a chemical weapons convention.

Mr. Waldegrave: The draft chemical weapons convention under negotiation in Geneva would prohibit the production of chemical weapons immediately upon the convention's entry into force. The United Kingdom neither produces nor possesses chemical weapons.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government have begun work on enabling legislation with regard to the implementation of a chemical weapons convention.

Mr. Waldegrave: The likely requirements for national legislation are assessed continuously as the draft chemical weapons convention is developed. It would be premature to start trying to draft such legislation at present, however, since some complex issues, including verification, remain to be resolved.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will consider enlisting the assistance of any non-governmental organisations with the work of a national authority established under a chemical weapons convention.

Mr. Waldegrave: The work of the national authorities which it is envisaged would be established under a chemical weapons convention will cover a wide range of issues, reflecting the complexity of such an agreement. In this context, the specific expertise of organisations, such as the UK Chemical Industries Association, which we already consult closely, will be particularly valuable.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) whether signatories to a chemical weapons convention would still be able to reserve the right to retaliate in kind if subject to chemical attack, under the terms of the present draft chemical weapons convention;

(2) whether, under the terms of article XII of the draft chemical weapons convention, Her Majesty's Government will reserve the right to retaliate in kind if subject to chemical attack as presently permitted under the terms of the Geneva protocol, 1925.

Mr. Waldegrave: The relationship between a chemical weapons convention and existing international instruments concerning chemical weapons, such as the 1925 Geneva protocol, is a complex issue which is under consideration at the negotiations in Geneva. The current draft is not specific on the point raised.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the draft of the chemical weapons convention prohibits the continued production of chemical weapons once the convention has been concluded.

Mr. Waldegrave: The current draft envisages the cessation of chemical weapon production upon entry into force of the convention.

Montserrat

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will make a statement on his meeting on 6 December with a delegation from Montserrat; and what plans he has to meet any other delegations from Montserrat;

(2) what additional powers he proposes to confer on the Governor of Montserrat;

(3) what changes he is contemplating to the constitution of the dependent territory of Montserrat;

(4) what plans he has to lay before Parliament orders relating to the future of Montserrat.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he himself will be meeting the chief Minister and other representatives of Montserrat, now visiting London, before their departure on 9 December, and if he will make a statement on the purpose of their visit;

(2) if he will be allowing the people of Montserrat to express their view before 18 December on the constitutional changes proposed for the dependency; and if any steps have been taken for that purpose;

(3) what constitutional changes are proposed for Montserrat; what will be their effect on local self-government; what independent legal advice is officially available to the chief Minister in regard to the changes; what representations his Department has received in regard to the changes; and what replies have been made;

(4) what steps have been taken to consult the people of Montserrat on the proposed changes to its constitution.

Mr. Sainsbury: When I visited Montserrat on 5 November, I put to the Chief Minister certain proposals to improve the regulatory framework of the offshore finance sector and invited his Government to consider them. As these proposals necessitated changes to Montserrat's constitution, we took the opportunity to put forward a draft, incorporating other changes, including consolidating the territory's various constitutional instruments into a single document; and making some other improvements, including a Bill of Rights. A Foreign Office legal adviser went out to Montserrat a week later to explain and answer questions on the proposed new constitution. The Chief Minister was also advised by the Attorney General (legal adviser to the Government of Montserrat).

As part of the consultative process, I had further talks in London this week with the Chief Minister of Montserrat and his delegation. Following our discussions at the Foreign Office on 6 December, the Chief Minister and I recorded the understanding we had reached in an Exchange of Letters on 7 December.

We agreed on the benefit for Montserrat of the introduction of a consolidated constitution for the territory. We made the following undertakings:

(i) a new Constitution would be introduced as soon as possible by Order in Council, along the lines of that presented to the Government of Montserrat on 5 November, but with amendments agreed between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of Montserrat including a provision recognising Montserrat's right to self-determination. The main change to the existing constitution would be the transfer of responsibility for the offshore finance sector to the governor.

(ii) the Government of Montserrat would enact at the earliest possible date the legislation relating to the offshore finance sector recommended by the Coopers and Lybrand report. Thus, we felt that we could withdraw our earlier insistence that the governor be given powers to promote and pass legislation.

(iii) Her Majesty's Government would provide the necessary technical assistance to enable the Government of Montserrat to set up the necessary regulatory structure for the Montserrat finance sector, as recommended by the Coopers and Lybrand report.

Latin America

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will raise the economic problems of Latin American countries and international aid and debt with his European counterparts at the Foreign Affairs Council on 19 December.

Mr. Maude: The full agenda for the 19 December Foreign Affairs Council does not at present include the economic problems of Latin America. There is unlikely to be opportunity to raise these issues.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Benefit

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will calculate the total collective loss by mothers in Birkenhead resulting from the Government's decision not to uprate child benefit in line with inflation since 1979.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I regret that information relating to child benefit is available only on a national basis and cannot be given for particular areas.

War Widows

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate has been made of the number of pre-1973 war widows who are in receipt of (a) income support, (b) housing benefit and (c) rate relief.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: It is estimated that about 1 per cent. of pre-1973 war widows are in receipt of income support and that about 20 per cent. receive housing benefit which includes help with rates.

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what amount would be recouped by Government via lost or reduced entitlement for (a) housing benefit, (b) income support, (c) rate relief until April 1990 and (d) lower rates of community charge after April 1990, as a result of giving post-1973 war widow rates of pension to pre-1973 war widows; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I refer the right hon. Member to the statement made earlier today by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence.

HEALTH

Embryo and Fertility Research

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assistance his Department has given to embryo and infertility work within the Nottingham health authority area.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Decisions about the priority and resources to be given to infertility services are for individual health authorities to determine within their overall allocations and in the light of local circumstances. I understand that problems have arisen in Nottingham because of the demand of local consultants for extra payments for family planning and sterilisation procedures which the DHA is unwilling to pay as the work is within the doctors' contractual commitment to the National Health Service.

General Practitioners (Contract)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of extra work that is needed in order to implement the general practitioners' new contract.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Practices already offering comprehensive services will need to do no more than at present in order to meet the requirements of the GPs' new contract. Others will need to review their practice policies. A central objective of the new contract is greater attention to health promotion and the prevention of disease. Expansion of practice teams to include more practice nurses is a favoured option for meeting this new requirement on the evidence of the current recruitment patterns.

Ambulance Service

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he has any plans to meet the leaders of the Health Service unions to discuss the exposure to competitive tender of the non-emergency aspects of ambulance journeys;

(2) if he will make it his policy to refer the ambulance dispute to arbitration in exchange for an undertaking from the unions involved to allow the exposure of the non-emergency ambulance service to competitive tender.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is the responsibility of health authorities to provide the most appropriate and cost-effective means of transport for their patients. Health authority managers must also retain control of the amounts they pay for salaries and wages in order that resources are not diverted away from patient care. This does not happen if responsibility for pay awards is given to an outside arbitrator.

Child Migrants

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the implications for his policies of the book on child migrants, a copy of which has been sent to him by Nottinghamshire county councillor, the hon. Joan Taylor.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Child migration has not been seen as a valid response to the needs of children in care for over two decades. The emigration of children in care occurs only rarely nowadays, with the Secretary of State's consent, when it is clearly in the best interests of the child and the emigration plan has been rigorously scrutinised.

National Health Service Reform

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from the medical profession on the implications of the Government's opt-out proposals for hospitals for an integrated health provision in district health authority areas in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received representations on this subject from a number of organisations and individuals. DHAs will be responsible for planning and securing a comprehensive range of services to meet the health care needs of their population. In doing this they will contract with a range of service providers, including NHS trusts which will remain an integral part of the NHS.

HIV

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, if he will make a statement on the current state of scientific knowledge on the efficiency of transmission of HIV in the heterosexual population.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is well established that HIV infection can be and is transmitted by heterosexual intercourse, though research into the efficiency of this mode of transmission is difficult to conduct in such a way as to produce conclusive and reliable results. Transmission through heterosexual intercourse is the most common mode of transmission worldwide.

However, most studies of long-term partnerships carried out in Europe and north America have reported that 10 to 30 per cent. of female partners of known infected males have themsleves become infected, and 4 to 15 per cent. of male partners of infected females.

This was one of the issues discussed at the expert epidemiological symposium organised by the Department of Health and the Health Education authority on 24 November this year, the proceedings of which will be published in the new year.

National Health Service Training Agency

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what role he proposes for the National Health Service Training Agency in the provision of postgraduate education for the professions allied to medicine; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what was the cost of the National Health Service Training Agency for 1986-87 and 1987-88 and the staffing of it for the same years;

(3) if he will set out the current terms of reference of the National Health Service Training Agency; whether he has any plans to alter them in the light of the recent White Papers; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The National Health Service training authority (NHSTA) is a special health authority covering England and Wales directly accountable to the Secretary of State for Health. Its function is to promote training in the National Health Service other than professional education for which statutory bodies, such as those for nursing and medicine are responsible. Its terms of reference, as set out in the National Health Service Training Authority (Establishment and Constitution) Order 1983, are:

> to identify training needs;
> to formulate, co-ordinate and develop national policy and standards;
> to provide, or make arrangements for the provision of, training programmes, courses and research;
> to stimulate, monitor and review training activity;
> to advise the Secretary of State and health authorities on all matters relating to training.

We have no plans at present to alter the NHSTA's general terms of reference. The authority is itself considering its future role and mode of operation in the light of the White Papers, and developments in Government policy on vocational training.

The responsibilities of the Council for the Professions Supplementary to Medicine extends only to pre-qualifying training. Although theoretically post-graduate education is within the remit of the NHSTA, in practice, most development work on clinical education is carried out by the professional bodies themselves, while the NHSTA concentrates on multi-disciplinary training frameworks such as Health PICKUP.

The cash limits for the NHSTA for 1986-87 and 1987-88 were:

1986-87: £5·756 million.
1987-88: £5·769 million.

Staffing costs for the same year were:

1986-87: £2·042 million.
1987-88: £2·397 million.

In Vitro Fertilisation

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which establishments provide, or research into, in vitro fertilisation for childless couples, indicating which are National Health Service facilities and which not; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Interim Licensing Authority, which is jointly sponsored by the Medical Research Council and the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaeocologists, has since 1985 approved a number of centres to provide in vitro fertilisation, or to conduct specific research projects, or both. Details of these centres are given in the authority's annual report, copies of which are in the Library.

General Whitley Council Handbook

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his policy towards the use of section 33, paragraph 7 of the general Whitley council handbook.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Section 33 of the general Whitley council handbook outlines principles for dealing with local disputes on matters not arising from national Whitley agreements. We expect employing authorities and their staff to take account of these principles in determining the content of their local disputes procedures.

Dentists' Contract

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in arriving at a contract between his Department and dentists; and if copies of any documents relating to this matter are generally available.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Following negotiations during the summer, proposals for a new contract for general dental practitioners were approved in principle by the General Dental Services Committee on 16 October as a basis for submissions to the doctors and dentists review body. The committee commended the proposals to the profession as "better for patients, dentists and dentistry". Detailed discussions are still in progress, and a formal response to the proposals from the dental profession is expected in July 1990.

The proposals are summarised in the edition of "BDA News" dated 21 October 1989. A copy of the relevant article will be placed in the Library.

National Health Service Reform

Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the existing regional health authorities will comment to him on the expressions of interest in National Health Service trust status submitted by the required date, before any change is made to the form of the regional health authorities in 1990.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Expressions of interest in National Health Service trust status can be made at any time. The Department welcomes comments from regional health authorities and is working closely with regional health authority officers.

Health Authorities (Membership)

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many members of (a) regional health authorities and (b) district health authorities are from ethnic minority communities.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information on the ethnic origins of health authority members is not recorded centrally. The Department invites the Commission on Racial Equality to send us nominations when we are considering the appointment of RHA members and we encourage regional health authorities to seek nominations from local community relations groups when they are considering the appointment of members of district health authorities.

SCOTLAND

Babies (Special Care)

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each year since 1981 the number of special care baby cots in the National Health Service.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is set out in the table. The decrease in the number of cots is the result of action taken to bring provision into line with actual need. An expert working group recently estimated that in Scotland as a whole provision still exceeds reasonable requirements. Rates of admission to special neonatal care vary greatly between boards, reaching 35 per cent. or more of all deliveries in some places.

Market Research

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many market research and sample surveys were carried out by or for his Department in the last 12 months;

what was the cost of each; what was the total cost; how many were carried out in-house; how many were carried out for his Department by outside organisations; and what percentage of the total expenditure was paid to outside organisations.

Mr. Rifkind: In the last 12 months 37 surveys have been conducted by or on behalf of my Department, 33 of them by outside organisations. They vary greatly in size and significance, but the total expenditure was £1,115,000, 81 per cent. of which was paid to outside organisations.

Housing

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he intends to allow new town district councils to purchase vacant houses from their respective development corporation.

Mr. Lang: It is the responsibility of each development corporation to own and manage its housing stock in accordance with its own priorities. A possible role for district councils in the future of development corporation housing is outlined in paragraph 5.10 of the new towns White Paper. The White Paper commits the Government to formal consultations on the position in each town once an order for dissolution has been made and those consultations will be held with development corporations, district councils and representative tenant groups.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he proposes to advise or instruct development corporations to consult sitting tenants prior to any changes in the management of the housing stock within the new towns.

Mr. Lang: No. I am confident the development corporations can be relied on to use acceptable housing management practices when preparing management agency agreements such as those set out in paragraph 5.11 of the White Paper "The Scottish New Towns: The Way Ahead" (Command 711).

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide details of any request made by Scottish Homes to dispose of land under the terms of section 2(3A) of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1988.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Scottish Homes has made no request under section 2(3A) of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1988 for consent to dispose of land.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if Scottish Homes has notified him of its intention to dispose of blocks of vacant houses to private landlords or any other non-public sector housing agency.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Prior to the introduction of section 2(3A) of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1988 which came into force on 1 December 1989 Scottish Homes exercised its powers, under section 2(2)(h) of that Act, to dispose of land in accordance with arrangements made with the Secretary of State.

Such arrangements did not require Scottish Homes to notify the Secretary of State of particular disposals, provided that the sale was in the exercise of its general functions and the selling price was not less than the market value of the land, as determined by the district valuer.

Under these arrangements Scottish Homes agreed to sell six groups of new untenanted houses, totalling 203 dwellings, mainly sheltered or amenity, to registered housing associations.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what valuation he will place upon the sale of vacant houses by new town development corporations to private landlords or any other housing agency.

Mr. Lang: Any such disposal would be based on market values.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he last met the chairman and managing director of the Scottish new towns; and what items were discussed.

Mr. Lang: My right hon. and learned Friend last met the chairmen and managing directors of the Scottish new town development corporations on 1 December, when a wide range of matters concerning the corporations was discussed.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which Scottish new towns have informed him of plans to sell off vacant houses to private landlords or to any other housing agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Cumbernauld development corporation has recently concluded the disposal of 64 houses in the Balloch area of the town to the Bield housing association. I understand that further schemes for disposal to private landlords including housing associations are under consideration in a number of towns, but no further proposals have yet been submitted for my approval.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which Scottish new towns have informed him of plans to transfer the management of development corporation houses to private housing agencies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: No development corporation has put proposals to me for my consideration, although I am aware that there may be interest in forming such agencies in East Kilbride, Glenrothes and Livingston.

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what response he has given to the request from Ettrick and Lauderdale district council for £0·5 million to fund an urgent house building programme.

Mr. Rifkind: Next year's capital allocations, which we hope to announce before Christmas, will be determined, as in previous years, in the light of the aggregate resources available and the competing requirements of all 56 housing authorities. It is then for councils themselves to decide how to target the resources made available, based on their own assessment of housing needs in their districts, and to programme expenditure to reflect these needs, including the demand for new housing for rent if this is seen as a priority.

Road Study, Edinburgh

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many representations were made during the consultative period on the primary road study south of Edinburgh; if he will list all bodies and individuals who submitted opinions; and if he will publish the submissions received;

(2) if he will place copies of all the submissions received in the consultative study on primary road routes south of Edinburgh in the Library;

(3) when he expects to announce an official response to the study of primary road routes south of Edinburgh.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: To date representations have been received from some 200 individuals and organisations. As is normal practice, I have arranged that from 18 December a copy of all those which were not submitted in confidence will be placed in the Scottish Office Library in St. Andrew's house where they can be consulted by members of the public and copies obtained if that is desired. In response to the hon. Member's interest I am now arranging that a copy of these replies should also be made available in the Library. I expect to be able to make a statement on the outcome of the consultation early in the new year.

Bathing Waters

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what sums will be made available to each islands and regional council in Scotland so that they may progress towards compliance with the European Community directive regarding the quality of bathing waters.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Allocations for water and sewerage programmes for the current year were set at the high level of £126 million, 14 per cent. above planned provision, and were recently increased by £4·6 million. Further, my right hon. and learned Friend announced to the House on 6 December a major increase in investment in Scotland. The additional resources announced will mean a programme of £500 million over the next three years for water and sewerage services. This will allow regional and islands councils, which determine their own priorities in the light of local needs, to make faster progress in further improving the quality of the environment including any improvements related to the quality of bathing waters. The allocations to be made to each authority will be announced early next year.

Radiographers

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the statutory provisions which relate to the employment of radiographers.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In terms of the National Health Service (Professions Supplementary to Medicine) (Scotland) Regulations 1974, no health board can employ a person as radiographer unless that person is state registered under the provisions of the Professions Supplementary to Medicine Act 1960. That is the only statutory provision relating specifically to radiographers.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether, under any proposed tendering legislation, health boards will be required to stipulate in the specifications for contract that all radiographers employed must be state registered.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: There is no such specific tendering legislation nor is any planned.

Labour Statistics

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland in how many travel-to-work areas in Scotland the level of unemployment is higher than the British national average; and what is his estimate of current unemployment in the City of Glasgow.

Mr. Lang: There were 40 Scottish travel-to-work areas in October 1989 (the latest available date) which had a work force unemployment rate greater than the equivalent Great Britain rate.

There were 52,352 persons unemployed in Glasgow city local authority area in October 1989.

Radiographers

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he is considering the introduction of helpers into the radiography service.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is already open to health boards to consider appointing helpers to radiographers. As such staff are not recognised under the Whitley system, all appointments require the approval of the Scottish Home and Health Department. The mix of qualified radiography staff and helpers is a matter for the health board concerned.

De Ville Report

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will make available to hon. Members the contents of the De Ville report which relates to the question of helpers being used to assist chiropodists, physiotherapists and occupational therapists.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A copy of the report of a working group chaired by Mr. H. G. De Ville entitled "Review of Vocational Education in England and Wales" is available in the Library.

Electoral Roll

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the number of Scots registered on the draft electoral roll for 1989, and the comparable figures for 1987.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish draft electoral registers for 1989 contained 3,915,617 names, compared with 3, 978,196 in the draft registers for 1987.

European Structural Fund

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has made, and will make, to try and reverse the recent decision by the European Community that the Borders region was not eligible for assistance under objective 5(b) of the European structural fund.

Mr. Malcolm Rifkind: The Government put forward a strong case to the European Commission earlier this year proposing that the Borders should be given eligibility for objective 5(b) of the structural funds, but the Commission did not accept it. The Government will continue to press the case as soon as the Commission indicates it is willing to consider additional areas for eligibility.

Mental Hospitals

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will increase the funding provided for mental hospitals.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Allocations to health boards are not earmarked for specific purposes. However, both "Scottish Health Authorities Priorities for the Eighties" (December 1980) and "Scottish Health Authorities Review of Priorities for the Eighties and Nineties" (November 1988) identified care of the elderly with dementia and services for people with a mental handicap or illness as high priority programmes. Monitoring of expenditure on priority programmes began in 1981-82 and since then there has been a real-terms increase of 15 per cent. in the amounts spent by health boards on the three services.

Lennox Castle Hospital

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received about the findings of the recent survey carried out in Lennox Castle hospital of widespread malnutrition among the patients.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: None.

Earnings

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report tables showing the proportion of (1) manual, (2) non-manual and (3) all full-time employees earning less than (a) £157, (b) 160, (c) 163, and (d) half average earnings a week for (i) men, (ii) women, and (iii) all full-time employees excluding overtime, shift and public borrowing requirements premia, in each regional authority and borough.

Mr. Lang: Due to the extensive amount of information requested, I will write to the hon. Member.

Student Grants

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give the numbers of full-time students in receipt of student grants in Scotland under the students' allowances scheme specifying the numbers in receipt of (i) the full maintenance grant, (ii) maintenance grant reduced by assessment of parental contribution and (iii) nil maintenance, tuition fees only paid by Scottish Office, expressing each figure as a percentage proportion of the total number.

Mr. Lang: The latest available figures are set out below. They relate to the academic session 1988-89 and are in respect of all students assisted by the Scottish Education Department, excluding withdrawals during the session.

		Per cent.
Full maintenance	21,940	35·8
Part maintenance	23,902	39·1
Fees only	15,344	25·1

A fees-only award can arise from an assessment of parental income leading to a nil maintenance award or from an application for payment of fees only, in which case no assessment is made.

Adoption Register

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the rules concerning access to the adoption register in New Register house; and what measures he proposes to take to ease access for those who have a right to see such files.

Mr. Rifkind: In accordance with the Adoption (Scotland) Act 1978, the registrar general will, for the appropriate fee, have a search made of the index to the adopted children register on behalf of any person or permit that person to search the index. Thereafter the registrar general will issue to the person an extract of any entry in the adopted children register that he or she may require.

Access to the adopted children register is being eased by the conversion of the paper index to computerised format, due to be completed in 1990.

Sand Eels

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he intends to extend the ban on commercial sand eel fishing in Shetland to cover the 1990 fishing season; and whether he has any plans to extend a similar ban on sand eels to the Minch.

Mr. Lang: Officials will be discussing the latest scientific evidence on the state of sand eel stocks around Shetland with the fishing industry next month. Decisions on the 1990 fishing season will then be taken. We have no plans to ban sand eel fishing in the Minch.

Health Service

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland of the total planned additional expenditure on health services in Scotland for the year 1990-91, how much comes from new cash, cost improvement programmes and income generation, and how much of the total is for primary care.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Net expenditure on the National Health Service in 1990-91 is planned to increase by £223 million over 1989-90. All of this increase will be funded by the Exchequer. In addition, health boards should be able to generate a further £19 million from cost improvement programmes, and a further £0·5 million from income generation schemes under section 7 of the Health and Medicines Act 1988 over the levels achieved in 1989-90. Total net expenditure on primary care services is planned to increase by £68 million.

Inshore Fishing

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he intends to announce the outcome of the review of the Operation of the Inshore Fishing (Prohibition of Fishing and Fishing Methods) (Scotland) Order 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Lang: A new order, the Inshore Fishing (Prohibition of Fishing and Fishing Methods) (Scotland) Order 1989, has today been laid before Parliament. The new regulations have been drawn up following detailed consultations with the fishing industry during the past 18 months on possible changes to the fishing regime in Scottish inshore waters. I believe they strike an appropriate balance between protecting the respective interests of static and mobile gear fishermen, and between commercial fishermen and sea anglers. Copies of the new regulations, which are due to come into force on 1 January 1990, will be made available to industry organisations and through Her Majesty's Stationery Office.

Straw Burning

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his policy towards straw burning.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 8 December 1989]: The extent of straw and stubble burning in Scotland following the cereals harvest is much less than in England and Wales and presents correspondingly fewer problems. While my right hon. and learned Friend intends to make provision to enable straw and stubble burning in Scotland to be banned in the Bill to provide new powers to control pollution and waste, he does not propose to exercise these powers unless a good case for doing so has been demonstrated.

Capital Grant Scheme

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total number and amount of capital grant scheme awards made this year by the Scottish Education Department to village and community halls in Grampian region to the latest available date; and what were the figures for each of the past five years.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 4 December 1989]: The information is as follows:

Year	Number[1]	Amount of grant £
1984-85	15	177,912
1985-86	13	157,851
1986-87	9	94,642
1987-88	9	171,665
1988-89	8	198,780

[1] Projects approved for grant.

The 1989-90 figures include four projects which have been approved in principle. Further documentation is awaited to enable formal offers of grant to be issued.

The scheme has recently been reviewed and new arrangements for the allocation of grant have been introduced for 1989-90 and future years. The need to clear outstanding commitments from earlier years has required a temporary reduction, in 1989-90 only, in the amount of grant available for new projects. The funds available for new projects in 1990-91 will revert to a level similar to that of earlier years.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Straw Stubble Burning

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received on his recent proposals to ban straw stubble burning.

Mr. Maclean: We have not received any representations, but our proposals have been widely welcomed as striking the right balance betwen the interests of the farming industry and the general public, particularly those who live in the countryside.

Pesticides

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, which pesticides (a) he has already reviewed under his review programme, (b) he is currently reviewing and (c) he plans to review; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The review of pesticides approved by my Department is undertaken by the Advisory Committee on Pesticides. Pesticides containing the following active ingredients (a) have been reviewed, (b) are under review and (c) are awaiting review.

a) Reviews concluded by the ACP:
Aminotriazole
Alachlor
Aldicarb
Aldrin
Binapacryl
Biological agents used as pesticides
Bitertanol
Captafol
Chlordane
Cyhexatin
DDT
Dieldrin
Dimethoate
Dinoseb
Dinoseb-acetate
Dinoterb

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many pesticides and active ingredients are currently approved for use in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: There are currently 3,373 pesticide products approved by my Department representing 409 active ingredients.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many applications for new pesticides he has (a) received and (b) approved, for each year since 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Applications for pesticide registration (including renewals) received and approved by my Department were as follows:

Year	Received	Approved
1985	n/a	n/a
1986	n/a	n/a
1987	1,102	544
1988 (including off-labels)	1,363	1,068
1989 (as at 1 December 1989) (including off-labels)	1,718	906

n/a = not available.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which pesticides currently approved were approved (a) before 1961, (b) between 1961 and 1970, (c) between 1971 and 1980 and (d) between 1981 and the present day; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Approved pesticides are listed in "Pesticides 1989" a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. Those active ingredients approved prior to 31 December 1980 are listed as follows and those approved prior to 31 December 1965 are marked with an asterisk. A further breakdown of this information cannot be provided without disproportionate cost.

Hormone Growth Promoters

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those hormone growth promoters currently approved for use in the United Kingdom and state the species for which each is authorised.

Mr. Maclean: No hormonal products are approved for use as growth promoters.

Food Safety

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on what dates within the last 12 months he has met representatives from (a) the Food and Drink Federation, (b) the Co-op, and (c) Grand Metropolitan to discuss food matters.

Mr. Curry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on Tuesday, 28 November 1989 at column 192.

Eggs

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he last reviewed the import penetration of the United Kingdom egg market; and on what figures his current estimate is based.

Mr. Curry: We monitor the trade position on the basis of monthly Customs and Excise data. In addition, we conduct an annual review of agriculture, the results of which are now published in the series "Agriculture in the UK". "Agriculture in the UK 1988", which was published early in 1989, covered the position to the end of last year. The results of the current review will be published in due course.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) whether any eggs are imported to be sold in the United Kingdom without undergoing salmonella checks; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what tests for salmonella are required for (a) domestic and (b) imported eggs; and what are the reasons for any differences.

Mr. Curry: We are testing domestic flocks. Clearly we cannot do this for imports. But imported eggs are monitored for salmonella. When we find invasive salmonella in imports we take the case up with the member state concerned.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will exclude small-scale breeders of rare and fancy poultry breeds where eggs are not sold for human consumption from the provisions of his salmonella control measures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Breeding flocks of less than 25 birds are excluded from the scope of the Poultry Breeding Flocks and Hatcheries (Registration and Testing) Order 1989. For flocks of 25 birds or more the order provides for exemption from some of the testing requirements. This provision may, depending on the circumstances, be applied to small flocks of rare breeds.

Public Appointments

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many persons above the age of (a) 60, (b) 65 and (c) 70 years he has appointed to public bodies in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Curry: I regret that the information requested is not readily available.

Microwave Ovens

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will impose regulations on the temperature controls of microwave ovens; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: As the Minister made clear in the House on 6 December at column 325 the microwave ovens tested in the recent study are, in large measure, not defective. The manufacturers have issued updated instructions about their use, where the ovens were found to be not heating evenly, and have agreed to ensure that new microwave ovens will meet the higher standards which the tests have shown to be necessary.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the cost of his survey into microwave ovens; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The cost of the report by the Institute of Food Research on testing uniformity and reproducibility of reheating in domestic microwave ovens was £28,490.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what payment he received from industry towards the costs of his survey into microwave ovens; what was the value of models of ovens donated by the manufacturers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Industry made no financial contribution towards the cost of the survey. The models to be tested were decided by the researchers on the basis of sales figures for both branded and own-brand microwaves. The particular ovens were selected at random by the researchers from manufacturers' or retailers' warehouse stock. We do not have details of the potential cost if the Ministry had had to buy the 102 ovens concerned, as it would have made no difference to the study.

Mr. Beith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food which microwave cookers failed to heat food to a safe temperature in tests carried out by his Department.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list the manufacturer's name and model type of those microwave ovens which fail to heat products above 70 deg. C in his recent study; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he will now issue guidelines to consumers about the use of microwave ovens which fail to reach 70 deg. C; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: As the Minister announced on 6 December at col. 323, the manufacturers of microwave ovens have at his request issued updated instructions about their use, in cases where the recent study showed that food was not evenly heated. The Association of Manufacturers of Domestic Electrical Appliances (AMDEA) issued a press release that day listing the ovens and brief instructions and a copy is in the Library of the House.

Market Research

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many market research and sample surveys were carried out by or for his Ministry in the last 12 months; what was the cost of each; what was the total cost; how many were carried out in house; how many were carried out for his Department by outside organisations; and what percentage of the total expenditure was paid to outside organisations.

Mr. Curry: Information is not available in the form requested. Most statutory and other sample surveys are carried out using the Department's own resources and are reviewed at regular intervals to ensure they are cost-effective. The only major market research survey in the last 12 months was one on public attitudes to food safety which was conducted by outside organisations at a cost of £33,000.

Coffee

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has received any representations about the retail price of coffee.

Mr. Gummer: Yes. I have asked the Director General of Fair Trading to look into the matter.

Poultry Laying Flocks

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what additional financial support he is making to enable county council animal health inspectors to enforce his orders dealing with the registration and testing of poultry laying flocks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: The resources required for this work will be taken into account in future decisions on funding of local authorities.

Hill Livestock Compensatory Allowances

Mr. Amos: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make it his policy to ensure that any changes to hill livestock compensatory allowances agreed at the Agriculture Council meeting on 11 December do not discriminate against the interests of British farmers in less favoured areas.

Mr. Curry: The changes to the EC rules governing hill livestock compensatory allowances will not take effect until 1991. We have yet to take the policy decisions about the consequential effects on our national arrangements.

Food from Britain

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food why he decided not to appoint a representative of consumer interests to the council of Food from Britain.

Mr. Curry: Food from Britain's primary role is to assist British food producers better to respond to consumer requirements both at home and in the export market. The range of talent, expertise and experience now represented on the Food from Britain council will ensure that all interests concerned in Food from Britain's work, including the consumer interests to which the Government attach a great deal of importance, will be taken properly into account.

Ractopamine

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has concerning the uses of ractopamine in pig rearing.

Mr. Maclean: I understand that ractopamine is the active ingredient in growth promoters used in some other countries, but no such product has been authorised for use in the United Kingdom.

Fishing Quotas

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to bring forward his proposals for the 1990 fishing quotas, total allowable catches and other restrictions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The EC Commission's proposals on total allowable catches and quotas for 1990 are expected very shortly. The United Kingdom will of course be pressing for the best possible fishing opportunities for the United Kingdom fleet consistent with the conservation of the stocks.

North Sea

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, further to his answer to the hon. Member for South Shields of 4 December, if he will list the competent international organisations which have agreed that (1) harsh waters from the synthesis of intal; (2) aqueous residues from preparation of paracetemol; and (3) salt solution from manufacture of O-tolex-bighamide cause no harm to the marine environment under the terms of article XVI (a) of the ministerial declaration of the second international conference of the protection of the North sea; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: The ministerial declaration provides for a country to show to the competent international organisation that a waste causes no harm in the marine environment. It has been agreed that the Oslo Commission is the competent international organisation for this purpose, and the Oslo Commission has agreed an appropriate procedure to be followed. The Government have initiated the procedure and, as required by it, are currently in touch with other countries.

DEFENCE

Market Research

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many market research and sample surveys were carried out by or for his Department in the last 12 months; what was the cost of each; what was the total cost; how many were carried out in-house; how many were carried out for his Department by outside organisations; and what percentage of the total expenditure was paid to outside organisations.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: During the financial year 1988-89, the latest 12 months for which information is available, 28 market research and sample surveys were carried out for the Ministry of Defence at a total cost of £247,362. All were carried out by outside organisations.

Atomic Control Office

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many officials from his Department are assigned to the Atomic Control Office; what changes in numbers of personnel in the Atomic Control Office have been made since 1979; and how many meetings have been held between officials of the Atomic Control Office and officials or political representatives from the United States Government in each year since 1979 on the 1958 United Kingdom—United States mutual defence agreement on atomic energy matters.

Mr. Alan Clark: In 1979 the complement of the Atomic Control Office (London) (ACO(L)) was four persons. This was increased to five in the spring of 1987. Since January 1986 meetings between ACO(L) personnel and United States officials have averaged two per year. Figures for the years 1979 to 1985 are not readily available and the cost of obtaining them would be disproportionate.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation plans to deter the use of chemical weapons by the Warsaw treaty organisation forces following the complete withdrawal of United States chemical weapons from Europe by 1992.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: We believe that the strategy of flexible response will continue to provide the best means of deterring any aggression in Europe.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications for the deployment of United States binary chemical weapons to the United Kingdom in time of crisis under the terms of the United States' contingency deployment plan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 3 November at column 625.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the implications for the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation's chemical deterrence posture of the complete withdrawal of United States chemical weapons from Europe by 1992.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The United States will on present plans continue to retain a limited retaliatory chemical warfare capability, which will form a contribution to NATO's overall strategy of deterrence.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether NATO has adopted procedures for the authorised release of chemical weapons in Europe in time of crisis.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: No. I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 25 June 1986 at columns 163-64.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the United States of America has adopted a contingency deployment plan for the deployment of chemical weapons in Europe in time of crisis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given on 24 July 1986 at columns 489-90, to which I have nothing to add.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation policy on retaining the nuclear capability, specifically to hit targets in the western districts of the Soviet Union, in the aftermath of the intermediate range nuclear forces treaty.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Alliance reaffirmed at the NATO summit in May that for the foreseeable future there was no alternative to the policy of flexible response as a strategy of deterrence, and that this strategy requires a mix of nuclear and conventional forces, including European-based ground-launched nuclear missiles, which should be kept up to date where necessary.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what sub-strategic nuclear systems the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation currently possesses that are capable of reaching targets in the western districts of the Soviet Union.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I refer the hon. Member to volume 1 of the Statement on the Defence Estimates 1989 (Cm 675-I). The information he requires is listed in figure 12 under NATO's intermediate nuclear forces.

Tax-free Concessions

Mr. Nicholas-Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the tax-free concessions available to British service men based (a) in the United Kingdom, and (b) abroad.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Armed Forces will write to my hon. Friend.

Atomic Weapons Establishment

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence under what statute the Government will appoint a management contractor to run the atomic weapons establishment.

Mr. Neubert: No specific statutory authority is necesssary for the appointment of the initial management contractor at AWE by Government contract following selection by competion.

Mr. O'Neill: To as the Secretary of State for Defence what are the current annual labour costs of the atomic weapons research establishments at (a) Aldermaston, (b) Burghfield, (c) Cardiff and (d) Foulness.

Mr. Neubert: For security reasons, it has been the policy of successive Governments not to release information of this nature.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average length of service of (a) administrative, executive and clerical staff, (b) specialist staff, (c) industrial-craft staff and (d) industrial non-craft staff at the atomic weapons establishment site at Aldermaston.

Mr. Neubert: The average length of service of staff at AWE Aldermaston is:

Industrials:	8 years.
Non-industrials:	14 years.

A more detailed breakdown is not readily available.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current number of (a) administrative, executive and clerical staff, (b) specialist staff, (c) industrial-craft staff and (d) industrial-non craft staff employed by the atomic weapons establishment.

Mr. Neubert: It is not our practice to disclose details of the number or deployment of staff employed on the nuclear programme.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current number of staff attached to the safety division of the atomic weapons establishment; and what is its current budget.

Mr. Neubert: For reasons of national security it has been the policy of successive Governments not to reveal the number or deployment of staff employed at the atomic weapons establishment.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current shortfall in staff at the atomic weapons research establishments in Aldermaston in the following grades (a) administrative, executive and clerical staff, (b) specialist staff, (c) industrial-craft staff and (d) industrial-non craft staff.

Mr. Neubert: The current staff shortfalls at AWE Aldermaston broken down by category are as follows:

	Number
Administrative, Executive and Clerical Grades	43
Specialist Staff	129
Craft Industrials	66
Non Craft Industrials	54

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total amount of overtime that has been paid out at the atomic weapons establishment sites at (a) Aldermaston, (b) Burghfield, (c) Cardiff and (d) Foulness.

Mr. Neubert: The total amount of overtime paid out at the AWE sites during 1988-89 is:

	£ million
Aldermaston	6·6
Burghfield	0·9
Cardiff	0·4
Foulness	0·5

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans exist for the retention of the safety division of the atomic weapons establishment after the introduction of private contractors at the atomic weapons establishment.

Mr. Neubert: Safety will remain the highest priority. The detailed relationship between the existing safety division and the proposed compliance office is still under consideration.

Mr. O'Neill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what will be the nature of the relationship between the chief executive of the atomic weapons establishment and the compliance director of that establishment under the Government's proposals for the future organisation of the atomic weapons establishment.

Mr. Neubert: Following the appointment of the management contractor, it is planned that the compliance director will be responsible for advising the chief executive on environmental, safety and health requirements. In addition, the compliance director will be responsible to the Ministry of Defence on safety and security issues, with particular reference to the contractor's performance in these respects.

Frigates

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he next intends to place any orders for type 23 frigates.

Mr. Neubert: Shortly.

THE ARTS

New Museums

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many new museums have been opened in the last three years.

Mr. Luce: The Museums Association database estimated in 1988 that the number of museums and galleries in the United Kingdom was estimated to have risen to some 2,400 from approximately 1,750 in 1984.

I understand that the Museum and Galleries Commission estimates that the number has now risen to approximately 2,500.

National Television Archive

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he intends to set up a national television archive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: The British Film Institute already operates an extensive film and television archive and I hope that it will be possible for them to extend this in co-operation with the television industry.

CIVIL SERVICE

Agencies

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what further progress has been made in the establishment of agencies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: Since I last reported to the House, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment has announced, on 1 December at column 461, his intention that the Employment Service should be launched as an executive agency in April 1990.

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what proportion of the Civil Service is covered by both existing and proposed agencies.

Mr. Luce: Staff in the 10 executive agencies established so far under the Next Steps initiative taken together with those in the functions announced to date as candidates for agency status, represent about one third of the Civil Service.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Health and Social Services (Appointments)

The Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will list all area board and district manager and any deputy posts which have been recruited in the last four years, together with the salaries and length of contract;

(2) if he will list all director, assistant director and deputy posts which have been recruited or advertised in the last four years by health and social services boards, together with the length of contracts offered and the salaries;

(3) what information he has about further plans by health and social services boards to recruit management posts; what was the total cost of all posts recruited in the last four years and any posts currently being advertised; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The appointment of general managers and senior managers at board and unit of management level is a matter for boards to decide in accordance with determinations and guidance issued by the Department of Health and Social Services. This guidance is available in the Library.

The information requested in respect of general manager and senior manager posts including the present basic salaries and length of contracts is set out in the tables below.

The boards will be proceeding to fill other senior manager posts at board headquarters and units of management.

Table 1

General manager/senior manager posts for which boards recruited during period 1 December 1985 to 30 November 1989

Category	Post	Date of appointment	(1) Current basic salary	(2) Contract	Board
General Manager	Board General Manager	1/4/1987	39,340	3 years	Northern
General Manager	Unit General Manager (Antrim Hospital)	1/11/1989	31,075	3 years	Northern
Senior Manager	Director of Planning	4/9/1989	30,960	3 years	Eastern

Notes:

1. All of these posts are eligible for performance related pay in addition to the basic salary which for a unit general manager includes a discretionary amount in addition to the grade rate for the post.
2. Contracts are for three years and can be rolled on annually for not more than one year.

Table 2

General manager-senior manager posts for which boards are in the process of recruiting

Category	Post	(1) Date of appointment	(2) Current basic salary	(3) Contract	Board
General manager	Unit general manager (Belfast City hospital)	1 April 1990	34,122	3 years	Eastern
General manager	Unit general manager (Royal group of hospitals)	1 April 1990	35,673	3 years	Eastern
General manager	Unit general manager (Ulster, Ards and Bangor hospitals)	1 April 1990	30,228	3 years	Eastern
General manager	Unit general manager (Mater hospital)	1 April 1990	25,258	3 years	Eastern
General manager	Unit general manager (Musgrave Belvoir and Forster Green hospitals)	1 April 1990	30,228	3 years	Eastern
General manager	Unit general manager (Lisburn and Down)	1 April 1990	33,191	3 years	Eastern
General manager	Unit general manager (South and East Belfast and Castlereagh and Purdysburn)	1 April 1990	33,191	3 years	Eastern
General manager	Unit general manager (North and West Belfast and Muckamore)	1 April 1990	30,228	3 years	Eastern
General manager	Unit general manager (North Down and Ards)	1 April 1990	23,258	3 years	Eastern
General manager	Unit general manager (Armagh and Dungannon)	1 April 1990	29,945	3 years	Southern
General manager	Unit general manager (Craigavon and Banbridge hospitals)	1 April 1990	29,945	3 years	Southern
General manager	Unit general manager (Craigavon and Banbridge Community)	1 April 1990	29,945	3 years	Southern
General manager	Unit general manager (Newry and Mourne)	1 April 1990	29,945	3 years	Southern
General manager	Unit general manager (Area Mental Health)	1 April 1990	25,251	3 years	Southern
General manager	Unit general manager (Western)	1 April 1990	33,191	3 years	Northern
General manager	Unit general manager (Eastern)	1 April 1990	30,227	3 years	Northern
General manager	Unit general manager (Northern)	1 April 1990	26,754	3 years	Northern
General manager	Unit general manager (Altnagelvin Group of Hospitals)	1 April 1990	31,357	3 years	Western
General manager	Unit general manager (Foyle Community)	1 April 1990	29,945	3 years	Western
General manager	Unit general manager (Area Mental Health)	1 April 1990	29,945	3 years	Western
General manager	Unit general manager (Omagh/Fermanagh Hospitals and Community Services)	1 April 1990	30,792	3 years	Western
Senior manager	Director of Operations	1 April 1990	39,170	3 years	Eastern

Notes:

1. The unit general manager posts will be filled on a substantive basis from 1 April 1990. However, some may be filled on a designated basis before that date.
2. All of these posts are eligible for performance related pay in addition to the basic salary which for a unit general manager includes a discretionary amount in addition to the grade rate for the post.
3. Contracts are for three years and can be rolled on annually for not more than one year.

ENERGY

Mersey Barrage

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received about the Mersey barrage; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: As the hon. Member knows from my discussions with him, an application for inclusion in the initial tranche of the non-fossil fuel obligation has been made by the Mersey Barrage Company. This application is being considered and discussions are taking place with the company.

The Mersey barrage project can be considered for inclusion in the non-fossil fuel obligation only if agreement is reached between area boards and the company on a suitable contract and the project is commercially viable.

Coal

Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will provide details of any agreements for British Coal to supply coal to National Power and Powergen in future years.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy indicated the main terms of the coal supply contracts recently agreed between British Coal and National Power and PowerGen in the Second Reading debate on the Coal Industry Bill on 4 December. The details, however, are a commercial matter for the parties concerned.

Nuclear Power

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what plans he has to re-evaluate the role of nuclear power in the context of environmental damage from fossil fuels.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government recognise the contribution that nuclear power can make towards minimising the problems of the greenhouse effect and acid rain caused by the burning of fossil fuels. My hon. Friend will recall the statement made to the House by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy on 9 November when he said that > "the Government will wish to review the prospects for nuclear power as the Sizewell project nears completion in 1994".

The environmental advantages of nuclear power will be taken fully into account in this review.

Electricité de France

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what subjects he intends to raise when he next meets the head of Electricité de France.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend and I have no plans to meet the head of Electricité de France.

Reactor Programmes (Costs)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many meetings have been held between his Department and (a) the Central Electricity Generating Board, (b) the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority and (c) British Nuclear Fuels plc, on the issues of decommissioning costs, reprocessing costs and nuclear waste management costs for (i) the Magnox reactor programme and (ii) the advanced gas cooled reactor programme in the last 12 months; and what reports have been received by his Department from these organisations on these subjects over the past year.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department has had many meetings with the CEGB, BNFL and UKAEA in the past year at which the topics of decommissioning, reprocessing and nuclear waste management were discussed. My Department has received a report from the UKAEA reviewing the CEGB's decommissioning cost estimates for their Magnox and AGR nuclear power stations.

CEGB Chairman

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) how many meetings he has had with the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board since 1 September; how many telephone conversations he has had with the Central Electricity Generating Board chairman over the same time span; and what issues were discussed in each communication;

(2) what correspondence he has had with the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board since 25 July; what issues were addressed; and if he will place copies of the correspondence in the Library.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend and I are in regular contact with the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board about matters of mutual interest. These communications are confidential.

Nuclear Reactors (Czechoslovakia)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to offer United Kingdom designed nuclear reactors to Czechoslovakia, under the enabling arrangements of articles III and IV of the nuclear non-proliferation treaty, in support of Czechoslovakia's industrial and environmental plan to reduce dependence on fossil fuel-generated electricity.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend and I have no such plans.

Spent Nuclear Fuel (Sellafield)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make it his policy to deposit with the new European Environmental Agency full details of all contracts held by British Nuclear Fuels with foreign bodies for the reprocessing of spent nuclear fuel at Sellafield and to include details of all categories of radioactive waste arising.

Mr. Michael Spicer: It will be for the agency to request whatever information or analysis it requires to carry out the work programme approved by its management board in due course.

British Nuclear Fuels Ltd.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will set out his responsibilities in regard to the operation of the British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. Sellafield plant.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Responsibility for the operation of the Sellafield site rests with British Nuclear Fuels plc.

Uranium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the total of processed uranium exported by the United Kingdom in each year since 1973-74 (a) in tonnes and (b) in value at constant prices; and what was the total of uranium imported by the United Kingdom in each year since 1973-74: (a) in tonnes and (b) in value at constant prices.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Since 1979, uranium ore concentrate containing over 10,000 tonnes of uranium, has been imported for use in the United Kingdom civil programme. During the same period, uranium ore concentrate containing over 30,000 tonnes of uranium, has been processed by British Nuclear Fuels plc on behalf of overseas customers for subsequent export. Annual figures could be given only at disproportionate cost. The value of this material is commercially confidential. All such uranium is subject to Euratom safeguards and to the terms of the United Kingdom-Euratom-International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards agreement.

Murton Colliery

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement concerning the future use of the 40-acre spoil tip at Murton colliery.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The use of land belonging to British Coal is a matter for its management to determine. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Collieries (Work Hours)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are the average hours worked by employees underground, and surface, at Murton, Dawdon, Easington and Vane Tempest collieries week by week in the current financial year.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for British Coal. I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Privately-owned Mines

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many men are employed underground in privately-owned mines in the north-east.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for British Coal. I have asked the chairman of British Coal, the licensing authority for privately-owned mines, to write to the hon. Member.

Nuclear Electric plc

Mr. Eadie: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what will be the salaries of (a) the chairman and chief executive, (b) the deputy chairman with special responsibilities for production, (c) the director for corporate affairs and personnel, (d) the director of construction and future programmes, and (e) non-executive directors of the new company Nuclear Electric plc.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The designate board of Nuclear Electric have been appointed at the following salaries:

(i) The chairman is paid £125,000 per annum.

(ii) Full time members of the board are paid in the range £60,000-70,000 per annum.

Non-executive members of the Board have not yet been appointed.

Nuclear Power (Subsidies)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what discussions have recently taken place between officials from his Department and the European Commission on the implications of his plans to subsidise nuclear electricity in regard to European Community rules on energy marketing and competition policy.

Mr. Michael Spicer: A number of meetings have taken place with the Commission in recent months on a range of issues to do with electricity privatisation.

Energy Conservation

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give for each region and for the United Kingdom as a whole, for every quarter and every full year since neighbourhood energy action schemes started, the number of (a) neighbourhood energy action schemes, (b) draught proofing jobs completed under national energy schemes, (c) loft insulation jobs completed under national energy schemes and (d) trainees under national energy schemes.

Mr. Wakeham: Figures in the detail sought by the hon. Member for neighbourhood energy action schemes in the United Kingdom are not available for the period requested. The following table gives the aggregated data that is available in respect of the calendar years to the end of 1988:

	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987	1988
Number of operating projects at year end	69	85	162	360	427	235
Number of draughtproofing jobs completed in year	[1]25,715	39,915	67,808	123,621	162,631	164,749
Number of participant workers/ trainees at year end	n/a	932	1,630	1,767	2,027	n/a n/a—Not available.

[1] 1980-83 inclusive.

The number of loft insulation jobs completed under the homes insulation scheme is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give for the latest available quarter, and for the same quarter in the previous year, for each metropolitan county and each non-metropolitan county and Greater London, the number of (a) neighbourhood energy action schemes, (b) draughtproofing jobs completed under neighbourhood energy action schemes, (c) loft insulation jobs completed under neighbourhood energy action schemes and (d) trainees under neighbourhood energy action schemes.

Mr. Wakeham: Information on a county by county basis could only be made available at disproportionate cost. However, provisional information on a regional basis is available as follows in respect of community insulation projects co-ordinated by Neighbourhood Energy Action.

July to September 1989 (figures in brackets relate to July to September 1988)

	Number of schemes-projects	Number of draught-proofing jobs completed	Number of loft insulation jobs completed	Number of trainees-participant workers
East Midlands	28(35)	2,313(2,594)	10 (48)	271 (520)
London	12(33)	288 (497)	5 (40)	31 (610)
North East	18(26)	2,307(3,475)	48 (96)	253 (508)
North West	45(55)	5,005(6,350)	43 (44)	672(1,240)
Scotland	71(73)	8,455(3,559)	384(574)	755(1,122)
South East	23(48)	946(1,421)	26 (47)	121 (523)
South West	16(29)	802(2,049)	83(183)	190 (461)
Wales	35(46)	3,201(2,658)	64 (42)	338(1,001)
West Midlands	26(56)	2,458(4,393)	51(336)	314 (875)
Yorkshire and Humberside	24(36)	3,331(5,182)	76(180)	351 (724)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will place in the Library the official report on neighbourhood energy action schemes.

Mr. Wakeham: It is not entirely clear to what the question refers. However, it may refer to a recent report produced by Neighbourhood Energy Action for its own purposes entitled "Energy Efficiency and Employment Training—One Year On". That report is publicly available from NEA, which I have asked to send a copy to the hon. Member.

Pit Closures

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many pits have been closed since 1979; and what were the total estimated reserves in them at time of closure.

Mr. Michael Spicer: For a list of pit closures for the period concerned I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Rother Valley (Mr. Barron) on 29 November at cols 254-55. I have asked the chairman of British Coal to write to the hon. Member about the total estimated reserves in the pits concerned.

Emissions

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) how many tonnes extra of carbon dioxide emissions will be produced by United Kingdom power stations, using the generating plant and capacity currently in place, by an average growth rate of 2·5 per cent. in gross domestic product in 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92;

(2) how many tonnes extra of sulphur dioxide emissions will be produced by United Kingdom power stations, using the generating plant and capacity currently in place, by an average growth rate of 2·5 per cent. in gross domestic product in 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92.

(3) what will be the growth in percentage terms of carbon dioxide emissions from United Kingdom power stations, using the generating plant and capacity currently in place, by an average growth rate of 2·5 per cent. in gross domestic product in 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92;

(4) what will be the growth, in percentage terms, of sulphur dioxide emissions from United Kingdom power stations, using the generating plant and capacity currently in place by an average growth rate of 2·5 per cent. in gross domestic product in 1989-90, 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Future levels of emissions will depend on the nature of the plant mix employed to meet the demand for electricity and the shape of the associated load curve. There is no straightforward link between growth in gross domestic product and electricity demand.

TRANSPORT

European Environmental Agency

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what categories of information he will exclude from deposition with the proposed European environmental agency.

Mr. Atkins: It will be for the agency to request information from member states. Until we have received such requests it is impossible to say whether we can meet them.

Railways

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what funds he intends to make available to British Rail to enable the recommendations arising from the Clapham disaster to be carried out on the east coast line.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to the reply to the hon. Member for Southwark and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on 4 December at column 88. As my right hon. Friend has told the House, finance will not stand in the way of implementing the report.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list British Rail lines in Wales closed to passengers in each year since 1979; what discussions he has had with British Rail about the lines which could be reopened for the use of passenger services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: British Rail was given consent to close the Vale of Rheidol line last March. This railway is a narrow gauge steam railway which was operated principally for tourists. The line was sold to Brecon Mountain Railway Ltd. and has continued to operate to a similar timetable. No other BR line in Wales has been closed since 1979.

Vehicle Noise

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the average noise emitted by (a) a private car, and (b) a heavy goods vehicle proceeding at their respective national motorway speed limits; and by how much these increase as a result of infractions of the speed limit by (i) 10 mph and (ii) 20 mph respectively.

Mr. Atkins: Assuming a high speed road in good condition, the following are the estimated average noise levels received at a point 7·5 metres from the centre of the vehicle and 1·2 metres above the ground.

Vehicle type	Average noise levels dB(A) at vehicle speeds
	60 mph	70 mph	80 mph	90 mph
Private car	83	85	87	89
Heavy goods	90	92	93	95

Coastguard Service

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his reply of 27 November, Official Report, column 82, if he will list the primary, secondary and third 999 telephone routes to the south west coastguard from North Devon.

Mr. McLoughlin: The routing of 999 calls is a matter for British Telecom.

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his reply of 27 November, Official Report, column 82, if he will cause inquiries to be made into whether the 999 call indicated as having been misrouted was made to Milford Haven because Swansea coastguard was not available or did not answer the original 999 call.

Mr. McLoughlin: British Telecom has already, at the request of Her Majesty's Coastguard carried out an investigation into the misrouted call. Its finding is that the call was routed to Milford Haven due to a technical fault on the Swansea line, the operator automatically re-routing the call in accordance with standard procedures.

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether, in circumstances when the primary coastguard is not available on a 999 call, the secondary station contacted has a firm procedure for reporting back to the primary station or takes control of the incident; and if he will make a statement with regard to the incident on 15 August in which a youth drowned in Rapperee cove, Ilfracombe.

Mr. McLoughlin: It is standard procedure within Her Majesty's Coastguard that any station receiving an indication of a distress situation, by whatever means the information is received, will, if the incident is not within its area of responsibility, pass the information by the most expedient means to the appropriate station for action. In the incident on 16 August, Milford Haven coastguard, having received a 999 telephone call indicating distress, not within its area, passed the information firstly by VHF radio, and subsequently by telex, to Swansea coastguard.

European Council

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether matters relating to road safety were discussed at the recent meeting of the European Council of Transport Ministers; and what conclusions were reached.

Mr. Portillo: At the meeting I made clear our continuing commitment to road safety and to effective methods of reducing casualties. The presidency concluded the discussion of road safety by asking the committee of permanent representatives to draw up a list of further proposals which the Council might pursue, such as the development of standards for fitting seat belts. We believe that there are real opportunities to cut road casualties by better and safer vehicle design.

Motoring Organisations

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many meetings he and his predecessor had over the last year with the British Road Federation and other motoring organisations.

Mr. Atkins: We have met various road user organisations on a number of occasions over the past 12 months to discuss matters of mutual interest.

A47, Leicestershire

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he proposes to establish a pedestrian crossing on the A47 Uppingham road at Thurnby, Leicestershire.

Mr. Atkins: The Department has decided to change the traffic signals at the junction of the A47 Uppingham road and Station road, Thurnby, to include pedestrian facilities.

The work will be carried out as soon as new control equipment can be manufactured, which is expected to take four to six months.

ENVIRONMENT

Housing Co-operatives

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his reply of 4 December concerning circular HC31/88, if he will relax the criteria for housing co-operatives, which at present are outside the scope of the criteria in the circular; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The Housing Corporation is prepared to apply the criteria in circulars HC 31/88 and HC 74/89 (which has just been issued) flexibly. If the hon. Member has a particular case in mind, he may like to take it up with the corporation direct.

Chemically Polluted Land

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the development of a national register for chemically polluted land.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: We are reviewing possible registration systems but currently favour the concept of locally held registers of previous land uses which could have given rise to contamination.

Greenhouse Effect

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy at the next meeting of the European Environment Council to introduce policies to reduce the greenhouse effect by restricting road transport use to lower carbon dioxide releases.

Mr. Trippier: We recognise the important contribution which emissions of carbon dioxide from vehicles make to the greenhouse effect. At the Environment Council meeting on 28 November, my right hon. Friend urged the European Commission to bring forward proposals to reduce these emissions.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many tonnes of carbon dioxide have been released into the atmosphere of the United Kingdom in 1987, 1988 and 1989 (a) by electricity generating stations, and (b) by petrol and diesel-driven road vehicles.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Estimated carbon dioxide emission as carbon from selected sources in 1987 was as follows:

(Million tonnes)

	1987
Power stations	54·7
Petrol-driven road vehicles	19·0
Diesel-driven road vehicles	7·3
All sources	158·6

Figures for 1988 are currently being prepared and will be published in the Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics early next year. Figures for 1989 are not yet available.

Smoking Room (House of Commons)

Sir Nicholas Fairbairn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the cost of redecorating the Smoking Room in the summer recess; and why the redecoration has taken place.

Mr. Chope: The renovation of the Smoking Room was undertaken in two stages during the 1988 and 1989 summer recesses as part of the planned programme of work in the Palace of Westminster. The cost, which includes some electrical work, was £9,000.

Tritium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what records he, or Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution, has concerning the imports of radioactive tritium from Dall Ridge laboratories in the United States of America to the United Kingdom over the past year.

Mr. Trippier: This Department does not maintain records of tritium imports. Users of tritium must be registered by HMIP under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960. A condition of registration requires that proper records relating to the keeping and use of all radioactive material must be maintained. These records are subject to scrutiny by HMIP inspectors.

Bottle, Can and Paper Banks

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to ensure that supermarket chains co-operate with his recycling policy for bottle, can and paper banks.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Retail groups, including supermarket chains, are represented on the Government's advisory group on recycling which, among other things, considers ways of encouraging the provision of recycling facilities. They also co-operated in drawing up the Government's programme in relation to the 1985 European Directive on Containers of Liquids for Human Consumption which specifically referred to recycling.

Emissions

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the type and amount of toxic emissions (a) per mile, (b) per minute of transmission, and (c) per head of number of passengers per mile or per minute of (i) a family sized car, (ii) a diesel-electric train, (iii) a double decker bus, (iv) a milk float and (v) a bicycle.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of carbon dioxide emissions into the atmosphere in the United Kingdom have been accounted for (a) by electricity generation, and (b) by petrol and diesel-driven road vehicles in 1987, 1988 and 1989.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Percentages of carbon dioxide emissions from selected sources in 1987 were as follows:

	1987
Power stations	34·0
Petrol driven road vehicles	12·0
Diesel driven road vehicles	5·0

In 1987 a little more than one third of carbon dioxide emissions in the United Kingdom came from power stations. Approximately 12 per cent. came from motor spirit and a further 5 per cent. from DERV. Figures for 1988 are currently being prepared and will be published in the Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics early next year. Figures for 1989 are not yet available.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of sulphur dioxide into the atmosphere in the United Kindom have been accounted for (a) by electricity generation, and (b) by petrol and diesel-driven road vehicles in 1987, 1988 and 1989.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Percentage of sulphur dioxide emissions from selected sources was as follows:

	1987
Power stations	73·0
Petrol driven road vehicles	0·2
Diesel driven road vehicles	1·0

Source: Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics, 1988.

In 1987 almost three-quarters of sulphur dioxide emissions in the United Kingdom came from power stations. Only a little more than 1 per cent. came from motor spirit and from DERV. Figures for 1988 are currently being prepared and will be published in the Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics early next year. Figures for 1989 are not yet available.

Housing (Handsworth)

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to issue guidelines to enable Birmingham city council to draw up a proposal for a housing renewal area in central Handsworth to enable a transfer from the existing housing action areas from 1 April 1990.

Mr. Chope: We shall shortly be consulting the local authority associations and other relevant bodies on the matters councils should consider before they declare renewal areas under part VII of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989. We aim to issue advice as soon as possible after the consultation has finished, and in any event before the end of March next.

Leicester City Council

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much additional resources he is proposing to allocate to Leicester city council as part of its new green proposals.

Mr. Chope: Local authorities' revenue expenditure is supported generally by rate support grant, or, in future, revenue support grant. This grant is distributed between authorities on the basis of an assessment of the cost for each authority of providing a common level of service. This assessment will be made on the basis of a formula, using statistical indicators applied to all authorities. The grant is unhypothecated and is not paid in support of particular services. It is for each authority to decide its own expenditure priorities, including those on environmental matters.

Ports

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will act upon the recommendation made in the report of the working group on the water transport industry with regard to an early introduction to the statutory ports of conventional assessment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The Government recognise the desirability of providing a common basis for the rating assessment of all parts of the ports industry, and indeed for other industries. We hope to return, so far as practicable, all the formula rated industries to conventional assessment at the 1995 revaluation.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many tonnes of sulphur dioxide have been released into the atmosphere of the United Kingdom in 1987, 1988 and 1989 (a) by electricity generating stations and (b) by petrol and diesel-driven road vehicles.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Estimated sulphur dioxide emissions from selected sources in 1987 were as follows:

	1987
Power stations	2·830
Power driven road vehicles	0·009
Diesel driven road vehicles	0·037
All sources	3·867

In 1987 almost 3·9 million tonnes of sulphur dioxide were emitted in the United Kingdom. Approximately 2·8 million tonnes came from power stations and less than 50,000 tonnes came from motor vehicles. Figures for 1988 are currently being prepared and will be published in the Digest of Environmental Protection and Water Statistics early next year. Figures for 1989 are not yet available.

Pollution

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had on the concept of making the polluter pay; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: It is an important and well established part of the Government's environmental protection policy that the polluter, not the polluted, should pay. The United Kingdom also subscribe to OECD and European Community recommendations and practice in this respect.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in reducing the pollution levels in the rivers Don and Rother.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 4 December 1989]: Yorkshire Water is carrying out a major programme to upgrade and extend the main sewage treatment works which discharge into the rivers Don and Rother and to improve the sewerage system in Sheffield. This programme, combined with improvements to industrial effluent discharges is expected to improve river water quality by the mid 1990s.

The National Rivers Authority is responsible for monitoring river and estuarial quality, and for securing any improvements which they consider are needed to meet new statutory water quality objectives to be set by the Secretary of State.

Bradford West End

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the meetings between his officials and 3D's Ltd., regarding the Bradford West End scheme; and if he will make a statement summarising the discussions.

Mr. Moynihan: Members of the Department's team of professional appraisers and other officials have had many discussions on the proposals for the West End development, with representatives of 3D Ltd., and officials from the local authority, at both the regional office and headquarters. Details of the precise dates are not readily available.

Advice given to the developers and local authorities regarding any application for city grant is the standard guidance contained in the city grant guidance notes. For reasons of commercial confidentiality it is not our practice to comment on individual city grant proposals.

Environmental Health Officers

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the numbers of environmental health officers employed by local authorities; whether the resources needed to cover their full range of activities are included in settling the revenue support grant; if he will list the activities considered when deciding the revenue support grant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: In setting the level of revenue support grant my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will consider all services falling to be financed from the general revenues of local authorities. The full range of activities undertaken by environmental health officers is therefore included. It is for local authorities to decide how many officers to employ.

Nirex

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to meet officials from United Kingdom Nirex Limited before the end of the year to discuss present progress in seeking a suitable site for low and intermediate-level radioactive wastes.

Mr. Trippier: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to meet representatives of Nirex.

Groundwork Foundation Trust

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his reply of 7 December, what funding will be given to the Groundwork Foundation Trust in Bradford in 1990-91 by (a) his Department, (b) the Countryside Commission and (c) the private sector.

Mr. Trippier: The Groundwork Foundation has allocated £40,000 in 1990-91 to the proposed Bradford Groundwork Trust from funds provided by my Department. As I informed the hon. Member in my reply yesterday, the preparation of a firm proposal for the trust is at present in hand. That proposal will be drawn up by a steering group composed of representatives of the local authority, voluntary organisations and private sector in consultation with, among others, my Department, the foundation and the Countryside Commission, and a programme of work and appropriate funding will then be determined.

London Pensions Fund

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will be making further appointments to the board of the London Pensions Fund.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has today appointed Councillor Steve Bullock of the London borough of Lewisham as a member of the board of the London Pensions Fund. This brings the membership of the board to nine. No further appointments are envisaged at this time.

Tenant Participation Grants

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress is being made on the introduction of a new regime for tenant participation grants, as recommended in the review of housing co-operatives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: The then Minister for Housing, the Earl of Caithness, announced on 27 June the Government's acceptance of the recommendation of the report of the committee which reviewed housing co-operatives in England, "Tenants in the Lead".

I have today issued a detailed consultation paper which sets out proposals for a new grant regime under section 16 of the Housing and Planning Act 1986. It proposes that, from April next year, local authority tenants will be able to receive assistance direct from the Department and from their council to develop housing co-operatives and other forms of tenant control considered in the review. The Housing Corporation is already consulting on its new grant arrangements for housing association tenants.

I am pleased to announce that £3·25 million will be available next year for tenant participation grants. Further provision will be made by the Housing Corporation for grants for tenant participation in the housing association sector. This major increase in resources demonstrates the Government's commitment to promote and develop new housing co-operatives and alternative forms of tenant participation.

Local Government Finance

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidelines he is issuing to local authorities regarding seamen who spend much of the year out of the United Kingdom and their requirement to pay the community charge.

Mr. Chope: Guidance on the treatment of Royal Navy personnel was contained in the community charge practice note No. 9 "UK Service Personnel". This was placed in the Library on 10 May 1989. This guidance suggests that married seagoers might be regarded as having their residence with their family except for continuous absences in excess of six months. Single seagoers who have no permanent home address will not be registered for the personal community charge except during periods of shore leave in excess of 61 days, where registration will be deemed to have begun from day 1. The Department issued further guidance which suggested that merchant seagoers might be treated in the same way as their naval counterparts. A copy of this guidance was placed in the Library on 26 October 1989.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list for each charging authority area, attributing grant income received by precepting authorities under the current grant system to each area in proportion to the adult population in that area: (a) the rate support grant payable for 1989-90 uprated to 1990-91 prices, in line with the assumptions used in his statement of 6 November and (b) the estimated amount of revenue support grant which would be payable in 1990-91 without safety nets or special grants, showing aggregates for each figure for each class of charging authority, for each region, showing inner London, outer London and the rest of the south-east separately, and for each county and metropolitan area;

(2) if he will list for each charging authority area, attributing grant income received by precepting authorities under the current grant system to each area in proportion to the aggregate of rateable values in that area: (a) the rate support grant payable for 1989-90 uprated to 1990-91 prices, in line with the assumptions used in his statement of 6 November and (b) the estimated amount of revenue support grant which will be payable in 1990-91 with safety nets and special grants, and (c) the estimated amount of revenue support grant which would be payable in 1990-91 without safety nets or special grants, showing aggregates for each figure for each class of charging authority, for each region, showing inner London, outer London and the rest of the south-east separately, and for each county and metropolitan area.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 7 December 1989]: The information requested has been placed in the Library. The figures are consistent with the exemplifications in the consultation paper my right hon. Friend issued on 6 November. Net receipts from the London rate equalisation scheme have been included with rate support grant for 1989-90 which has been scaled to the proposed total for revenue support grant for 1990-91.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list for each charging authority area, attributing business rate income received by precepting authorities under the current system to each area in proportion to the adult population in each area: (a) the estimated revenue received in 1989-90 from the non-domestic rate uprated to 1990-91 prices, in line with the assumptions used in his statement of 6 November, and (b) the estimated amount which will be paid from the national non-domestic rating pool in 1990-91 to each area, showing aggregates for each figure for each class of charging authority, for each region, showing inner London, outer London and the rest of the south-east separately, and for each county and metropolitan area;

(2) if he will list for each charging authority area, attributing business rate income received by precepting authorities under the current system to each area in proportion to the aggregate of rateable values in that area: (a) the estimated revenue received in 1989-90 from the non-domestic rate uprated to 1990-91 prices in line with the assumptions used in his statement of 6 November, and (b) the estimated amount which will be paid from the national non-domestic rating pool in 1990-91 for each area showing aggregates for each figure for each class of charging authority, for each region, showing inner London, outer London and the rest of the south-east separately, and for each county and metropolitan area.

Mr. David Hunt [holding answer 7 December 1989]: The information requested has been placed in the Library. The figures are consistent with the exemplifications in the consultation paper that my right hon. Friend issued on 6 November. Business rate income is shown for each area: it is not necessary to apportion it from precepting authority level to charging authority level. The total for 1989-90 has been scaled to the non-domestic distributable amount for 1990-91.

Property Services Agency

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the expenditure incurred on property (a) owned by the Property Services Agency and (b) tenanted by the Property Services Agency in each year since 1983 in Scotland; and what is the expected investment in each category in 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 8 December 1989]: The expenditure by PSA on major projects on properties held in the name of the Secretary of State for the Environment cannot readily be split between Crown hold and leasehold and a single figure is given for each year. The split is provided below for expenditure by PSA on maintenance and minor new works.

	Major projects	Minor new works and maintenance
		Crown hold	Leasehold
	£ million	£ million	£ million
1984-85	36·4	8·238	3·482
1985-86	30·1	9·166	3·358
1986-87	26·6	7·631	8·527
1987-88	22·0	10·070	3·723
1988-89	19·5	17·258	5·151

With the changed arrangements to be introduced next year, much of this expenditure will be funded by the occupying Departments from their own votes. It is not possible, therefore, to forecast future investment.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total staff complement of the Property Services Agency in Scotland; and what it is expected to be in 1990-91 and 1991-92.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 8 December 1989]: The number of permanent non-industrial staff in post in the Property Services Agency in Scotland is 1,022. The staff numbes for later years will depend upon the business which PSA Scotland secures.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the value of the assets held by the Property Services Agency and the value of leased properties in Scotland in 1989.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 8 December 1989]: The capital value of Crownhold properties in Scotland held in the name of the Secretary of State for the Environment, other than very specialised holdings such as museums and courts, is £155 million. The value of properties leased in the name of the Secretary of State for the Environment, is a matter for each owning landlord.

Gipsies

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about redefining the term gipsy as used in the Caravan Sites Act 1968; and what decisions he has reached on those representations.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 11 December 1989]: Over the past year I have received representations from two local authorities, the County Landowners Association and a travellers' education project. At this stage, I have no proposals to introduce legislation to change the definition in the Act.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will consider excluding New Age Travellers from alleged gipsy counts when considering applications by a local authority for designation status under the 1968 Act, as is practised in Wiltshire.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 11 December 1989]: Questions of definitions under the Act are for local councils to decide. My role is to assess whether an authority has satisfied its duty to provide gipsy sites before I grant designation.

Local Government Finance

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the likely grants, targets and level of the community charge in 1990-91 as levied by Suffolk county council.

Mr. Chope [holding answer 11 December 1989]: From April 1990 revenue support grant will be paid to charging authorities (the district councils in Suffolk). who will also set community charges. The expenditure of county councils will be financed by precepts on the collection fund administered by those charging authorities. Suffolk county council will therefore receive no revenue support grant nor will it set a community charge.

On present proposals, Suffolk county council will have a standard spending assessment for 1990-91 of £294·176 million, about £15·35 million or 5½ per cent. above its equivalent grant related expenditure for 1989-90.

No targets will be set for any local authority.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what amount of block grant was paid in each of the years from 1980-81 to 1989-90 expressed in cash terms and in constant 1989-90 prices for (a) each London borough, (b) each metropolitan district, (c) Inner London education authority, (d) former metropolitan counties and the Greater London council up to 1985-86, (e) each non-metropolitan county, (f) each non-metropolitan district and (g) each metropolitan joint board showing in each year the total paid to the respective classes of authority.

Mr. David Hunt: I have today placed this information in the Library.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Public Appointments

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Attorney-General how many persons above the age of (a) 60, (b) 65 and (c) 70 years he has appointed to public bodies in each of the last 10 years.

The Attorney-General: None.

Official Solicitor

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Attorney-General (1) how contractors were obtained, and how many tender prices were received, for recent work carried out at the home of Mr. Freddie Andrews (1976 No. 516);

(2) whether any independent inspection of completed works authorised by the office of the Official Solicitor has taken place; and whether the work was carried out satisfactorily.

The Attorney-General: As I said in an earlier reply to the hon. Member for Antrim, East, (Mr. Beggs), Official Report 23 February 1988, column 258, it is not appropriate to publish details of the affairs of any patient without the leave of the court.

An application may be made to the court by any person concerned about a particular case for disclosure of any information in respect of which the applicant can demonstrate a legitimate interest.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Rate Reform

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what arrangements he is making to enable full-time students to pay the community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: Arrangements made by local authorities to collect the community charge are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. I understand that local authorities have been given guidance on the procedures for ensuring that students are included in the community charge register for the area in which they reside while they are studying.

Full-time students, as defined by the relevant legislation, will be liable for only 20 per cent. of the community charge in their area, and the net impact of this discounted liability is among the factors considered when mandatory student grant rates are decided.

Civil Scientific Research

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of Britain's gross domestic product was devoted to civil scientific research (a) in 1978-79 and (b) 1988-89.

Mr. Jackson: This information is not available in the form requested since details of spending by industry on civil scientific research are not collected centrally. In 1988-89 public expenditure on civil research and development was estimated to be 0·52 per cent. of gross domestic product compared with about 0·6 per cent. in 1978-79.

Child Abuse

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many education authorities have specifically run courses to teach children about child abuse.

Mr. Alan Howarth: This information is not centrally available.

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science by how much teachers' pay will have increased less than inflation at the present rate of inflation during the period of time the interim advisory committee has been in existence by March 1990.

Mrs. Rumbold: Teachers' pay rose by some 12·5 per cent. between October 1987 and April 1989, the date of the last teachers' pay settlement. As compared with the movement of the RPI over the same period, this represents a real-terms increase of some 1·5 per cent.

The interim advisory committee has been asked to advise on what pay increase should be awarded to teachers for the 12 months beginning April 1990.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much a teacher at the top of the main professional grade will be worse off against the present rate of inflation by March 1990.

Mrs. Rumbold: A teacher at the top of the main scale outside London without an incentive allowance currently earns £14,694. Retail price inflation stood at 7·3 per cent. in October but is expected to fall during next year.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much a teacher's pay on the top of the main professional grade with an allowance has increased during the period that the interim advisory committee has existed; and by how much it is below or above the increase in average earnings over the same period.

Mrs. Rumbold: The first incentive allowances were awarded in October 1987. A teacher at the top of the main scale outside London who has held the same incentive allowance since October 1987 would have seen his pay rise by between 11 per cent. and 13 per cent. by April 1989. A teacher who received one of the 70,000 additional allowances coming on stream in 1988 and 1989 would have seen his salary increase by at least 17 per cent. Average earnings increased by 14·2 per cent. between October 1987 and April 1989.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what factors were used to determine the £600 million level of constraint placed on the interim advisory committee in the current year; and what projected rate of inflation is included in the figure.

Mrs. Rumbold: The IAC's remit reflects the Government's view that teachers' pay should be sufficient to recruit, retain and motivate sufficient teachers of the right quality within what the nation can afford.

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the level of constraint on the interim advisory committee in 1988 and 1989 in terms of a percentage rise against those years, inflation rates giving the actual percentage rise for each year and basing the 1989 inflation rate on the present figure.

Mrs. Rumbold: The remits given to the interim advisory committee for the teachers' pay settlements in 1988 and 1989 were £300 million and £385 million respectively. The IAC's recommendations led to increases to the pay bill of 4·75 per cent. in 1988-89 and 6·3 per cent. in 1989-90. When changes already planned are taken into account, the overall pay bill will rise by 7·5 per cent. this year. Retail price inflation stood at 3·9 per cent. in April 1988 and 8 per cent. in April 1989.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will increase the teaching profession's main pay scale to a level that will restore teachers' pay to a competitive position in a graduate labour market.

Mrs. Rumbold: The interim advisory committee has been asked to recommend what general pay increase should be given to teachers in England and Wales, having regard to the Government's view that school teachers' pay should be such as to enable the maintained school system to recruit, retain and motivate sufficient teachers of the required quality within what can be afforded.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what measures are to be taken to secure the position of the common main scale as the central feature of the teachers' pay structure.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend is considering what new pay determination arrangements should be put in place. It is likely that the pay structure resulting from these arrangements will continue to be given statutory force.

National Curriculum

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what he intends to do to ensure that teachers in all schools have time during the school day away from the classroom to deal with the additional duties attributed to the national curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: The organisation of the school day and the duties to be undertaken by teachers in their 1,265 hours of directed time are matters for head teachers. Not all directed time is taken up with contact with pupils in the classroom. There is scope for teachers to spend time on other tasks such as preparing for the national curriculum.

Teachers

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many trained teachers who have left the teaching profession the Government estimate can be persuaded to return to the profession.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The recruitment of qualified teachers returning to the profession has increased steadily in recent years. If the local authority employers support and encourage them, we believe that more will return. Almost 90 per cent. of re-entrants are women and over three quarters of these are aged 30 to 44. In 1986 there were an estimated 191,000 qualified teachers in this group not in full-time service in the maintained sector in England and Wales. We are considering how we might undertake a sample survey of qualified teachers not in service to establish what proportion might return to teaching and what conditions in the teaching profession would encourage more to return.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if a collegiate approach is to be adopted for the teacher staffing structure in schools.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Decisions about staffing structure in maintained schools are matters for LEAs and school governors, and not for my right hon. Friend.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will direct the interim advisory committee on school teachers' pay and conditions to investigate the organisation and management of schools to include a full assessment of the role of the classroom teacher, the role of heads and deputies and the existence of other specific management reponsibilities.

Mrs. Rumbold: The interim advisory committee has been asked to advise on what changes should be made to teachers' pay and conditions in the year beginning 1 April 1990. In so doing it will be considering the evidence that it has received on a wide range of issues.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what arrangements have been made to promote part-time teaching, job-sharing and managed career break arrangements for women returners to the teaching profession.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Government agree that every effort must be made to encourage former teachers to return to the profession. "Guidelines for Recruitment", published by the teaching as a career (TASC) unit in May 1988, drew to the attention of LEAs the need for such arrangements to attract qualified women returners to the teaching profession. Education support grant for 1990-92 will support the efforts of a number of LEAs in developing such provision.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his estimate of the number of extra teachers needed to supplement existing numbers excluding current vacancies to meet the additional teaching requirements generated by the new national curriculum in (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The implementation of the national curriculum in England and Wales does not imply increased demand for teachers, although it will change the balance of subject specialism. We are supporting in-service training to provide teachers with the additional support they need to ensure delivery of the national curriculum. The Department's memorandum on teacher supply to the Education, Science and Arts Select Committee—a copy of which is in the Library—analyses teacher demand and supply assuming full implementation of the national curriculum.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what means the Government will employ to persuade trained teachers to re-enter the teaching profession.

Mr. Alan Howarth: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Members for Barnsley, Central (Mr. Illsley) and Bridgend (Mr. Griffiths) on 14 November (Official Report, column 228).

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what measures are to be taken to attract sufficient numbers of qualified teachers to fill existing vacancies in British schools.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The recruitment of teachers to specific vacancies is a matter for local education officers, not for my right hon. Friend. The teaching as a career unit (TASC) advises LEAs in England and Wales on recruitment measures. TASC is also involved in publicity to attract qualified teachers back to teaching. The education support grant programme in 1990-91 will support LEA expenditure on local recruitment measures to attract back former teachers and recruit mature entrants with relevant qualifications. Measures eligible for ESG support include "keeping in touch with teaching" schemes and refresher courses, as well as job-share, part-time working and childcare provision.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to ensure that there are sufficient teachers to teach the national curriculum.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. Friend is taking the requirements of the national curriculum fully into account in setting the intakes to initial teacher training, in revising the criteria for initial teacher training courses, in planning the LEA in-service training grants scheme and education support grants and in managing the range of measures being taken on teacher supply.

Incentive Allowances

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many vacancies in teacher-shortage subject areas have been filled by the announcement of the incentive allowance system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: Incentive allowances were introduced in October 1987. They may be awarded to teachers who teach subjects in which there is a shortage of teachers, or who are employed in posts which are difficult to fill. There is evidence that an increasing number of allowances is being awarded on these grounds, but it is impossible to estimate how many teacher vacancies would not otherwise have been filled.

Licensed Teachers

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if qualified professional teachers will be paid extra money for providing support and back-up for licensed teachers.

Mrs. Rumbold: It will be for local education authorities to consider whether to exercise for this purpose any of the discretions available to them under the school teachers' pay and conditions document.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what support and back-up will be provided for licensed teachers; and what provision will be made for the help, advice and time of qualified, professional teachers.

Mr. Alan Howarth: It is for the local education authority and school governing body to ensure that appropriate support and training are provided for licensed teachers and that qualified staff are available to offer advice and guidance.

Training and associated costs for licensed teachers, including the provision of supply cover for a mentor teacher, are eligible for grant support under the local education authority training grants scheme.

Support Services

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what measures are being taken to provide increased administrative, technical and ancillary support in British schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend recognises the importance of administrative, technical and ancillary support for the effective running of schools. In England, some activities in the 1989-90 and 1989-91 education support grant programmes—notably some relating to local management of schools (LMS) and the national curriculum—will provide specific grants which can be used to improve such support. Otherwise, it is for local education authorities and, under LMS, their schools to decide for themselves what proportion of available funding to devote to such support. The education standard spending total within the proposed local authority grant settlement for England in 1990-91 allows for priority to be given to such spending, relative to the levels of spending assumed in the comparable total for 1989-90.

Teacher Training

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what measures have been taken to enhance appropriate in-service training for teachers in British schools.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The main instrument of support for in-service training in England and Wales is the local education authority training grants scheme which was introduced in April 1987. In the current financial year it will support LEA expenditure of over £227 million with grant of over £131 million. LEAs and schools are also expected to use at least three of the five non-contact days for in-service training. In addition, two further non-contact days have been made available in 1989 specifically for national curriculum-related training. It is for LEAs to determine appropriate training based on a systematic identification of the training needs of all groups eligible under the scheme.

The position in Scotland and Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Flexible Pay Schemes

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many local schemes of flexible pay equal to 1 per cent. of the salary bill, resulting from the latest pay settlement for non-clinical academic and academic-related staff in the universities have been approved for funding by the Universities Funding Council; how many have been rejected, and for what reasons; and how many such schemes which have so far been approved have included (a) specific elements for improved recruitment and (b) earmarked money for specific academic departments.

Mr. MacGregor: I understand that, as at 5 December, the council had approved 39 schemes. At that date, the council had not yet approved six other schemes: five because insufficient detail was available and one because too high a proportion of the institution's professors would have received payments. Eleven of the approved schemes included specific elements for improved recruitment. The earmarking of money for specific departments does not have to be notified to the council.

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list (1) the proportion of the total money so far approved for local schemes of flexible pay equal to 1 per cent. of the salary total to be spent on (a) promotion of staff to a higher scale, (b) accelerating individuals up their scale, and (c) moving individuals to discretionary salary points beyond the normal scale maximum, and (2) the proportion of the total money so far approved for such schemes which is to be spent on (i) professional staff, (ii) senior lecturers and readers, (iii) lecturers, (iv) others, and (v) women staff.

Mr. MacGregor: I understand from the Universities Funding Council that, because of the way in which some universities have submitted details of their schemes, the information is not available in the form requested. Of the total to be spent, the division is as follows:

29 per cent. is for increases in professors' salaries;

33 per cent. is for moving senior lecturers, readers and lecturers to discretionary salary points beyond the normal scale maxima;

14 per cent. is for accelerating senior lecturers, readers and lecturers up their scales;
4 per cent. is for promotions of academic staff;
14 per cent. is for discretionary scale points or accelerated increments for academic-related staff;
1 per cent. is for promotion of academic-related staff;
5 per cent. is for other purposes such as recruitment incentives.

Data are not collected separately for male and female staff.

Physical Education

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to establish the working party for physical education and the national curriculum; and when he expects it to report.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend hopes to make an announcement shortly about the timetable and arrangements for considering physical education within the national curriculum.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to increase the number of places for those waiting to train as physical education teachers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Howarth: My right hon. Friend announced aggregate intake numbers for initial teacher training for 1990-91 earlier this year. For the three-year period 1991-92 to 1993-94 a major planning exercise is taking place. Aggregate intake numbers for these years will be announced next year and will take account of our latest projections of teacher supply and demand.

Child Care Facilities

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to assist local education authorities in developing child care facilities for teachers; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Our proposed education support grant programme for 1990-91 includes support for expenditure of over £2 million on local recruitment measures to attract back more former teachers and to recruit mature entrants. The invitation to bid made it clear that it is for each LEA to develop its own recruitment model, but suggested that models might include the establishment of supporting and flexible working practices together with child care provision. In addition, I have encouraged local education authorities and school governors to respond to requests for the after-hours use of schools for child care.

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether it is now his policy to develop a city technology college in each local education authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: It is a key aim of the CTC programme that the colleges should make a major contribution to the development of higher standards in all schools. Within the last week my right hon. Friend has announced funding for curriculum development work to support the colleges' contribution to higher standards across the education system as a whole. He is also considering a number of other ways in which the lessons of CTCs could be made more widely available.

National Curriculum

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how much money has been earmarked to assist schools in the introduction of the national curriculum.

Mrs. Rumbold: Earmarked expenditure by local authorities to assist schools in introducing the national curriculum is supported at national level through specific grants. This financial year education support grants and the LEA training grants scheme will support some £100 million expenditure for that purpose. Otherwise, it is for each local education authority to determine how to deploy the total resources available to it to meet the requirements of the national curriculum.

Student Numbers

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the numbers of (a) university first-degree full-time students, (b) polytechnic and other higher education first-degree full-time students, (c) part-time university students, (d) part-time polytechnic and other higher education students, and (e) full-time postgraduate students, with (c) and (d) expressed in actual numbers and full-time equivalents, in each year since 1979.

Mr. Jackson: The information requested is shown in the following table.

Professional Qualifications

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what discussions there have been between his Department and (a) representatives of the academic world, (b) representatives of careers officers and (c) the student movement regarding the recognition of professional qualifications between member states of the European Economic Community; and what further action he will take between now and January 1991 on (i) raising awareness, (ii) consultation and (iii) resourcing.

Mr. Jackson: There have been no discussions with the groups mentioned. Responsibility for co-ordinating action on the implementation of the general directive on the mutual recognition of professional qualifications rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. The Department of Education and Science's responsibilities extend only to the mutual recognition of teachers' qualifications and any wider implications of the directive for higher education. In this connection the Department has issued and will as necessary continue to issue a series of briefing notes on the directive to a range of teacher and other interests directly involved.

Student Exchanges

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what discussions there have been between his Department and (a) the University Funding Council, (b) the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals and (c) the National Union of Students on the subject of student exchanges in western Europe after 1992.

Mr. Jackson: There have been no discussions with the three bodies mentioned on the specific question of student exchanges after 1992. However, the Department maintains frequent contact with the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals on a range of related issues, including the future development of the Erasmus programme.

SCOTLAND

Sheriffs

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many new (a) full-time sheriffs, (b) temporary sheriffs and (c) floating sheriffs were appointed in each of the years 1987 and 1988 and to date in 1989.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is set out in the table:

	1987	1988	1989[1]
Full-time sheriffs	2	4	3
Temporary sheriffs	30	33	nil
Floating sheriffs	1	1	nil

[1] To 8 December

Trials

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has regarding the number of summary trials in Scotland which were adjourned owing to pressure of business on the trial date between 1 January and 31 October.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In over 90 per cent. of the sheriff courts in Scotland the number of summary criminal trials adjourned due to lack of court time did not exceed 5 per cent. of the total number of trials set down in the period from 1 January 1989 to 30 September 1989. The figure for October is not available.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total number of sheriffs as at 30 November 1989 and 30 November 1987.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is set out in the table:

	1987	1989
Sheriff posts as at 30 November
Full-time sheriffs	[1]91	[1]95
Temporary sheriffs	83	100

[1] This includes 1 sheriff seconded to the Scottish Law Commission, and 1 sheriff seconded to the Lands Tribunal for Scotland.

Parliament House

Sir Nicholas Fairbairn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the estimated cost of the Cowgate extension of Parliament house; what proportion of the space provided is for courts; and what proportion is accommodation and offices for officials.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The estimated cost of the Cowgate extension is approximately £14 million. The extension, which has been designed to facilitate the more effective use of accommodation in Parliament house and to make provision there for work of the supreme courts which at present is undertaken in out-housed accommodation, will provide court accommodation (11 per cent.), office accommodation for officials of the supreme courts (44 per cent.), and general services and ancillary accommodation (45 per cent.).

Water

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he is considering bringing in any statutory procedures regarding disconnection for non-payment of water rates, by either a private or public authority.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: We have no proposals to introduce legislation regarding disconnection for non payment for public water supplies. Where water is supplied privately, arrangements depend upon the agreement between the parties concerned and are not subject to statute.

Forestry

Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on progress on forestry and farm woodland planting in 1989 over 1988.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Tree planting statistics for the private sector are normally collected and published by the Forestry Commission on the basis of grants paid in each financial year. For the financial years to 31 March 1988 and 31 March 1989, the areas of new planting so recorded were 23,821 hectares and 25,108 hectares respectively, including in the last year 126 hectares planted in association with the farm woodland scheme. In the first six months of the current financial year the figure was 11,992 hectares (including 1,681 hectares under the farm woodland scheme). By comparison, the area of new planting grant-aided in the first full planting season since the forestry tax changes introduced in the 1988 Budget, covering the year to 30 September 1989, was 15,293 hectares; included in that total were 1,825 hectares planted in association with the farm woodland scheme.

Expenditure

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will provide a detailed analysis of Scottish Office expenditure since 1984-85, using the new definition of the planning total compatible with the tables for the years 1990-91 to 1992-93, Official Report, 6 December, column 329-30.

Mr. Rifkind: Details of expenditure on the new planning total basis for the period prior to 1989-90 will be provided in the Public Expenditure White Paper which will be published next month.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report tables listing his Department's expenditure since 1984-85 (a) in cash terms, (b) in constant 1988-89 prices and (c) as a percentage of the United Kingdom planning total; and if he will publish similar tables for the years 1990-91 to 1992-93 based on the public expenditure plans contained in the Autumn Statement.

Mr. Rifkind: Details of expenditure on the new planning total basis for the period prior to 1989-90 will be provided in the Public Expenditure White Paper which will be published next month. The table below shows the information requested for the period covered by my statement last week (Official Report, 6 December, column 328-30.). The Comparison requested does not take account of expenditure in Scotland on services such as social security and defence, which are not included in my responsibilities.

	(a) Cash £ million	(b) Constant prices £ million	(c) [1]

Factory Space

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on available factory space in Scotland for the years 1987 to 1989, including the total square footage of factory space built and available, the number of units this represents, indications of the size ranges and the respective numbers of each, indications of the respective location of such space and indications as to the public-private balance of the development and ownership of these units.

Mr. Lang: There is no information available on private owned factories. The latest available figures on public owned factories relate to 1988.

Shellfish Waters

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has any proposals to assist regional and islands councils in Scotland to improve their sewage and sewerage discharge systems in order to meet requirements of the European Community directive on shellfish waters.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 11 December 1989]: Monitoring of waters designated under the European Community Directive on the Quality Required of Shellfish Waters is the responsibility of the river purification authorities. Where such waters fail to meet the standards of the directive, regional and islands councils, as sewerage authorities, may in some circumstances be required to carry out improvement works.

My right hon. and learned Friend announced to the House on 6 December a major increase in investment in Scotland over the next three years. The additional resources announced will mean a programme of £500 million over these years for water and sewerage services. This will allow regional and islands councils, who decide their own priorities in the light of local needs, to make faster progress in further improving the quality of the environment including inshore waters.

Scottish Bus Group

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has decided on the timetable for the sale of the Clydeside and Western subsidiaries of the Scottish Bus Group; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 11 December 1989]: My right hon. and learned Friend will shortly be publishing a disposal programme which will set out the basis on which the subsidiaries of the Scottish Bus Group will be sold. The first companies are expected to be advertised for sale around the beginning of 1990. It is not, however, possible at this stage to say when Western Scottish Omnibuses Ltd. will be offered for sale.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

C[illegible]bodia

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will take steps to withdraw any direct or indirect help in support of the Cambodian alliance led by the Khmer Rouge.

Mr. Sainsbury: I have nothing to add to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to my hon. Friend the Member for Broxtowe (Mr. Lester) on 8 November.

El Salvador

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made (a) to the El Salvador Government about the impeding of humanitarian work in that country by the army, and (b) to the United States President about the role the United States of America could play in helping to bring about a just settlement to the civil war in El Salvador.

Mr. Sainsbury: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 30 November to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton). The United States and Salvadorean Governments are aware of our views.

Vietnamese Boat People

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what funds the Government are making available this financial year towards the cost of accommodation for, and repatriation of, Vietnamese boat people in Hong Kong.

Mr. Maude: We have provided £15·95 million for this purpose. Parliamentary approval for this new service is being sought in the Winter Supplementary Estimate for the vote for other external relations (Class II, Vote 2) which covers expenditure of £5·8 million for Vietnamese boat people. A further £10·15 million will be sought in a spring Supplementary Estimate. Pending that approval, urgent expenditure will be met by further repayable advances of £10·15 million from the contingencies fund.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Excise Duty

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what reduction in the excise duties on beers, wines and spirits would be required to achieve reductions of 0·5 per cent., 0·75 per cent. and 1·0 per cent., respectively, in the retail price index.

Mr. Ryder: It it estimated that the required, across the board, reductions in excise duties on beer, wines and spirits would be as follows:

[1] Per cent.	[2] Per cent.
0·5	22
0·75	34
1·0	45

[1] Percentage fall in the retail price index

[2] Percentage reduction in excise duty on beer, wines and spirits

Civil Service Recruitment

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what factors he considers when recruiting for the Civil Service outside London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ryder: It is for Departments to judge when and where to recruit staff, in what numbers and at what grades.

Gross Domestic Product

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the value of the gross domestic product per head of the population for each member state of the EEC.

Mr. Ryder: Following is the information requested:

GDP/GNP per capita at purchasing power parities 1988

	US dollars
United Kingdom	13,301
Luxembourg	15,758

Benefits and Allowances

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will now give confirmed figures for April 1989, showing the rates of child benefit, single person's and married man's tax allowances at 1979 prices, on the same basis as given on 4 April, Official Report, column 4.

Mr. Lilley: The information is in the table.

Rates of Child Benefit as at April 1989

Benefits	Amount
Child benefit (£ per week per child)
Current prices	7·25
1979 prices[1]	3·44
Single person's tax allowance (£ per annum)
Current prices	2,785
1979 prices[1]	1,322
Married man's tax allowance (£ per annum)
Current prices	4,375
1979 prices[1]	2,077

[1] Figures converted to 1979 prices using the movement in the RPI between April 1979 and April 1989

Company Cars

Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give details of the method of computation of the fixed profit car scheme whereby the Inland Revenue calculates the maximum amount of non-taxable benefit employees may receive from their employers for using their cars on their employer's business.

Mr. Lilley: Under the fixed profit car scheme arrangements the Revenue calculates the taxable element of any mileage allowance payable by employers to employees using their own cars on business. The taxable amount is fixed by reference to mileage bands by deducting tax-free mileage rates for various car engine sizes from allowances paid by the employer.

Corporation Tax

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the amount of corporation tax forgone in each of the next five financial years assuming the profit forecasts for the water companies are as set down in listing agreement relating to each of the water holding companies as a result of section 95(8) of the Water Act 1989 precluding the operation of section 400 of the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1988 in certain circumstances.

Mr. Lilley: The water companies' tax liabilities over the next five years will depend on their taxable profits during that period. In accordance with normal practice, no estimates of these amounts were included in the prospectus and listing particulars dated 22 November 1989, a copy of which was placed in the Library by my hon. and learned Friend the Minister for Water. The disapplication of section 400 was designed to secure maximum flexibility for the Government in establishing the water companies' capital structures and hence to increase proceeds.

Civil Servants' Disturbance Allowance

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what level of disturbance allowance is currently payable to civil servants required to move house for reasons of their employment.

Mr. Ryder [holding answer 11 December 1988]: There is no disturbance allowance payable to civil servants required to move house for reasons of their employment. However, civil servants may be eligible for a range of allowances and other forms of assistance to reimburse expenses and additional costs incurred. The level of assistance is dependent on individual circumstances.

WALES

Rural Areas

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are the criteria by which his department assesses the desirability of influencing the extent of inward migration into rural Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: No such criteria are applied. Government policies are directed towards the establishment of economically viable communities within rural areas. Such policies are of substantial benefit in maintaining the fabric of these communities by sustaining local economies and creating jobs for the indigenous population, who might otherwise move away. The creation of new industries may of course require some skills which are not generally available within a particular locality.

Drugs

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his Department's assessment of the drug crack as it might affect Wales; and if he will increase his financial support of the voluntary agencies who are involved in Wales in the fight against drug abuse.

Mr. Grist: To date there have been no seizures of the drug in Wales but we should not be complacent. The Department, in conjunction with the Welsh committee on drug misuse in Wales, will continue to monitor the situation most carefully.

As to financial support, since the launch of the central initiative to combat drug misuse in Wales in 1986, this Government have made available annually increasing sums to help develop services—both statutory and voluntary—for drug misusers.

The provision for 1990-91 will be announced soon.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on his Department's work concerning drug abuse in Wales.

Mr. Grist: The Welsh Office is involved in the campaign to combat drug misuse in a number of ways. At the all-Wales level, the Department services, and is advised by, the Welsh committee on drug misuse (WCDM). Set up in 1986 to concern itself with the development of preventative measures, treatment, and rehabilitation services in response to the growing menace of drug misuse in Wales, WCDM has been particularly active. As well as meeting with all drug advisory committees in Wales, WCDM has produced advice and guidance on a number of issues.

Since the launch of the central initiative to combat drug misuse in Wales, the Department has made available annually increasing funds to help develop local services—whether statutory or voluntary—for drug misusers. Around £1·5 million is available in 1989-90.

While national publicity campaigns are adapted for use in Wales, the Department is currently developing a specific primary prevention programme in association with WCDM and the health promotion authority for Wales. Preventive education in schools is also most important. The Department supports activities to promote health education under education support grant and recognises measures to prevent drug misuse as a national priority for the local education authority training grants scheme.

Finally, there are clear links between drug misusers and AIDS and it is for that reason that the Department is making available some £180,000 in 1989-90 to facilitate the development of needle and syringe exchange schemes in Wales. These schemes are to be piloted over two years.

Bistre Nursery School

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet Buckley Town Council to discuss the future use of Bistre nursery school consequent upon the closure in 1990 of nursery school facilities in that building; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: This is a matter for resolution locally.

Home Renovation Grants

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the likely expenditure by local authorities on mandatory home renovation grants in 1990-91 in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: In view of the uncertainties of forecasting demand and the likely take-up of the new scheme, [illegible] set no limit on the amount which local authorities can spend on mandatory home renovation grants next year.

Expenditure plans for local authority capital spending in 1990-91 currently include £75 million to cover expenditure on mandatory home renovation grants, together with any improvement grants remaining to be paid under the existing grant system. If in the event demand exceeds that level, additional resources will be made available.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of jobs created by the use of mandatory home renovation grants in Wales in 1989-90 and 1990-91; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: No firm estimates have been made although I am sure that the benefits to the private sector will be considerable.

Housing (Capital Investment)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, if he will list by local authority in cash and 1988-89 prices local authority housing capital investment on (a) new building, (b) renovation of local authority dwellings, (c) renovation grants, and (d) other housing capital programmes for (i) each financial year since 1979-80 and (ii) planned capital investment for 1990-91, 1991-92 and 1992-93.

Mr. Grist: The information requested is voluminous. I shall write to the hon. Gentleman to provide tables for each year between 1981-82 and 1989-90 and place a copy of my letter in the Library of the House. Similar data for 1979-80 and 1980-81 will require additional clerical, as opposed to computer, analysis and I will provide these statistics as soon as possible thereafter.

For 1990-91, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced housing capital distribution for individual local authorities on 29 November 1989. The distribution is not hypothecated to individual housing services and it is for local authorities themselves to formulate their spending plans within the total resources available to them. For 1991-92 and 1992-93, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced only the Department's total local authority housing expenditure plans. Due to changes in the capital control system for 1990-91 onwards these figures are not directly comparable with those shown in the following tables I am providing for the hon. Gentleman.

Craft Initiative

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much financial assistance will be offered to the craft initiative between April 1988 and March 1991; to which organisations this money has been distributed in Wales; and if he will give a detailed breakdown.

Mr. Peter Walker: Funds are provided towards the promotion of the craft industry from a wide range of public bodies which co-operate in the craft initiative. It is estimated that in financial year 1988-89 approximately £250,000 of public funds was devoted to promoting the crafts industry, and this is likely to rise to around £500,000 this financial year.

Student Exchanges

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions there have been between his Department and (a) Welsh Advisory Board, (b) the Welsh Committee of the University Funding Council and (c) the National Union of Students in Wales on the subject of student exchanges within Western Europe; and what financial assistance he will offer to colleges of further and higher education so that such exchanges can be promoted.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: We have not had discussions on this subject with any of the bodies mentioned. Student exchanges are the responsibility of the institutions at which students are registered. Financial assistance for student exchanges is available under the European Community's ERASMUS programme.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the operation of the new community charge system from April 1990 onwards, with regard to whether anyone in Wales should expect an increase, in poll tax payment compared to rate payment, of over £25 in the first year; and to whom the safety net applies.

Mr. Peter Walker: I will be making a statement shortly.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Early-day Motions

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Lord President of the Council what was the estimated cost incurred by the tabling of early-day motions for the Session 1988-89.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: The estimated cost for Session 1988-89 of printing early-day motions is £763,000.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Lord President of the Council what was the estimated cost of responding to all parliamentary questions, oral and written, for the parliamentary Session 1988-89.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: It is not possible to provide the information in the form requested. However, over the period (November 1988 to November 1989) the average cost of answering written and oral questions was £53 and £87 respectively. During the 1988-89 Session a total of 39,540 written questions were answered. The total number of oral questions put down for answer was 23,932, but this figure includes a substantial proportion of engagement questions to the Prime Minister which are not answered unless the Member otherwise requests.

Refreshment Department (Pay)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he has any proposals to increase the pay of the staff in canteens or bars in the Palace of Westminster; and if he will make a statement on the present salary scales.

Mr. Beith: I have been asked to reply.

The salaries of permanent Refreshment Department staff are linked to industrial Civil Service pay scales and will be reviewed on 1 July 1990.

Line of Route

Mr. Lee: To ask the Lord President of the Council how many strangers were given conducted tours of the line of route in the latest year for which he has figures.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: In 1988, 128,084 visitors toured the line of route.

Satellite Television

Mr. Allen: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will make it his policy to buy transponder space on the television satellite to be launched in October 1990 in order that a dedicated satellite channel for Parliament can be established; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Geoffrey Howe: No, Sir. The establishment of a dedicated channel for coverage of parliamentary proceedings is an objective whose desirability has been underlined both by the Select Committee on Televising of Proceedings of the House and its report, and by many other Members. For this reason, the recent experiment with continuous broadcasting of the House's proceedings, using some of the spare channels on the Astra satellite, was widely welcomed. I understand, however, that this experiment, which depended on the donation of facilities by the organisations involved, has now come to an end. For the longer term, as the Select Committee made clear in its report, any such development must be a matter for the commercial judgment of the broadcasters, in the absence of public funding. So far as the Government are concerned, that remains the position.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police (Complaints)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the total numbers of complaints made against the police for the last 10 years, year by year, the numbers subsequently upheld and the number resulting in disciplinary action.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: Information relating to the total number of complaints investigations completed, the total number of complaints substantiated and the total number resulting in disciplinary action is published annually in the reports of Her Majesty's chief inspector of constabulary and of the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis, except for the commissioner's 1988 annual report. Owing to a change of format the Commissioner's 1988 report did not contain information relating to the number of complaints investigations completed or the number of complaints substantiated.

Information relating to the total number of complaints made each year is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Copies of the reports can be found in the Library.

Newspapers (Code of Conduct)

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about the code of conduct instituted by the editors of national newspapers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We have not as yet received any representations about the code of practice.

Crime Prevention Panels

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many crime prevention panels are in existence in England and Wales.

Mr. John Patten: At the end of June 1989 there were 398 senior crime prevention panels and 209 youth crime prevention panels in England and Wales.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Board

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff were employed by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board from the date of its inception; what is its current staffing level; and what has been the percentage change.

Mr. John Patten: The number of staff in post on 31 March 1965, at the end of the first financial year's operation of the CICB, was 11. The number now is 327, an increase of 2,882 per cent.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the regional breakdown of cases that form the backlog of cases for the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board.

Mr. John Patten: The board does not keep information in this form.

Association of Chief Police Officers

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has on how many former members of ACPO have subsequently taken up employment in banking security over the last 10 years.

Mr. John Patten: No record is kept of the employment taken up by former police officers after they have left the police service.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what practical steps he is taking to help the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board to reduce the backlog of applications.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Westminster, North (Mr. Wheeler) on Friday 8 December 1989 at columns 409-417.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the administration costs of the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board for 1988-89; and what percentage increase that represents since the date of its inception.

Mr. John Patten: Expenditure on the board's administration in 1988-89 was £7,469,000, an increase of 12,445 per cent. over the cost of the first full year of operation to 31 March 1965 (£59,537).

Prisons

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which four proposed new prisons have been eliminated from the new building programme for the mid-1990's.

Mr. Mellor: No new prisons have been eliminated from the building programme. Out of the full programme of 28 new prisons there are six on which construction or preliminary work has not yet started. Construction will begin on two of these in 1991-92 and 1992-93 as previously planned. It is decisions on when and where to build the remaining four which have been deferred.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Age-related Personal Allowances

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the age-related personal allowances within income support for the April 1989 uprating in current and April 1988 prices.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The information requested is as follows:

	April 1989 Rates £	April 1989 Rates at October 1989 prices £[1]	April 1989 Rates at April 1988 prices £[2]

Income Support

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will seek to amend section 8 of the Income Support Regulations 1987 to enable calculation of income support for single parents to take into account, as an expense, any child care fees paid by the single parent.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: We have no plans to do so. Housing benefit and family credit are the main benefits for single parents in work and have never provided help with child care costs. Nor is there any direct subsidy of such costs for people in work generally.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will review the workings of the attendance allowance system to give recognition to the fact that many of the elements of increased cost arising from severe illness or disability arise during the first six months following the development or diagnosis of that condition; and if he will take steps to assist such people to meet the financial burdens placed upon them during this time.

Mr. Scott: We are looking at the workings of the attendance allowance scheme as part of the re-examination of disability benefits following the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys disability surveys. We have already announced our intention to abolish the six-months qualifying period for people with terminal illness.

Child Benefit and Allowances

Sir Ian Gilmour: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish figures showing (a) child benefit and (b) child dependency additions payable with invalidity benefit and widowed mother's allowance in April 1979 and 1989 (i) at cash prices, (ii) at April 1979 prices and (iii) at April 1989 prices.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The figures are as follows:

Benefit	April 1979 rate £	April 1979 rate at April 1989 prices[1] £	April 1989 rate £	April 1989 rate at April 1979 prices[1] £

War Widows

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give a breakdown by region of the numbers of women who are in receipt of war widows pensions paid by his Department.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: The estimated numbers, grouped by War Pensions Committee areas, are:

	Numbers
Scotland	5,550
North East	8,250
North West	8,150
Midlands	6,350
London North	7,350
London South	10,400
South West	5,050
Wales	3,100
Belfast	1,450
Dublin	618
Isle of Man	145

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security upon which date pensions paid by his Department to war widows from the First World War were increased to the level of the pensions which were paid to war widows from the Second World War; on what grounds it was decided that the increase did not set a precedent for other groups of pensioners; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: Until 1946 the rate of the pension paid to widows from the first world war was higher than the rate paid to those from the second. In February 1946, following a general review of war pensions, it was decided that the standard rate of all war widows pensions administered by the Department should be the same and this has been the situation since.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many war widows were receiving war widows' pension in October 1975; and how many are receiving it currently.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: On 30 September 1975, 91,000 war widows were receiving a war widow's pension from this Department. On 30 September this year, the number was 56,176.

Disability

Mr. Blenkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he intends to bring forward proposals on benefits for people with disabilities, arising from the office of population censuses and surveys report, before the turn of the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) on 14 November at column 167.

PRIME MINISTER

Hollingbourne

Q7. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to visit Hollingbourne.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Fishing

Q29. Dr. Godman: To ask the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government have any proposals to improve both the occupational safety of United Kingdom fishermen and the safety of their fishing vessels as they go about their business.

The Prime Minister: The Fishing Vessels (Safety Provisions) Rules 1975 are currently under review. The review will take into account the provisions of the Torremolinos International Convention for the Safety of Fishing Vessels 1977 and any subsequent variations thereto which may be necessitated by the protocol to that convention which is currently under consideration by the International Maritime Organisation. Regulations made under the Safety at Sea Act 1986 to introduce safety training for entrants into the industry came into force during March this year.

Growth Rates

Q65. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what steps she has taken to assess the sustainability of different growth rates of the British economy.

The Prime Minister: An assumption for the medium term rate of growth of output that is consistent with declining inflation is given in chapter 2 of the 1989 Financial Statement and Budget Report.

St. Andrew's House, Edinburgh

Q68. Mr. Harry Ewing: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to visit St. Andrew's house, Edinburgh.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Teesside

Q74. Mr. Holt: To ask the Prime Minister if she has any plans to visit Teesside.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

Private Charity

Q92. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Prime Minister what recent representations she has received on the development of private charitable activity.

The Prime Minister: I regularly meet business people and other individuals concerned with private charitable activity. My attention has also been drawn to the 12th edition of "Charitable Trends" recently published by the Charities Aid Foundations who have suggested ways of increasing further charitable giving by both private individuals and companies. I know that my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary and my noble Friend the Paymaster General have had contact with the Council for Charitable Support and others on this subject.

President Gorbachev

Q129. Mr. Latham: To ask the Prime Minister when she next expects to meet President Gorbachev.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister when she will next have a meeting with the President of the Soviet Union.

The Prime Minister: I expect to visit the Soviet Union for talks with Mr. Gorbachev next June.

Engagements

Mr. Hanley: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 12 December.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 12 December.

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 12 December.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 12 December.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 12 December.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others, including one this morning at which I joined the task force of Westminster residents designed to improve and protect the environment in Westminster. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

Turkey (Human Rights)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Prime Minister how many times she has raised the issue of human rights in Turkey in the meetings of the Council of Ministers over the past two years; and whether she will raise this matter again following the Commission's report on Turkey and the European Economic Community.

The Prime Minister: I have not raised Turkey's human rights record at a European Council meeting in the last two years. The European Commission's report on Turkey's EC application has not yet been submitted to the Council. When it is, we and other member states will consider it carefully, taking into account all relevant factors, including human rights.

Foreign Heads of Government

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister whether written notes are kept of conversations between herself and foreign heads of Government.

The Prime Minister: Yes.

European Regional Fund

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister whether payments made by the European Commission in respect of objective 2 and objective 5(b) of the European regional fund will be treated in accordance with the correct application of the additionality principle; and if she will ensure that Community funds make a contribution over and above that of spending already planned within the United Kingdom.

The Prime Minister: I confirm that receipts from the European regional development fund will be treated in accordance with the correct application of the additionality principle (article 9 of regulation (EEC) No. 4253/88). The Government's public expenditure plans naturally take account of the expected level of receipts from the Community.

Constitution

Mr. Allen: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list those Ministers who are responsible for constitutional matters; and what those responsibilities are.

The Prime Minister: Ministerial responsibilities are set out in "The List of Ministerial Responsibilities" published by the Cabinet Office.

Official Ministerial Residences

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if she will list the names and locations of the official ministerial residences in her gift; and the cost of (a) upkeep and (b) entertaining for each year from 1977 to the present year for each building;

(2) to which Ministers the official residences in her gift were allocated in 1988; and to which Ministers they are allocated today.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 11 December 1989]: In addition to 10 Downing street, 11 Downing street and 1 Carlton gardens, the Government own a number of other properties in London, including Admiralty house, which are used by Ministers who require them for their official duties. Chevening and Dorneywood are also available as ministerial residences under the terms of their trust deeds. Chevening in Kent was occupied from June 1983 until August 1989 by my right hon. and learned Friend the Lord President; from August 1989 to November 1989 it was occupied by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor; and is now occupied by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs. Dorneywood in Buckinghamshire was occupied from May 1979 to January 1988 by Lord Whitelaw; from February 1989 to August 1989 it was occupied by the then Chancellor of the Exchequer, the right hon. Member for Blaby (Mr. Lawson); and is now occupied by my right hon. and learned Friend the Lord President.

Information on the costs of upkeep and entertaining is not held centrally.

High Technology Export Controls

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister what consideration was made of the role of strengthened high technology export controls to prohibit nuclear weapons proliferation at the European Economic Community Council of Heads of Government in Strasbourg on 8 December.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 11 December 1989]: This subject was not considered at the European Council meeting in Strasbourg.

EMPLOYMENT

Earnings

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will publish in the Official Report, comparable figures for journalists to those given in his answer of 15 November, Official Report, column 279, together with a table showing (i) actual earnings in each case in April, (ii) comparable earnings figures for manuals and non-manuals, (iii) the percentage of journalists earning less than £200, £300, £400 and £500, (iv) the average earnings of those earning more than £500 and (v) the number represented by the sample.

Mr. Nicholls: The increases in real earnings for journalists are provided in the table. The remaining available information is published in tables 86 and 92 of the 1979 and 1989 new earnings survey reports, copies of which are available in the Library. Figures of the average earnings of those earning more than £500 are not available.

Full-time adult male journalists in Great Britain

	Percentage increase

Lower quartile	35
Median	47
Higher quartile	67
Highest decile	52
Average earnings	48

Note: The increases shown are for April 1979 to April 1989 and do not relate to the same individuals at the different dates.

Source: New Earnings Survey data deflated by the RPI (all items).

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will publish in the Official Report a table providing similar information to that given in his written answer of 15 November, Official Report, column 279, concerning the increase in real earnings of male manual and non-manual workers in the decade to April.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 15 November 1989 (Official Report, column 279).

Restart

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were referred from restart interviews between July and September, inclusive, to (a) a job, (b) a job club, (c) EAS, (d) a restart course, (e) employment training and (f) to any other specific outcomes; and how many were interviewed in the same period.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is given in the table.

Restart Counselling: July-September 1989

	Number
Interviews	505,626
Referred to:
(a) a job	68,942
(b) jobclub	46,222
(c) EAS	18,176
(d) Restart course	15,775
(e) Employment Training	88,886
(f) Other specific outcomes	145,500

Key Training

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many employees of his Department, and of what grades, are currently seconded to Key Training of 10 Eaton place, Reading.

Mr. Eggar: No members of staff are currently seconded to Key Training.

Martin Report

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment pursuant to his answer of 23 November, Official Report, column 19, what proportion of staff he estimates had the opportunity to read the Martin report.

Mr. Nicholls: All staff in HSE will have had the opportunity to read the Martin report. Over 2,000 copies were printed and circulated freely within the organisation.

Training (Disabled People)

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what requirement training and enterprise councils have to monitor the number of disabled people participating in Government-funded training and enterprise schemes.

Mr. Eggar: It will be a contractual requirement for TECs to monitor the number of people with disabilities participating in the training and enterprise programmes which they run, and to provide regular information to the Department of Employment.

Training, Blyth Valley

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many persons in the Blyth Valley constituency are currently registered on the employment training scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: Information is not available for Blyth Valley constituency. The latest information available is that there are 5,614 trainees on employment training in the area covered by North Tyne area office, which includes Blyth Valley.

Oxford Polytechnic

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment why the section on graduate supply in the Training Agency's labour market report for Oxfordshire omits reference to the degree-level students at Oxford polytechnic; and what action he will take to remedy this omission.

Mr. Eggar: This was a most unfortunate omission. I understand that the Training Agency area manager concerned is writing urgently to all recipients of the report apologising for the omission and including details of the significant contribution which Oxford polytechnic makes to the supply of graduates.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Animal Slaughtering

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the implications for members of the Licensed Slaughterers and Animal Salvage Association of new Common Market health regulations.

Mr. Maclean: The proposal, if implemented as drafted, would have severe implications for members of the Licensed Slaughterers and Animal Salvage Association. We are therefore liaising closely with them in seeking arrangements to secure their long-term future under any new Community rules.

Agriculture Council

Mr. Amos: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Agriculture Council meeting on 11 December in Brussels, with particular regard to hill livestock compensatory allowances.

Mr. Curry: The Agriculture Council is meeting on 11 and 12 December. The Minister will report as usual to the House on the outcome.

Animal Feedstuffs

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether the ban on feeding certain animal protein to cattle will continue beyond 31 December.

Mr. Gummer: I recently made the Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy (No. 2) Order 1989 (S.I. 1989/2326) which will extend indefinitely the ban on the use of animal protein derived from ruminants in feed for cattle and other ruminants.

The current prohibition, which was due to expire on 31 December this year, was introduced to prevent this practice which is considered to be the probable cause of BSE. It was made clear when the original ban came into effect that it would be continued unless processing methods sufficient to destroy the causal agent were identified and were widely available. At present no such method of processing has been indentified and further research is needed on the time-temperature combinations necessary to destroy the BSE agent.

DEFENCE

Public Appointments

Mrs. Roe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many persons above the age of (a) 60, (b) 65 and (c) 70 years he has appointed to public bodies in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Neubert: The information is not available in the form requested and could not be provided without disproportionate cost.

Premature Voluntary Release

Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the figures for premature voluntary release from the Army for the second and third quarters of 1989 in the form of the reply on 18 May, Official Report, columns 275-76.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The information that my hon. Friend has requested is as follows:

Army premature voluntary release figures for second and third quarters of 1989

	Male Officers	Female Officers	Servicemen	Servicewomen
1989
Second quarter	194	11	1,051	32
Third quarter	238	11	1,018	26

Army Exercises, West Germany

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Army exercises in West Germany have been (i) prohibited and (ii) limited by central or local government in 1987 and 1988 and what has been the effect on the training programme of the British Army of the Rhine and the Berlin Brigade.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: I am not aware of any Army exercise in West Germany that was prohibited by central or local government in 1987 or 1988. All Army exercises in the Federal Republic and Berlin are planned and developed in close consultation with the appropriate central and local government agencies. Wherever possible, and taking due account of the need to maintain operational readiness, the Army has been more than willing to take their views into account when planning exercises, so as to minimise the impact of Army training on local communities and the environment. This has resulted—both in the Federal Republic and elsewhere—in increasing constraints which affect the realism and hence training value of some exercises. However, with careful and sensible planning it has been possible to work within these limitations.

SA80 Rifles

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many SA80 rifles have been delivered for use by the Army; how many have been subsequently found to be defective; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: At the 8 December 1989, Royal Ordnance plc had delivered 91,640 SA80 individual weapons. Of those, 2,106—that is 2·3 per cent.—have been returned or are awaiting return to Royal Ordnance plc for rectification.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total value of SA80 rifle purchases to date and the value of those rejected, after delivery, as defective.

Mr. Alan Clark: It is not the practice of the Ministry of Defence to release information that may be used to calculate details of costs, as these are commercial in confidence.

Army Pay and Allowances

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the purchasing power of the salary and local overseas allowance of the following ranks stationed in the British Army of the Rhine at 1 April in each of the past 10 years (i) private, (ii) staff sergeant, (iii) 2nd lieutenant, (iv) captain, (v) major and (vi) lieutenant-colonel.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The purchasing power in Germany of the salaries of service personnel, when taken together with their local overseas allowance, is broadly comparable with the purchasing power of their salaries alone when in the United Kingdom. Local overseas allowance is reviewed regularly to take account of changes in prices, both in the United Kingdom and in Germany, and of changes in the exchange rate.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the basic rates of pay for (i) corporal 1st class band 6 on technicians rate of pay, and (ii) sergeant 1st class vehicle mechanic on trade pay.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: Corporal technicians are paid in either band 2 or 3 depending on trade. Their pay also varies with their length of engagement. Sergeants are no longer classified as 1st or 2nd class for pay purposes and their pay rates vary only with pay band and length of engagement. Vehicle mechanics are in pay band 5 or 6 depending on the types of vehicles on which they are trained.

Daily rates of pay introduced with effect from 1 April 1989 for corporal 1st class technicians are as follows:

	Band 2 £	Band 3 £
Scale A (less than 6 years)	32·55	35·78
Scale B (6 to 9 years)	32·85	36·08
Scale C (9 years or more)	33·30	36·53

Current daily rates of pay for sergeant vehicle mechanics are as follows:

	Band 5 £	Band 6 £
Scale A	35·54	39·07
Scale B	35·84	39·37
Scale C	36·29	39·82

Non-commissioned Officers

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether, in view of the current shortage of personnel, he will give approval for non-commissioned officers with 22 years or more to be appointed second-in-command at company level in the Army.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The Army does not post even its most senior non-commissioned officers as second-in-commands at company level because to do so would mean that in many cases they would be filling posts ranking above junior officers. Opportunities do, however, exist for suitable warrant officers and senior non-commissioned officers to be commissioned.

Challenger Tanks

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Challenger tanks are at the moment out of commission in the British Army of the Rhine because of lack of spares; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The level of operational availability of the Challenger main battle tank is classified information. Problems have been encountered in relation to the supply of certain spares, but appropriate measures are in hand to restore the situation.

AS1 Rifle

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the precise causes of delays experienced because of the unreliability of the new AS1 rifle in bringing it into general use; when it will be reliable enough to be issued; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Alan Clark: The designation "AS1 rifle" is not one which we use: the individual weapon now being issued is the SA80 of which nearly 90,000 are currently in service. Of these, 2·3 per cent. will be returned to the manufacturer for rectification following mechanical defects which have become apparent during extreme service use.

Warrior Personnel Carriers

Mr. David Young: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he estimates that the steering and braking difficulties with Warrior armoured personnel carriers will be remedied; what effect these have had on their in-service use; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The difficulties have now been remedied, although some further work will be carried out on the cooling oil circuit over the coming year. The effect on service use has been minor.

War Widows

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the basis for awarding ex-gratia payments to the widows of service men killed in Northern Ireland prior to 1973; on what grounds it was decided that those payments did not set a precedent for other groups of pensioners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The extra payments were designed mainly to help the widows and families of those younger men who had no entitlement under the occupational pension scheme, which was at the time under review. Where entitlement did exist under the occupational scheme, this was taken fully into account in determining the size of ex-gratia payment to be made. Some account was also taken of any lump sums awarded as compensation by the Northern Ireland Courts. These arrangements applied to those regular service men or members of the Ulster Defence Regiment killed or injured as a result of terrorist activity in Northern Ireland, and were designed to recognise the exceptional circumstances at that time. They did not represent retrospection of the revised provisions which were introduced within the armed forces pension scheme for those who gave service on or after 31 March 1973.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what would have been the cost since October 1975 of paying pensions to those war widows widowed before 1973 at the same rate as post-1973 widows, for each year for which figures are available.

Mr. Archie Hamilton: The figures requested are not available on a year-by-year basis. Broad estimates of the cost of paying attributable forces family pensions to the widows of service men whose last day of service was before 31 March 1973, at the level of awards current at the time of estimation, have been made on a limited number of occasions. The most recent such estimate is that the cost would now be in the region of £200 million a year.

HEALTH

Health Care, Liverpool

4. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to improve the provision of health care in the Liverpool district health authority.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health expects to announce regional health authority cash allocations for 1990-91 very shortly. Regions can then decide on allocations to districts. There will be no reduction in resources for Mersey region despite a falling population.

Junior Hospital Doctors

13. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to reduce the number of hours worked by junior hospital doctors.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Reports have been received recently from regional health authorities on the results of our initiative launched in 1988 to reduce onerous rota commitments. These are being analysed but it is already clear that significant reductions have been achieved. I intend to invite representatives of the profession to discuss with me, early in the new year, what further action needs to be taken to tackle the remaining onerous rotas.

Abortion

14. Mrs. Maureen Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the most recent statistics on the numbers of abortions performed on girls aged 16 years and under.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In England and Wales in 1988 a total of 10,081 abortions were carried out on resident girls aged 16 and under.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give a breakdown by numbers of (a) previous children and (b) previous abortions of the total number of abortions performed in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 29 November 1989]: The number of abortions performed under the Abortion Act 1967 upon usually resident women by numbers of (a) previous liveborn or stillborn children and (b) previous abortions[1] in England and Wales 1988 are shown in the tables.

Notifications having at least one previous spontaneous miscarriage and also at least one previous legal termination, and women having more than one abortion under the Act in 1988 will be counted more than once in the statistics.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give a breakdown of the numbers and percentages of abortions performed on pregnancies of 18 weeks or more gestation in England and Wales in the latest year for which figures are available by (a) age of mother, (b) residency of mother, (c) grounds for abortions, (d) marital status of mother, (e) numbers of previous children and (f) numbers of previous abortions; and if he will indicate the numbers and percentages of those abortions which were performed in the public and private sectors.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 29 November 1989]: Numbers and percentages of abortions performed under the Abortion Act 1967 at 18 weeks or more gestation on residents and non-residents of England and Wales in 1988 by age of mother, residency of mother, grounds of abortions, marital status of mother, number of previous children and numbers of previous abortions.

Yorkshire Regional Health Authority

15. Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for health when he last met the chairman of the Yorkshire regional health authority; and what was discussed.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State last met the chairman of the Yorkshire regional health authority on the 14 November 1989 to discuss matters relating to the management of the NHS.

52. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to meet the chairman of the Yorkshire regional health authority; and what matters he proposes to discuss.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Health will be meeting all regional chairmen on 17 January 1990 to discuss matters relating to National Health Service management.

NHS Reform

19. Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to hold a referendum in health authority areas which propose to opt out of their local hospitals.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Government do not consider that it would be sensible for the proposed management changes in the NHS to be the subject of any ballot. There is no question of any hospital opting out of the NHS.

118. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give his latest assessment of the expert and lay public support for his National Health Service modernisation proposals.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have been greatly encouraged by the constructive support that I have received for the proposed improvements to the Health Service. Many of the individual letters I have received from members of the public endorse some or all of the proposals. The proposals are being increasingly backed by members of the health professions. The Health Reform Group, recently formed under the chairmanship of Professor Richard Lilford, is a good example of medical support for the reforms. The long established Hospital and Consultants Association has publicly disassociated itself from and disapproved of the BMA's campaign against the reforms. The National Association of Health Authorities has always given general support to our proposals.

72. Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from the Health Reform group, under the chairmanship of Professor Richard Lilford, concerning the proposals contained in the White Paper on reform of the National Health Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have received representations on the detail of the reform process by the Health Reform Group. A meeting between Ministers and the group is planned early in the new year when further contributions from members of the group will be received.

I am pleased to welcome the formation of this and indeed any Group of those working within the health Service who wish to propose constructive dialogue on the detail of Health Service reforms.

46. Mr. Maples: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on progress on the implementation of National Health Service reforms.

73. Mr. Quentin Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress is being made on the implementation of the proposed reforms of the National Health Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We are making good progress in putting into action the changes outlined in the White Paper "Working for Patients". I am confident that the NHS will be ready to implement the basic elements of the new and better systems of matching growth and resources with expansion of patient services by April 1991 once Parliament approves the necessary legislation. We have made £82 million available to finance progress towards implementation this year with a further £257 million available for initiatives in 1990-91.

We have issued detailed guidance on many subjects including the new contracting system for all district health authority hospitals and community units and on education and training for non-medical staff. We shall be publishing shortly a GP fund holder programme which will give more details about the operation of a GP practice fund.

We have recently launched a project to support district health authorities in detailed work in developing the key role which DHA's will have under the new system of identifying and obtaining the best pattern of services which will most effectively meet all the health needs of the population they serve.

We have received more than 180 expressions of interest from potential NHS hospital trusts. Seventy nine of them are proceeding towards being the first wave of applicants for trust status within the NHS in April 1991 and I expect many more to be ready for later waves of applicants in future years.

We have made £2 million available for implementation of medical audit this year. A £4·5 million scheme has been launched to develop information technology skills. Demonstration projects, aimed at improving the quality of care and services to patients, have been announced for five out-patient departments. The principles of general management are being introduced into the family practitioner committee system.

Good progress is also being made in relation to medical education and research. As I explained in a speech on 10 July, since sent to all hospital doctors, I intend to take powers to ensure, for instance the continuation of high standards of undergraduate, postgraduate and continuing medical education and research in all NHS hospitals. I will also ensure that postgraduate training posts are provided in NHS hospital trusts in accordance with the national objectives set out in "Achieving a Balance". Medical education and research will be further enhanced by the proposed increase in the service increment for teaching (SIFT) to meet 100 per cent. of the median excess costs of teaching hospitals. This will be distributed by Regions in consultation with universities.

The National Health Service and Community Care Bill is now before the House.

41. Mr. Ian Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the units which have applied to become National Health Service hospital trusts.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No units will apply for NHS trust status until Parliament has approved the necessary legislation.

38. Mrs. Rosie Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what criteria he intends to use in assessing applications by district health authority units, hospitals and related services for self-governing status when such applications if successful would result in all of a district health authority services becoming self-governing.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No units will apply for NHS trust status until Parliament has approved the necessary legislation. The key criteria were set out in working paper No. 1, "Self-governing Hospitals" and the outline application document circulated under EL(89)MB/148, which has been placed in the Library, set out the criteria in more detail. Each application will be judged on its own merits taking into account local circumstances. It may be sensible for services in some relatively small, cohesive districts to apply for trust status as a single entity. In any such case I would need to consider the overall size and manageability of the proposed trust; the extent to which services and management were integrated; the implications for patient choice and competition; and the views of staff and local people.

28. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether there are any experiments taking place to assess how the proposed National Health Service reforms would work.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Health Service is undertaking a wide range of projects designed to inform the implementation of the Government's proposals to improve services.

Social Workers

20. Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the extent to which social worker qualifications will be recognised across the European Community after 1992.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Under the first EC directive on the mutual recognition of qualifications, social workers holding a qualification awarded on completion of at least three years higher education and training preparing them for the profession will be entitled to have their qualification recognised by any member state which requires such a qualification. They may in some circumstances be required to have professional experience or to undergo an adaptation period. A second directive covering qualifications awarded upon completion of courses of less than three years has been proposed and is currently under consideration in Brussels.

Health Promotion and Education

21. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will increase the level of investment in health promotion and health education programmes.

Mr. Freeman: The importance that the Government attach to health education and health promotion is demonstrated by the increases to the Health Education Authority's budget. This stands at £28 million, nearly three times the 1986 budget of its predecessor the Health Education Council. The allocation for the coming financial year is still to be determined. In addition, health authorities spend an unquantifiable amount of their resources on a whole range of educative and promotional activity.

Drugs

22. Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his latest estimate of the savings to the National Health Service drugs bill as a result of the limited list of drugs.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: In 1985-86 the selected list scheme saved £75 million on the drugs bill. It is not possible to make meaningful estimates for subsequent years but there is every reason to believe that significant savings continue to be made.

32. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he intends making any new recommendations on the labelling of drugs available (a) on prescription and (b) over the counter to the general public.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have commented on a European Community (EC) Commission consultative document suggesting, amongst other things, revision of EC directive requirements on medicines labels. The EC Commission is expected to put a formal proposal for a directive to the Council of Ministers early in the New Year. It would be counterproductive and contrary to our EC obligations to revise the United Kingdom Medicines (Labelling) Regulations before the adoption of the new directive.

Ambulance Dispute

23. Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will meet representatives of ambulance staff to discuss pay and conditions.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave earlier today.

75. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what discussions have been held by his Department with the Association of Professional Ambulance Personnel concerning the present ambulance dispute.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Ministers and officials held several meetings with representatives of the Association of Professional Ambulance Personnel before I decided on 1 December to accept a body comprising the Association of Professional Ambulance Personnel and representatives of the employing authorities and health departments as a negotiating body for ambulancemen and women.

25. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a further statement on the ambulance dispute.

26. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will make a statement about the ambulance service dispute.

45. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met ambulance crews' union representatives about the pay dispute.

47. Mr. Barry Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received concerning the ambulance men's dispute; and if he will make a statement.

96. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the ambulance dispute.

123. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, if he will meet representatives of ambulance staff to discuss pay and conditions.

130. Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will meet representatives of ambulance staff to discuss pay and conditions.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friends and the hon. Members to the reply that my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State gave to my hon. Friends the Members for Christchurch (Mr. Adley) and for Suffolk, South (Mr. Yeo) and the hon. Member for Barnsley, West and Penistone (Mr. McKay) earlier today.

Spastics Society

24. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to meet the Spastics Society to discuss community care.

51. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he next expects to meet the Spastics Society; and what matters he hopes to discuss.

91. Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to meet the Spastics Society to discuss community care.

95. Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to meet the Spastics Society to discuss community care.

127. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to meet the Spastics Society to discuss community care.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to meet the Spastics Society in the immediate future. However, my right hon. Friend the Minister for Social Security and with responsibility for the disabled met representatives of the society on Monday 11 December to discuss conductive education.

Stockport Hospitals

27. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to visit Stockport to inspect its hospitals.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to visit Stockport. However, I hope to visit Stockport sometime early next year.

Clegg Report

29. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will establish an independent tribunal to investigate any changes in ambulance men's duties since the Clegg report.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: One of the suggestions made in 1979 in the Clegg report for joint examination by the employers and unions was the possibility of introducing, at no overall increase in cost, an all-in salary for qualified ambulance men and women. Such a salary was introduced at substantial additional cost in 1986 and led to radical changes in working practices. The offer made to the trade unions includes a joint review of the 1986 agreement in the light of three years' experience.

"The Future of Medicine in Liverpool"

30. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received in respect of proposals contained in the report "The Future of Medicine in Liverpool", commissioned by the Mersey regional health authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received various representations. These proposals are a matter for the health authorities concerned. I understand that the Liverpool and South Sefton health authorities are considering the report's recommendations.

Hip Replacements

31. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hip replacement operations per year are being carried out by the National Health Service now; and what was the figure in 1979.

Mr. Freeman: The estimated number of total hip replacement and other arthroplasty of hip operations performed on in-patients discharged from NHS non-psychiatric hospitals in England in 1986 (the last year for which information is available centrally) and 1979 were 40,900 and 30,730 respectively.

115. Mr. Riddick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hip replacement operations were carried out in the Yorkshire regional health authority area in the five years between 1974 and 1979 and between 1983 and 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is given in the table. 1986 is the last year for which information is available centrally.

Hospitals, Central Manchester

33. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the proposals for opting out by hospitals in central Manchester.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The decision on whether or not to prepare a formal application for National Health Service trust status, when Parliament has approved the necessary legislation, is a matter for the sponsors of the expression of interest in the unit concerned. There is no question of any hospital "opting out" of the National Health Service.

Community Care

34. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received concerning the impact of the community care White Paper on the mental health services.

Mr. Freeman: We have received two representations concerning the impact on mental health services of the Government's White Paper on community care, and are considering both carefully.

35. Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to meet the Association of Metropolitan Authorities to discuss the role of local authorities in community care policy formulation.

70. Mr. Wall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to meet the Association of Metropolitan Authorities to discuss the role of local authorities in community care policy formulation.

80. Mr. Litherland: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to meet the Association of Metropolitan Authorities to discuss the role of local authorities in community care policy formulation.

90. Mr. John Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he next expects to meet the Association of Metropolitan Authorities; and what matters he hopes to discuss.

110. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to meet the Association of Metropolitan Authorities to discuss the role of local authorities in community care policy formulation.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I met representatives of the Association of metropolitan Authorities (AMA) on 2 November and again on 16 November to discuss community care. Officials have been meeting regularly with officers of the association over recent months to discuss a range of community care issues, including detailed financial matters. We shall continue to engage in regular consultation with the AMA and the other Local Authority Associations as we plan the implementation of our proposals for community care which were set out in our recent White Paper, "Caring for People" (Cm. 849).

36. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what comments he has received on the White Paper on community care.

78. Mr. Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what comments he has received on the White Paper on community care.

82. Mr. Cunliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what comments he has received on the White Paper on community care.

108. Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what comments he has received in response to the community care White Paper.

119. Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what comments he has received on the White Paper on community care.

120. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received since the publication of the White Paper on Community care and the publication of the National Health Service and Community Care Bill.

121. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received in the White Paper on community care; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received several representations following publication of our White Paper "Caring for People: Community Care in the Next Decade and Beyond'. Most have expressed a general welcome for our proposals. Some have raised detailed concerns about a number of implementation issues which we shall be discussing with representatives of the local authority associations and other interested parties as part of our preparations for implementation in April 1991.

37. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on services for disabled patients and the Government's proposals for community care.

94. Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about care for the disabled and the elderly.

Mr. Freeman: The Government's policies for improving health services and community care for all are set out in our White Papers, "Working for Patients" (Cm 555) and "Caring for People" (Cm 849). Under the proposals for NHS services district health authorities will be responsible for seeing that the needs of all their resident population, including elderly people and those with disabilities, are met and that patients have access to a comprehensive range of high quality, value for money services. Paragraph 2.12 of "Caring for People" sets out our particular priorities for health and community care for elderly people and people with disabilities. They are to promote positive and healthy lifestyles, promote coherent networks of local services designed to assist people to live dignified and independent lives in their own homes, provide a full range of appropriate health care facilities for those who require it, avoid unnecessary institutional care by ensuring that decisions on the provisions of services are made on the basis of assessed need, and ensure improved access to information about local and national facilities including respite care, and a greater involvement of patients, clients and carers in the development of services. In addition under our new contract for general medical practitioners GPs will be expected to offer a visit to those aged 75 or over to see their home environment, find out whether carers and relatives are available and to assess social, physical and mental well-being.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he will make it his policy to provide adequate financial resources to ensure that care in the community is matched to the needs of individuals in each community.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 6 December 1989]: We recognise that local authorities will need adequate resources for their enhanced responsibilities under the community care proposals outlined in our White Paper "Caring for People: Community Care in the Next Decade and Beyond", published on 16 November. This will be achieved by transferring to the local authorities the resources that the Government would otherwise have provided to finance care through social security payments to people in residential and nursing homes. We also recognise that the numbers of people needing support are growing, so the transfer will take account of demographic factors. With funding coming principally through the revenue support grant, local authorities will be able to make their own decisions on individual community care needs based on local knowledge.

124. Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on mentally ill patients and the Government's proposals for community care.

Mr. Freeman: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Wyre Forest (Mr. Coombs) on 14 November at column 193, following which the Government's White Paper on community care entitled "Caring for People" was published.

103. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a further statement on the provision of community care for the mentally ill.

Mr. Freeman: Our recent White Paper on community care entitled "Caring for People", published on 16 November, sets out the Government's position on the provision of community care for mentally ill people.

101. Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the general practitioner services required by disabled people who have left hospitals and institutions to live in the community are considered to be part of a general practitioner's obligation under the National Health Service or to be so exceptional as to require extra payment.

Mr. Freeman: Within the National Health Service, a general practitioner is obliged to provide to his patients all necessary and appropriate personal medical services. This includes arranging for the referral of patients, as appropriate, to any other services provided under the NHS, such as the community nursing services, or by a local social services authority. We have no plans for extra payments to general practitioners for providing these services to disabled patients who are returning to live in the community.

48. Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals he has in mind to acknowledge and ascertain the views of carers on policy formulation on community care.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We intend to ensure that representatives of carers are consulted on, and involved in, planning for the implementation of our community care proposals. Officials at the Department meet regularly with national organisations representing carers to discuss matters of common concern and we have already received some initial views on how best to secure the involvement of carers in the implementation process.

Patients

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many out-patients are being treated per year by the National Health Service now and what was the figure in 1979.

39. Mr. Burt: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total number of patients being treated per year by the National Health Service now; and what was the figure in 1979.

43. Mr. Hague: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many day patients are being treated per year by the National Health Service; and what was the figure in 1979.

116. Mr. Irvine: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many in-patients are being treated by the National Health Service at the present time; and what was the figure in 1979.

125. Mr. Hanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many in-patients were treated on the National Health Service in the years 1978 and 1988.

Mr. Freeman: The information will be contained in a statistical bulletin which is currently being prepared for publication. Copies of the bulletin will be placed in the Library.

Joint Planning

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is planning to take to improve joint planning in England and Wales.

40. Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is planning to take to improve joint planning in England and Wales.

49. Mr. Jack Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is planning to take to improve joint planning in England and Wales.

111. Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is planning to take to improve joint planning in England and Wales.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The changes proposed in the White Papers, "Working for Patients" and "Caring for People", provide new and stronger incentives for joint planning. We are currently considering further measures to ensure effective joint planning.

National Health Service Funding

42. Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a further statement on the funding announced for the National Health Service for the year 1990-91.

56. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much funding the National Health Service will receive in 1990-91; and how much funding it received in 1978-79.

57. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what will be the level of funding for the National Health Service in the next financial year; and what it was in 1979.

79. Mr. Patrick Thompson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much the Government will spend on the National Health Service 1990-91; and how much it spent in 1978-79.

Mr. Freeman: In 1990-91 the Government plan to spend nearly £22 billion on the National Health Service in England, which taken together with income from land sales, charges and other receipts means that gross expenditure next year will be over £23·3 billion. In addition, if health authorities do no more than they have achieved in recent years they will have a further £150 million from their cost improvement programmes.

In 1978-79 Government spending on the NHS amounted to £6·3 billion and gross expenditure totalled £6·5 billion. Planned expenditure for 1990-91 represents an increase of 45 per cent. in real terms over and above general inflation.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received on the level of funding for the National Health Service in the northern region.

Mr. Freeman: We have received no recent representations on the allocation of funds to the Northern regional health authority.

102. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the increase in funding to the National Health Service northern region between 1983 and 1989; and what increase has occurred in the number of in-patients, out-patients and day case patients.

Mr. Freeman: The information is given in the tables.

Increase in revenue funding of Northern regional health authority between 1982-83 and 1989-90

Cash terms Per cent.	Real terms Per cent.
65·4	14·5

Patients treated in NHS hospitals, Northern regional health authority, 1983 and 1988-89

Source: 1983, SH3 return, 1988-89 SH3a, KP70, KH09, KH18 returns.

53. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of gross domestic product was spent on the National Health Service in the most recent year for which figures are available; and what was the percentage in 1978.

Mr. Freeman: The percentage of gross domestic product spent on the National Health Service was 4·9 per cent. in 1978 and 5·2 per cent. in 1988, the most recent year for which the figures are available.

Radiation (Compensation)

44. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will pay the outstanding portion of compensation to those damaged by excessive doses of radiation administered as chemotherapy at the Royal Devon and Exeter hospital, Exeter; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Settlements are being reached under agreed arrangements between Exeter health authority and representatives of the patients concerned. Some settlements have been made and others are expected to follow shortly. Meanwhile agreed "out of pocket" expenses have been paid without delay.

63. Sir Peter Emery: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what basis the two senior physicians, who were responsible for the errors that resulted in 207 patients receiving a severe overdose of radiation, have been granted compensation for the loss of their jobs; and how much compensation has been awarded to each individual.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The severance arrangements for the two physicists concerned are a matter for Exeter health authority.

General Practitioners

50. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received about the general practitioner contract.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz) on 28 November 1989 at column 222.

71. Mr. John Townsend: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average size of general practitioners' patients lists at the current time; and what it was in 1979.

104. Mr. David Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients there are on the average general practitioners' list now and in 1979.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The average number of patients on the list of unrestricted principals in England at 1 October 1988 was 1,999, compared with 2,286 in 1979.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he expects new money to be made available for those general practitioners who will work harder in order to gain from the new contract.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: General practitioners who work hardest in providing a comprehensive service and thereby attract and keep patients on their lists will be better paid in future. The cost of the new contract is a matter on which the Government is awaiting the advice of the review body on doctors' and dentists' remuneration. The review body's report is expected early in 1990.

Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many general practitioners there are in the National Health Service now and in 1979.

107. Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the number of general practitioners employed by the National Health Service now and in 1979.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The number of unrestricted principals in England at 1 October 1988 was 25,322 compared with 21,357 in 1979.

85. Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total number of support staff employed by general practitioners at present and in 1979.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The total number of staff qualifying for direct reimbursement under the ancillary staff scheme increased by 70 per cent. from 33,721 (20,121 whole-time equivalents) in 1979 to 57,410 (33,863 whole-time equivalents) in 1988. A few general practitioners employ support staff outside the scope of the present scheme; information about these staff is not collected centrally.

Nurses and Midwives

54. Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many regrading appeals by midwives and nurses in England and Wales have been considered; and how many remain outstanding.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information on appeals to district health authorities in England is not collected centrally. The position in Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

129. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations he has received in support of the Commons Select Committee on Social Services recommendation on midwives' grading; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We have received a number of representations in connection with the midwives' lobby of Parliament on 23 November. The Government made clear our position on the Select Committee's recommendations in the response that we published in June.

126. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met representatives of the midwifery profession to discuss their grading.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I and my ministerial colleagues have met representatives of midwives on a number of occassions to discuss a range of matters. The issue of grading was specifically raised most recently when the Royal College of Midwives met my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State in December last year.

122. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many nurses are employed by the National Health Service now and in 1979.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There were 380,260 whole-time equivalent nursing staff (including agency staff, learners and unqualified staff but excluding midwifery staff) employed in the National Health Service in England at 30 September 1988 compared to 338,070 whole time equivalents at 30 September 1979. The 1979 figure has not been adjusted to take account of the reduction in the nurses working week (from 40 to 37½hours) during 1980-81.

83. Sir Marcus Fox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many midwives are employed by the National Health Service now and in 1979.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: There were 23,620 whole time equivalent midwifery staff (including agency staff and students) employed in the National Health Service in England at 30 September 1988 compared to 20,380 whole time equivalents at 30 September 1979. The 1979 figure has not been adjusted to take account of the reduction in the nurses working week (from 40 to 37½hours) during 1980-81.

Medical Negligence

55. Sir Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people received compensation either out of court or after litigation for medical negligence in the past year.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

British Medical Association

58. Mr. Franks: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met the chairman of the British Medical Association; and what matters they discussed.

131. Mr. Day: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met members of the British Medical Association: and what matters were discussed.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer my hon. Friends to the reply that my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Altrincham and Sale (Sir F. Montgomery) and to the hon. Member for Bridgend (Mr. Griffiths) earlier today.

Trent Regional Health Authority

59. Mr. Duffy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he next expects to meet the chairman of the Trent regional health authority to discuss allocation of resources to the National Health Service.

Mr. Freeman: At the moment, my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to meet Sir Michael Carlisle specifically to discuss resource allocation. However, my right hon. and learned Friend will be meeting all regional chairman in January to discuss a wide range of issues.

Eye Tests

60. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been carried out on the impact of the number of people seeking eye tests following the introduction of the charge.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We plan to commission a survey shortly into the number of sight tests being carried out. At present the market is still very unsettled and it is too early yet to assess accurately any impact of recent sight testing legislation.

62. Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the reduction in eye examinations following the introduction of charges in the Sunderland, Durham and Hartlepool health authorities.

93. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the reduction in eye examinations, following the introduction of charges.

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the change in the number of eye examinations following the introduction of charges.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the number of general ophthalmic service sight tests carried out since April will be known.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information is now collected from family practitioner committees on a six-monthly basis. Data for the period April to September 1989 is not yet available; the Department is still awaiting statistical returns from some family practitioner committees.

Mr. Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the reduction in eye examinations following the introduction of charges.

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the reduction in eye examinations, following the introduction of charges.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Such estimates have not been made.

Self-governing Hospitals

61. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress is being made by those hospitals which have expressed an interest in becoming National Health Service self-governing hospitals.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A total of 188 units have expressed interest in NHS trust status. In the reply that my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Maidstone (Miss Widdecombe) on 3 November at columns 389-90 he indicated that 79 units currently intended to prepare draft applications for NHS trust status in 1991. This remains the situation. The decision on whether or not to prepare a formal application for NHS trust status is a matter for the sponsors of the expression of interest in the unit concerned. Applications will not be invited until Parliament has approved the necessary legislation.

Cataract Operations

64. Mr. David Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cataract operations each year are being carried out by the National Health Service at the present time; and what was the figure in 1979.

Mr. Freeman: The estimated number of operations on eye lenses (mainly cataract) performed on in-patients discharged from NHS non-psychiatric hospitals in England in 1986 (the last year for which information is available centrally) and 1979 were 62,200 and 40,110 respectively.

Paramedics

65. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to set up a new paramedics service separately from hospital drivers.

86. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to restructure the ambulance service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It is, and will remain, for health authorities to decide the form and extent of patient transport services which best meet their needs.

Organ Transplants

66. Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to improve the supply of human organs for transplant; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: On 16 November I held a seminar on ways of improving the voluntary donation of organs. The discussion covered several alternative approaches to organ donation. Participants discussed the implications of recent research, particularly the audit of deaths in intensive care units which was initiated by the Department of Health. The seminar highlighted a number of questions, mainly of a medical and ethical nature, which require further consideration by those involved in organ donation.

I will shortly be studying the transcript of the proceedings before deciding what further steps may be necessary. I am grateful to my hon. Friend and many others for taking part in the seminar.

Hospital Bed Shortages

67. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects present hospital bed shortages to be reduced to 1979 levels.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The treatment of patients is more important than bed numbers. Since 1979, the number of inpatient admissions has risen by over 22 per cent. and the number of day case admissions by over 48 per cent. (both to March 1988), while waiting lists, taken on a comparable basis, have fallen by 6 per cent. (to March 1989).

National Health Service and Community Care Bill

68. Mr. Hayes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the National Health Service and Community Care Bill and services to patients.

99. Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on patient care and the National Health Service and Community Care Bill.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The aim of our proposals is to raise the level of services in all parts of the National Health Service closer to the standards already achieved by the best and so produce a better quality of care for all patients. District health authorities will have the specific responsibility of ensuring the availability of a full range of services for all patients living within their boundaries. They will use contracts to specify the nature and quality of the services to be provided. Hospitals will have more freedom to manage their own affairs and so will be able to respond better and more quickly to individual patients and their general practitioners. Our plans will improve the service on admission to hospital by providing: more reliable appointment times; better facilities for waiting and counselling; more information about services available and on clinical matters concerning their own care as well as a wider range of optional extras and amenities.

The effect of these, and the other proposals will be to make the National Health Service more patient conscious and better able to provide high quality services.

North Western Regional Health Authority

69. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the financing of the North Western regional health authority in 1990-91.

Mr. Freeman: Allocations to regional health authorities for 1990-91 will be announced later this month in the usual way. All regions will benefit from the extra £2·6 billion resources available for the health service next year in the United Kingdom.

West Midlands Regional Health Authority

74. Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he last met the chairman of the West Midlands regional health authority; and what matters were discussed.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State last met the chairman of West Midlands regional health authority, together with other regional chairmen, at one of his regular meetings with them on 15 November. A number of matters of interest to them were discussed.

Community Hospitals

76. Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what general guidance he intends to give to regional health authorities regarding the provision of a full range of services in small community hospitals serving rural areas; and whether he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It will be for district health authorities to ensure that a comprehensive range of services is provided for their resident populations. In placing contracts, districts will take into account the services offered by community hospitals.

Infertility

77. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many district health authorities provide infertility investigations and treatment.

92. Mr. Eadie: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many district health authorities provide infertility investigations and treatment.

112. Mr. Watson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the provision of infertility investigations and treatment.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: This information is not held centrally. It is for local health authorities to determine the priorities and resources to be given to infertility in the light of local needs and circumstances.

Liverpool Area Health Authority

81. Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many beds have been closed by Liverpool area health authority in each of the past three years.

Mr. Freeman: We do not hold this information centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of Liverpool health authority.

Acute Hospital Beds

84. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were the number of acute hospital beds in the west midlands (a) in 1979 and (b) in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Freeman: In 1979 there were 14,669 average daily available acute beds within NHS hospitals in West Midlands regional health authority. The corresponding figure for the 1988-89 financial year was 12,528. In the same period, acute in-patient cases rose from 434,673 to 530,580 (provisional) and the number of acute day cases rose from 50,678 to 97,950 (provisional).

Private Hospitals

87. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what figures he has for the number of patients treated in private hospitals in 1988; and what proportion of all non-emergency surgical operations were carried out in such hospitals.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We do not collect this information centrally.

West Norfolk and Wisbech HA

88. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received from West Norfolk and Wisbech health authority about the current level of waiting lists.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: None.

Rugby HA

89. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were treated by the Rugby health authority in (a) 1988-89 and (b) 1978-79.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The available information is given in the table.

Patients treated, NHS hospitals, Rugby district health authority 1978, 1988-89

	[1]1978	1988-89
In-patient cases treated	7,658	11,160
Day case admissions	407	910
New out-patients	11,501	13,773

Source: 1978 SH3, 1988-89 SH3a, KP70, KH09 returns.

[1] In 1978, the area covered by the current Rugby DHA was a district within Warwickshire area health authority.

Beds and Operation Lists

97. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has on the number of district health authorities that will be cutting beds and operations lists before the end of the financial year.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: We do not hold the information requested centrally. The provision of local health services is the responsibility of local health authorities subject to local needs and priorities.

Doctors

98. Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many doctors are employed by the National Health Service now and in 1979.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The numbers are as follows:

	England Number
1979	61,554
1988	70,866

Includes permanent paid and honorary staff. Excludes hospital practitioners and para 94 appointments in the hospital and community health services (clinical assistants) and includes GPs.

Operations (Costs)

100. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has as to the comparable costs of identical operations in different health districts and hospitals.

Mr. Freeman: The costs of particular operations are not collected centrally.

Haemophiliacs

105. Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received on the question of compensation for haemophiliacs who have been infected with HIV as a consequence of treatment in the National Health Service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The Department has received more than 300 representations on this question but compensation is a matter for the courts.

Recently we announced that an additional £19 million has been offered to the Macfarlane Trust, again on an entirely ex gratia basis. For the details I refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. and learned Friend gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Salisbury (Mr. Key) on 23 November at columns 11-12.

Tranquillisers

109. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what impact he expects the National Health Service reforms to have on the prescription of tranquillisers and other anxiety-reducing drugs by general medical practitioners.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Indicative prescribing budgets will encourage GPs to examine critically all of their prescribing to ensure that it is clinically justified. GPs are already well aware of the need to prescribe tranquillisers with great care as demonstrated by the reduction in the number of prescriptions for benzodiazepines from 30·9 million in 1979 to 23·2 million in 1988 in Great Britain. We expect this trend to continue.

Health Advisory Service

114. Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received on the working of the Health advisory service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Two representations have been received in the last year, one from a health authority and one from a journalist. The Department of Health is currently examining the work of the Health Advisory Service to identify how it might be undertaken effectively following implementation of the proposals in the White Paper "Working for Patients".

Elderly People

106. Mr. Charles Wardle: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the National Health Service and Community Care Bill and elderly patients.

Mr. Freeman: Elderly patients will have much to gain from our proposals to improve the Health Service. The Government are fully aware of the special needs of the increasing numbers of elderly people. District health authorities will have specific responsibility to ensure the availability of a full range of services for all the people living within their boundaries, including elderly people. Health authorities will enter into contracts with those hospitals which can best provide the quality of care needed with the minimum of delay. Our proposals in the Bill as well as in the new GPs contract regulations are designed to bring about better quality health care for all patients, including elderly people.

117. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the future of local authority residential care for the elderly.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Our policy on local authority residential care is set out in our recent White Paper, "Caring for People".

Brittle Bone Disease

128. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what evidence he has as to the extent of brittle bone disease amongst older women.

Mr. Freeman: I assume that the hon. Member is referring to the condition of osteoporosis which primarily, but not exclusively, affects women after the menopause. There is little data available on trends in osteoporosis. One marker which is, however, used is hospital episodes* for hip fractures (fracture of neck of femur). The figures for hospital episodes for fracture of neck of femur (ICD 820) for 1987-88 are:

i. estimated number of persons (all ages) 44,780;
ii. estimated number of females (all ages) 35,360;
iii. estimated number of females (75 years and over) 27,020.

* A hospital episode is a period of continuous care in the same district under one consultant.

Beds (Nottingham DHA)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many National Health Service beds there are in Nottingham district health authority area at the present time and how many there were in 1979.

Mr. Freeman: During the 1988-89 financial year there were on average 3,520 available beds in Nottingham district health authority. The corresponding figure for 1979 was 4,198. During this period there was a 67 per cent. increase in through put (in-patient per available bed), from 17·6 to 29·5, and a 38 per cent. increase in in-patient and day cases treated, from 81,292 to 112,018.

Stillbirths

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many stillbirths occurred in 1987 at (a) 24 weeks', (b) 25 weeks', (c) 26 weeks', and (d) 27 weeks' gestation; and how many suffered from handicaps.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not available.

Under the Births and Deaths Registration Act of 1953 a stillbirth is defined as "a child which has issued forth from its mother after the twenty-eighth week of pregnancy and which did not at any time after being completely expelled from its mother breathe or show any signs of life, and the expression 'stillbirth' shall be construed accordingly".

West Lambeth Health Authority

Ms. Hoey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how much money and fees have been paid to the Industrial Society or its consultants by the West Lambeth health authority over the past year;

(2) how much money has been paid out in voluntary redundancy payments to senior management in St. Thomas's hospital and who authorised these payments;

(3) how much money has been spent on the employment of management consultants between February and October by the West Lambeth health authority; how this expenditure was authorised and what tendering procedures were followed.

Mr. Freeman: The detailed information requested is not collected centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of the West Lambeth health authority who may be able to assist.

Market Research

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many market research and sample surveys were carried out by or for his Department in the past 12 months; what was the cost of each; what was the total cost; how many were carried out in-house; how many were carried out for his Department by outside organisations; and what percentage of the total expenditure was paid to outside organisations.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: A total of 25 market research and sample surveys were completed during the last 12 months. The surveys are listed in the table along with the cost:

Survey title	Cost £
Smoking Among Secondary Schoolchildren	59,094
Why Children Smoke	79,299
Adult Dental Health	264,390
General Household Survey 1988-89	69,277
NOP Omnibus—Questions on Smoking	16,987
Discount Survey (of NHS Drugs Purchases) amongst Retail Chemists	61,000
Sample Surveys of the Earnings and Expenses of General Medical Practitioners, General Dental Practitioners and the Earnings of Hospital Doctors (3 surveys)	135,240
Sample survey of non-associate dentists to confirm their non-associate status	7,500
Sample survey of associate dentists to confirm their associate status and obtain dates of their accounting year	12,500
Sample survey of associate dentists to obtain earnings and expenses	11,000

Drugs 88-89 Campaign Evaluation	41,745
Drugs 88-89 Campaign: Qualitative Evaluation	42,500
General Medical Practitioners Computing Survey	16,500
Nursing Careers: 1988 Tracking Study	36,409
Cold Weather Campaign Evaluation 1988-89	17,802
Nursing Recruitment Campaign Telephone Response Follow up	7,389
Residential Care (Staff and Residents)	5,200
Home Care	3,275

Survey title	Cost £
The total actual and estimated cost of these surveys was	967,662

Eighteen of these surveys were carried out by outside organisations and data on two surveys carried out in house was processed by outside organisations; 90 per cent. of the total expenditure was paid to outside organisations (which included other Government Departments such as the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys).

European Community

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes will be made to the residence conditions for local authority welfare services in respect of citizens of other member states of the European Community following the completion of the internal market in 1992; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No changes are proposed. EC citizens with the right of residence in the United Kingdom and who are ordinarily resident here will as now be eligible for local authority personal social services.

Cancer Screening

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what is the average period of time from testing and screening of women for (a) cervical cancer, and (b) breast cancer until the results are known in the Sunderland, Durham and Hartlepool area health authorities; and what is the comparable figure for the rest of the country;

(2) what is the average period of waiting for patients who are to receive radio therapy from the time of the results of the breast screening test and treatment in the Durham, Sunderland and Hartlepool area health authorities, and what is the comparable figure for the rest of the country.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Information on the processing of cervical screening tests is not available in the form requested. Our guidance to health authorities states that laboratories must aim to send results to the doctor who submitted a smear within one month of receiving it. Laboratory processing times are monitored by the Department on a quarterly basis. The information collected relates only to those district health authorities (DHAs) which are failing to meet this one month target time. As at September 1989 (the latest data available) over 75 per cent. of DHAs were meeting this target. Laboratories in South West Durham and Hartlepool DHAs were taking eight and six weeks respectively to report on smears. I understand, however, that the December return is expected to show an improvement.

Information on the average time taken to notify women of the result of their screening test and of waiting for radiotherapy treatment under the breast screening programme is not collected centrally.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will encourage his Department to initiate a call and re-call scheme for women of 40-plus years to test for ovarian cancer.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: It has yet to be demonstrated that such a scheme would lead to a reduction in mortality. The Department will keep this matter under review.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what resources are being made available to the Northern regional health authority to provide a mass mammogram screening service in the North-East.

Mr. Freeman: Northern regional health authority has received a total of £3,618,000 over the years 1987-88 to 1989-90 to introduce and run breast cancer screening by mammography. This represents both capital and revenue allocations. Additional revenue allocated recurrently in each of these three years was built into the authority's baseline for subsequent years. At the end of the three year implementation period the amount now built into the region's baseline is £1,531,000 at 1989-90 prices.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure that all women in the Northern region are invited to attend specialist breast screening units; what call and re-call systems have been set up on the Northern region to date; and in what respects these re-call systems are different from those in the rest of the country.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Arrangements for inviting women age 50-64 in the Northern regional health authority (RHA) to attend for screening under the National Health Service breast screening programme are similar to those used elsewhere in the country: women in this age group who are registered with a general practitioner will be invited, using the national computer system, for a screening test every three years. Northern RHA has also financed health education programmes, public information and publicity through a variety of media to encourage women in its region to take up their screening invitations.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether he has any plans to provide a mobile breast and cervical screening unit in the Durham, Sunderland and Hartlepool area health authorities; and if he will list the locations in the United Kingdom where such mobile units are operating.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The decision to use mobile units to deliver the National Health Service breast screening service for women aged 50 to 64 years is a matter for regional health authorities to determine.

I understand that women in Sunderland will be invited to attend a static unit located at the Sunderland general hospital and that mobile units will be used to provide the service to women in Durham and Hartlepool. If the hon. Member requires any further information about the breast screening service in the Northern regional health authority he might contact Ms. Barbara Howe, the region's programme co-ordinator.

The table lists the district health authorities in England where mobile units are either in use or planned as part of those screening programmes operational as at 13 November 1989. A further 31 screening programmes are expected to become operational by March 1990 a number of which are expected to use mobile units.

Screening of women aged 20 to 64 for cervical cancer is performed by general practitioners or at NHS clinics.

Information on the services in the other parts of the United Kingdom is the responsibility of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Northern Ireland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Laboratory Facilities (Veterinary Use)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total income accrued to the Durham area health authority arising from the letting of laboratory facilities at Dryburn hospital for veterinary use in the years 1987-88, and 1988-89.

Mr. Freeman: This information is not available centrally. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of Durham health authority.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which health authorities currently permit their clinical laboratory facilities to be used for veterinary purposes outside normal working hours as a means of generating additional income; and what is the nature of the veterinary work undertaken at such clinical laboratories.

Mr. Freeman: We are aware that Durham health authority lets some of its laboratory facilities to a private company outside normal working hours. The veterinary work in the laboratory takes the form of microbiological tests on animal samples.

Appointments

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the number of persons he currently appoints in the Health Service; and what were the numbers which were appointed in 1979.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State is presently responsible for appointing the chairmen of 14 regional health authorities, 190 district health authorities, 90 family practitioner committees, and eight special health authorities for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals. My right hon. and learned Friend is also responsible for appointing members of regional health authorities in such numbers as he sees fit (usually 16), 30 members of each family practitioner committee, 19 members of each of the SHAs for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals (except the Eastman dental hospital which has 15 members), and the trustees (usually five) to the 22 bodies of special trustees appointed under section 95 of the NHS Act 1977 to administer trust property.

The information for 1979 is not directly comparable because of the restructuring of the National Health Service in 1982. The Secretary of State was then responsible for appointing the chairmen of 14 regional health authorities, 90 area health authorities, and 12 preserved boards of governors. He was also responsible for the appointment of members of regional health authorities, the governors of the preserved boards, and special trustees.

In addition, my right hon. and learned Friend makes some 2,000 other appointments to a variety of other public and advisory bodies whose work is related to the National Health Service.

Health and Social Services (Expenditure)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give per capita spending on health and personal social services in cash terms and at 1987-88 prices in each year since 1979 to the latest available date for (a) all ages, (b) births, (c) 0 to 4 years, (d) 5 to 15 years (e) 16 to 64 years (f) 65 to 74 years and (g) 75 years and over, giving the amount spent on (i) hospital and community health services, (ii) family practitioner services, (iii) personal social services, and (iv) total in England.

Mr. Freeman: Estimates of gross current expenditure per head of population on health and personal social services, in cash and at 1987-88 prices for each year between 1979-80 and 1986-87, the latest year for which these estimates are available are given in the table.

These figures are derived through successive estimations starting with the Department's programme budget analysis, details of which are provided to the Social Services Committee and are published by the Committee in minutes of evidence associated with its report on Public Expenditure on the Social Services 1987 (HC 413). Expenditure on each of the services identified is then apportioned to different age groups from data on the use of services. Due to changes in sources and definitions, data for the earliest years may not be fully consistent with those for later years.

Osteoporosis

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will recognise the need for additional and adequate funding for research into the treatment of metabolic bone disease with particular reference to osteoporosis.

Mr. Freeman: The Department recognises the significance of research in this area and has recently agreed to fund an economic evaluation of hormone replacement therapy, which will look at its costs and benefits in relation to osteoporosis, cardiovascular disease and breast cancer.

However, the main agency through which the Government fund medical research is the Medical Research Council (MRC), which receives its grant-in-aid from the Department of Education and Science. The MRC has for some time been supporting a programme of clinical and basic research to encourage the development of more rational treatments for metabolic bone diseases, including osteoporosis. A number of areas are being explored. The MRC has also set up a sub-group of the physiological systems board to review the need for further research on osteoporosis. This group is examining in particular the feasibility of mounting a multicentre prospective trial of screening methods to identify at risk women who are likely to benefit from hormone replacement therapy.

Dental Services

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in the period since dental charges for examination came into operation, what are the monthly breakdown figures for courses of treatment in the following categories (i) under 18 years of age, (ii) those who are over 18 years but are fully exempt from dental charges, (iii) those over 18 years who are partially exempt from dental charges and (iv) those who are over 18 years but are fully liable for dental charges.

Mr. Freeman: The information is available on a quarterly basis only. The figures for England are shown in the table.

	Number of courses of treatment
	March quarter	June quarter	September quarter
(i) Patients under 18	2,592,260	2,560,600	2,508,830
(ii) Patients over 18 but fully exempt from dental charges	892,710	957,580	932,900
(iii) Patients over 18 partially exempt from dental charges	14,100	16,740	16,970
(iv) Patients over 18 fully liable for dental charges	5,212,440	4,996,760	4,665,620

Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the monthly breakdown figures for courses of dental treatment completed since charges for dental examinations came into operation earlier this year (a) on a national basis and (b) on the most convenient regional basis.

Mr. Freeman: The information is available on a national basis only. The figures for England are shown in the table.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the inquiry into the provision of dentures has been completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 11 December 1989]: In November 1988, the Department asked the Dental Estimates Board (now the Dental Practice Board) to carry out a study of patients' and dentists' satisfaction with the provision of dentures under the National Health Service. The study has not yet been completed. Its primary purpose is to inform the work of the dental rates study group in relation to setting fees for the provision of full dentures.

Nottinghamshire Health Authority

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the budget for the Nottingham health authority during the last 15 years in real terms and in money terms.

Mr. Freeman: The table gives details of Nottingham health authority's net revenue expenditure in cash and 1989-90 price terms since the authority's inception in 1982-83. Figures for earlier years are not comparable since they applied to the much larger Nottingham area health authority.

Ex-psychiatric Patients

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many ex-psychiatric patients have been released into the community in each of the last three years; what arrangements have been made for their continued care in the community; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The information in the form requested is not collected centrally. The table shows the number of discharges to the community from NHS mental illness hospitals and units in England after a stay of one year or more for the last three years for which information is currently available.

St. Ann's Hospital, Tottenham

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will announce his decision regarding the closure of acute wards at St. Ann's hospital in Tottenham.

Mr. Freeman: Proposals for the closure and transfer of acute beds at St. Ann's and the North Middlesex hospital are closely linked to the plans for major capital development on the North Middlesex site. I understand that as a result of decisions taken by North East Thames regional health authority on 27 November the redevelopment of the North Middlesex site is unlikely to start until after 1995-96. The RHA has recently completed a review of their capital programme in the light of their latest forecasts of income from land sales, and of higher than expected increases in building costs. This has involved some rescheduling of schemes over a longer timetable than originally envisaged. This rescheduling will of course be kept under review to take into account changes in forecasts for land sale income.

We will need to consider the proposals for the closure and transfer of acute beds put forward by North East Thames regional health authority in the light of this new information. I will of course write to the hon. Member when a decision has been reached on the closures.

Live Births

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will give the figures for the number of live births at less than 28 weeks gestation with the estimated gestation for 1985, 1986, 1987 and 1988.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not available; information on gestation is not collected at live birth registration.

Ministerial Note Paper

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what day the printing of a slogan on his headed ministerial note paper was introduced.

Mr. Freeman: Ministerial notepaper bearing the words "Caring for the 1990s" was introduced in October 1989.

Hospices

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will take action to match pound for pound the financial support given by the public to hospices.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Pontefract and Castleford (Mr. Lofthouse) on 6 December at column 277.

Hospital Contracts

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether community health councils were included in the distribution of documents on contracts for hospital services; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Community health councils were sent copies of the White Paper "Working for Patients" which set out the Government's proposals on contractual arrangements and the subsequent working paper "Funding and Contracts for Hospital Services". Detailed aspects of these proposals were addressed in two more recent documents "Contracts for Health Services: Operational Principles" and "Contracts for Health Services: Pricing and Openness". Copies of these were sent to the Association of CHCs in England and Wales and to individual CHCs, including Bradford, which expressed particular interest. Decisions on the distribution of further documents to CHCs will be made in the light of their contents.

Infant Mortality

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what were, for each of the last three years at convenient dates (i) the number of premature births, 21 to 28 weeks, where the baby survived for less than one week, one to four weeks, four to 13 weeks, above 13 weeks and (ii) the number of abortions after the 21st week where, following resuscitation, survival was less than one week, one to four weeks, four to 13 weeks, above 13 weeks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is not available: information on gestation is not collected at live birth registration.

Diet

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he expects to publish the report on Dietary Sugars and Human Disease from the Chief Medical Officer's Committee on Medical Aspects of Food Policy (COMA).

Mr. Freeman: The COMA report "Dietary Sugars and Human Disease" is being published today. Copies have been placed in the Library. I welcome this important scientific document which, I know, has been awaited with great interest by doctors, dentists, nutrition scientists, consumer groups and food manufacturers. I congratulate Professor Keen and his team on the way they have dealt with this very complex and controversial issue. They have produced what, I believe, will be seen as a definitive statement on present knowledge of the relationship between dietary sugars and health.

The report's conclusions and recommendations are important and far reaching. It does not support the view, which some people would have us believe, that sugars at usual intake have direct adverse effect on general health. But it leaves no room for doubt that dietary sugars are by far the most important cause of dental caries, and recommends for this reason we should restrict our sugars intake.

Publication of the report reaffirms the Government's policy on increasing scientific and public knowledge about diet and health. Action is being taken on the majority of the report's recommendations. In particular the HEA recently announced that nutrition would be a major component of their public health education strategy of which the report's recommendations will form an integral part. A range of health professionals will be made aware of the Report so that they can take account of its recommendations when dealing with their patients. We are also committed to improving the quality of information about nutritional status in relation to general and dental health and making it available so that people can make sensible choices about their diet.

Neuroblastoma

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many babies were born with neuroblastoma in each of the last five years for which figures are available; and how many children died of the condition over the same period.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 27 November 1989]: The latest available data on newly reported cases of childhood neuroblastoma cover the years 1971-80, and indicate that during that period 374 new cases were reported for males aged 0-14 years and 277 cases for females.

The number of deaths from neuroblastoma during this period, or for a later five-year period, could be determined only at disproportionate cost.

Homelessness

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy that local authorities receive a sum in their budget to cover the estimated costs of treatment to homeless people in the area; and if he will take steps to ensure that this allocation will be used to secure services suitable for, and available to, homeless people.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 11 December 1989]: No. It is for the relevant statutory authorities to ensure that appropriate health and personal social services are provided within their resources and in the light of their assessment of local needs. The Department has, however, taken several central initiatives, including the funding of voluntary organisations helping the homeless and of two projects in London designed to promote new models of primary care for homeless people. An evaluation of the projects has been drawn to the attention of all health authorities, local authorities and family practitioner committees.

Mental Handicap

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health wh[illegible]s the total spending of his Department on research in mental handicap in each of the years 1979 to 1989; and how much was spent on new starts to projects in each of the past five years.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 11 December 1989]: The total spending of the Department on research on mental health in each of the years 1979 to 1989 was as follows:

Year	Spending on mental handicap £k
1978-79	360
1979-80	394
1980-81	573
1981-82	789
1982-83	657
1983-84	669
1984-85	674
1985-86	692
1986-87	456
1987-88	615
1988-89	773

These sums of money are inclusive of expenditure on new starts to projects. A separate annual figure for new starts is not readily available.

Microbiology and Research

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the future of the centre for applied microbiology and research at Porton Down near Salisbury.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 11 December 1989]: My colleagues and I are currently studying a report by a team of consultants who were asked to give professional advice on options for the future status of the centre for applied microbiology and research. We have not yet reached any decision.

Health Spending (OECD)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what information he has as to the increase in real terms in health spending in the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 11 December 1989]: The increase in total health expenditure in real terms between 1983 and 1984 in each of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development member states is shown in the table.

The latest year, 1984, for which all the data required to make the necessary calculations are available for all Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development member states (with the exception of Turkey, for which 1984 data are not available, and Luxembourg, for which complete data are not available).

Ambulance Service

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent representations he has received regarding the quota system operated by Lancashire ambulance service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley [pursuant to her reply, 6 December 1989, c. 276]: A representation regarding the system of quotas introduced in 1986 by the Lancashire ambulance service for non-urgent journeys was made in a letter from the hon. Member dated 25 October 1989. I have replied to that letter and I regret that, through an oversight, my earlier reply did not refer to this representation.

Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he has any plans to review the organisation of the ambulance service.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: Health authorities are reviewing their management arrangements taking into account the proposals set out in the White Paper, "Working for Patients" (Cm. 555).

132. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Health in how many areas has there been either a shortage of ambulance staff or a reliance upon overtime working during the last 12 months.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: The information requested is not collected centrally and could not be obtained except at disproportionate cost.

113. Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make an official visit to the Plaistow ambulance station.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: No.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Romania

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to arrange export credits with Romania for the sale of environmental clean-up technology and industrial pollution abatement technology developed in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Redwood: ECGD cover for Romania is at present available only for short term credits on secured terms of payment. There has been no approach for medium term credits and such an approach would seem unlikely as the Romanian Government have a policy of not accepting any more such credits.

British Standards Institute

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what changes are being proposed in the operation of the British Standards Institute and its various advisory committees on information technology standards; what decisions have been taken by Government so far; and by what means he proposes to consult the commercial and other private interests concerned.

Mr. Forth: My Department, in co-operation with the British Standards Institution, is undertaking a consultation process with industry and commerce to determine the feasibility of establishing new arrangements for IT standardisation activities in the United Kingdom falling within the framework of BSI.

A steering group drawn from industry and commerce is overseeing this feasibility work and a project team comprising officials, industry secondees, BSI staff and consultants has been assembled. Industry and other interests are being consulted to determine the degree of commitment by business and others in supporting new arrangements. Methods of consultation include direct interviews, group meetings and by correspondence. The primary objective of any new arrangements would be the more effective use of United Kingdom resources to contribute to the development of European and international IT standards. If sufficient commitment is forthcoming, clear proposals would be put to BSI next year.

Civil Aviation Authority

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will order an independent efficiency scrutiny of the Civil Aviation Authority to be carried out; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 6 December 1989]: A reference under section 11 of the Competition Act 1980 has today been sent to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission to investigate the efficiency of the Civil Aviation Authority and the effectiveness of its provision of navigation and air traffic control services with particular emphasis on the effectiveness of its management and planning systems in respect of its major new investment programme. A copy of the reference has been placed in the Library.

The success of the Government's privatisation programme means that there are fewer statutory bodies open to scrutiny under section 11 of the Competition Act 1980. In future, therefore, the practice of announcing annually a programme of references will be discontinued and instead each reference will be announced as it is made.

British Aerospace (Rover Deal)

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will now publish the final terms of the agreement between British Aerospace and the Government on tax, cash and assets.

Mr. Ridley: I have already written to the hon. Member explaining how I am handling requests for documentation relating to the sale of the Government's shareholding in Rover Group to British Aerospace.

I have placed copies of my letter in the Library of the House.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will publish any notes or correspondence involving his Department over the tax affairs of British Aerospace;

(2) if he will publish the letters between his Department and British Aerospace on tax matters relating to the Rover deal.

Mr. Ridley: Tax matters of British Aerospace are for the Inland Revenue and would be subject to normal confidentiality rules; however, to assist understanding of this matter arrangements have been made exceptionally and with the agreement of British Aerospace to provide to the Public Accounts Committee and the Trade and Industry Select Committee copies of the exchange of letters between the accountants of BAe and the Inland Revenue which is referred to in the letter of 12 July 1988 from the then Secretary of State for Trade and Industry to the chairman of British Aerospace. Copies of this exchange are available in the Library of the House with my letter today to the hon. Member.

The Department of Trade and Industry of course has no direct locus in such tax matters and its dealings with British Aerospace on tax were therefore concerned with the contractual arrangements by which Rover Group was effectively denied the benefit of pre-acquisition carried forward trading tax losses in excess of £500 million to which Rover Group was entitled under the normal rules applying to United Kingdom companies. Contractual arrangements had also been inserted in the original conditional sale agreement in March 1988 by which the use of disclaimed capital allowances and capital losses were effectively ring-fenced within Rover Group; this restriction was lifted in the final terms so that the situation on these tax benefits was no more, and no less, restrictive than that determined by tax law.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish correspondence relating to the side-letter offered by the former Secretary of State for Trade and Industry.

Mr. Ridley: The side-letter on on-sale offered by the former Secretary of State in his letter of 12 July 1988 to the BAe chairman was finalised on 14 July and copies have been made available to the Public Accounts Committee and Trade and Industry Select Committee and placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish the memorandum of understanding between the British Government and the European Commission over the sale of Rover.

Mr. Ridley: The Commission's decision under article 93(2) of the treaty of Rome in respect of the aid proposal to Rover Group in the context of its sale to BAe was published in the Official Journal of the European Communities on 28 January 1989.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if, in negotiations over the sale of Rover, he was made aware that British Aerospace would seek to accelerate use of tax losses through the creation of leasing companies.

Mr. Ridley: The Department was aware that this was one idea which British Aerospace was looking at, and one that it might seek to implement subject to normal tax law.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions took place on launch aid for Airbus as part of the negotiations over the sale of Rover.

Mr. Ridley: There were no discussions on launch aid for Airbus as part of the negotiations over the sale of the Rover Group.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what discussions took place on military and civil contracts unrelated to Rover as part of the negotiations over the sale of Rover.

Mr. Ridley: In the negotiations over the sale of the Rover Group the only discussions about contracts unrelated to the Rover Group concerned the Columbus programme, as set out in my statement of 30 November (Hansard, columns 859-60).

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the cash value of the deferred payment of £150 million for 20 months for the Rover Group; and at what rate of interest the value is calculated.

Mr. Ridley: Our most recent estimate of the net cost of deferring the £150 million consideration from the date of completion (12 August 1988) until the end of March 1990 is £22 million, calculated at a post-tax rate of interest in line with base rate. The £22 million estimate made at the time was a gross calculation which made no allowance for tax.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the estimate of the value to British Aerospace of the capital losses incurred by the Rover Group.

Mr. Ridley: The Government were not in a position to calculate what use British Aerospace might make in future of tax benefits arising from its acquisition of Rover Group and available to it under normal tax law; such valuations are highly subjective and dependent on assumptions of future taxable capacity of the enlarged British Aerospace group. The Touche Ross valuation commissioned and published by the NAO put a nil or negligible value on these losses.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the final amount of trading tax losses written off in the final agreement between British Aerospace and the Government.

Mr. Ridley: Rover Group's trading tax losses remain precisely what they are entitled to under normal tax law. However, the contractual sale arrangements between DTI and British Aerospace provide that if in post-acquisition tax computations Rover Group claims the benefit of pre-acquisition trading tax losses in excess of £500 million, such benefit will be 100 per cent. clawed back.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the Government's calculation of the tax benefits to British Aerospace of the final contract with British Aerospace.

Mr. Ridley: As I have explained in my letter today to the hon. Member, the Government were not in a position authoritatively to calculate the value to British Aerospace of tax benefits arising from its acquisition of Rover Group and available to it under normal tax law. Such values would depend on the extent and timing of taxable events in the future and estimates are highly subjective—as, is shown by the differing valuations of certain of these tax benefits discussed in the Comptroller and Auditor-General's report on the sale.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the value of the capital allowances pool from Rover that could be set against tax (a) in March 1988 and (b) in August 1988.

Mr. Ridley: The Government were not in a position to calculate what use British Aerospace might make in future of tax benefits arising from its acquistion of Rover Group and available to it under normal tax law; such valuations are highly subjective and dependent on assumptions of future taxable capacity of the enlarged British Aerospace group. The only change in treatment of the Rover Group capital allowance pool between the dates referred to was a contractual one. Under the March conditional terms future use by British Aerospace (where permitted under normal tax law) of disclaimed Rover Group capital allowances outside the Rover Group would result in the benefit being 100 per cent. clawed back by the contractual sale arrangements. Under the final terms of the sale this clawback was lifted.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether any disclaimers of capital allowances were made by Rover within the statutory time limits.

Mr. Ridley: That is a matter for Rover Group. Such disclaimers are a normal feature of tax practice available to any company and the Inland Revenue's normal rules of tax confidentiality apply.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Malaysia

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Malaysian Government concerning the introduction of public whipping for those who have changed from Islam to other faiths.

Mr. Sainsbury: We are aware that certain Malaysian states, not the federal Government, have introduced laws providing for the whipping of apostates. We know of no cases to date of such whipping being carried out. We have, nonetheless, registered our concern with the Malaysian authorities.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Malaysian Government concerning the censoring of the Bible, and the banning of other Christian literature.

Mr. Sainsbury: We are aware that some Malaysian states, not the federal Government, have introduced laws for the "Control and Restriction of the Propagation of Non-Islamic Religions" forbidding the use of several religious words and phrases in the Malay language by non-Muslims. We understand that this has led to difficulties in the production and distribution of Bibles published in Malay. We have registered our concern with the Malaysian authorities.

Cameroon

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether in considering his support for the application by Cameroon for membership of the Commonwealth he will take into account the human rights record of Cameroon.

Mr. Waldegrave: Following Cameroon's application, the question of membership of the Commonwealth was referred to a group of 10 Heads of Government appointed in Kuala Lumpur and of which my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister is a member. The group will report to the Commonwealth Heads of Government meeting in 1991. We welcome the increasing prominence given to the observance of human rights in the Kuala Lumpur communiqué.

High Technology Equipment

Mrs. Gwyneth Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will now make it his policy to answer questions on the export of high-technology equipment that could be used for military purposes.

Mr. Maude: Our policy in answering such questions remains unchanged.

Antarctica

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many abandoned British bases there are in Antarctica; and what steps have been taken to retrieve the waste generated there.

Mr. Sainsbury: Twelve British bases were abandoned over the period 1946-75. The United Kingdom is urgently developing a strategy to implement the recommendation on waste disposal following the XV Antarctic treaty consultative meeting in Paris in October 1989. We shall start to implement this new policy and, in particular, prepare a timetable for waste disposal in 1990.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many operating British bases there are in Antarctica.

Mr. Sainsbury: There are five—Bird Island, Signy, Rothera, Faraday and Hailey.

Contracts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many contracts over £92,500 have been let by his Department in the 1988-89 financial year and in the current financial year to date; and how many of these were (a) automatically renewed and (b) open to competition by advertisement throughout the European Community.

Mr. Sainsbury: The number of contracts awarded by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office and covered by the provisions of the European Community supplies directive, for which the current threshold is £92,000, was 13 in the 1988-89 financial year and seven in the current financial year, to date. Of these, three were awarded following advertisement in the Official Journal of the European Community. The other 17 were let following the use of the "negotiated" procedure laid down by the directive. In these cases there was either only one possible supplier or the contracts were for additional goods that had to be purchased from the original suppliers for technical reasons.

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many outside accountancy firms are employed by his Department; whether such employment is subject to any guidelines; and whether he takes steps before employing an accountancy firm to discover whether that firm has been censured by the Department of Trade and Industry in their inquiries under the Companies Acts.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office does not currently employ any outside accountancy firms.

Tibet

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when a representative of Her Majesty's Government was last in Lhasa; and what steps Her Majesty's Government are taking to monitor the human rights situation in Tibet.

Mr. Maude: A member of the British embassy in Peking visited Lhasa from 27 to 30 October. The imposition of martial law in Lhasa has reduced the flow of information, but we use all available channels to follow closely developments in Tibet.

Mr. Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further representations Her Majesty's Government have made to China over its human rights violation in Tibet.

Mr. Maude: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer I gave on 29 November to the hon. Member for Belfast, South (Rev. Martin Smyth).

Human Rights

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many letters have been sent out by his Department in the last 12 months to foreign Governments indicating dissatisfaction with their human rights record; and if he will list the Governments concerned.

Mr. Sainsbury: We condemn human rights abuses wherever they occur. We have in the last 12 months made many representations, both orally and in writing, bilaterally, with our European Community partners and in international fora, to bring our concerns on human rights to the attention of many countries. The detailed information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Broadcasting

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent representations he has received on the operation of the Broadcasting Act in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Mellor: We have recently received representations from the hon. Member and others about questions of taste and decency raised by one programme. The Government do not have powers to intervene in the content of programmes.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the rules concerning circumstances in which pensioners have reduced cost television licences, so as to provide that everyone on a basic state pension and no other income can obtain a reduced price colour television licence.

Mr. Mellor: No.

Immigration

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were refused leave of entrance to the United Kingdom at seaports or airports in 1989 from (a) the Soviet Union, (b) the Democratic Republic of Germany, (c) Poland, (d) Romania, (e) Bulgaria, (f) Hungary, (g) Czechoslovakia, (h) Libya, (i) India, (j) Pakistan, (k) Bangladesh, (l) South Africa and (m) Hong Kong.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: The latest available information is given in the table:

Passengers refused leave to enter and removed from the United Kingdom—January to September 1989

Nationality	Number
USSR	41
German Democratic Republic	4
Poland	107
Romania	13
Bulgaria	13
Hungary	20
Czechoslovakia	16
Libya	21
India	350

Bangladesh	325
South Africa	306
BDTC Hong Kong	127

Drugs

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's attitude towards requests for the legalislation of soft drugs.

Mr. Mellor: The Government have no intention of legalising any drugs presently controlled under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971. I am glad to see that this view was shared by the Home Affairs Committee in its report "Drug trafficking and related serious crime" (HC 370).

Prisons

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the weekly food cost allowance for inmates in prisons in England and Wales.

Mr. Mellor: The quantity of food for inmates is determined not by reference to cash budgets but to dietary scales designed to meet agreed nutritional requirements. Ingredients are supplied primarily from centrally negotiated contracts and from prison farms and gardens. The notional cost per inmate per week totalled £6·30 in the quarter ended 30 September 1989.

Prison Capacity

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list all the prisons in the United Kingdom in order of the number of prisoners they currently hold, stating the numbers they are built to hold and the percentage overcrowding.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is set out in the table in respect of prison service establishments in England and Wales. Responsibility for prisons in Scotland and Northern Ireland rests with my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Northern Ireland respectively.

[1] Population figures are as reported by establishments on Friday 1 December 1989.

[2] Details of Certified Normal Accommodation (CNA) relate to the position on 8 October 1989, the latest date for which figures are currently available.

Gaelic Broadcasting

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when he expects to announce his plans for Gaelic broadcasting; and if he will make a statement;

(2) when he expects to respond to Comunn na Gaidhlig's proposal for a Gaelic broadcasting council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Representations for special support for Gaelic broadcasting remain under consideration. We hope to announce our conclusions on this as soon as possible.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information is available to him as to the date on which Detective Chief Superintendent Graham Melvin is expected to retire from the Metropolitan police.

Mr. Peter Lloyd: None; this is a personal matter for Mr. Melvin.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Part-time Work (EC Directive)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will seek to introduce legislation to incorporate the proposals included in the EC Council directive on part-time work (Com. (81) 775 as amended (Com. (82) 830).

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No. Northern Ireland legislation on part-time work is in line with that in the rest of the United Kingdom.

Roads

Mr. Clifford Forsythe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Antrim, South on 5 December, if he will now carry out, at the earliest possible moment, a traffic census on Killead road, Killead village; and if he will indicate the number of heavy commercial vehicles included in the Ballyrobin road, Killead road and Oldstone road traffic census.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 8 December 1989]: Traffic flows between December and March are normally lower than during the rest of the year and may not give a reliable indication. The Department of the Environment does not intend to carry out a traffic census at this location at present.

When the last classified traffic census was carried out in 1984 the number of heavy commercial vehicles using these roads was as follows:

Number of heavy commercial vehicles per 16-hour day

Road	Number
Ballyrobin road	465
Killead road	1,105
Oldstone road	544

ENERGY

Carbon Dioxide Emissions

125. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the Government's estimate for carbon dioxide emissions from energy use in Britain in 1988; and what are the latest estimates for carbon dioxide emissions in (a) 2000 and (b) 2025.

Mr. Peter Morrison: In 1987, the latest year for which I have estimates, United Kingdom energy-related carbon dioxide emissions, expressed as carbon, were 163 million tonnes.

My Department's study, "An Evaluation of Energy Related Greenhouse Gas Emissions and Measures to Ameliorate Them", estimates emissions in the years 2000 and 2020 for a wide range of scenarios. These figures range between 174 and 206 million tonnes carbon in the year 2000 and between 188 and 316 million tonnes in 2020.

The scenarios are not predictions of the future, but are intended to provide a framework for assessing possible response options. They cover a wide range of assumptions on economic growth and world fuel prices. Full details can be found in the report, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

126. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what projections the Government have made of the level of carbon dioxide emissions in Britain by the year 2005 from (a) transport, (b) energy, (c) industry and (d) in total.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Future carbon dioxide emissions will depend on many factors such as economic growth and consumer choices. Last month my Department completed a study entitled "An evaluation of Energy Related Greenhouse Gas Emissions and Measures to Ameliorate Them". That report included a range of possible future emission scenarios and is available in the Library of the House.

The figures in the table, for energy-related emissions of carbon dioxide, are taken from that report. They assume a growth rate of 2·25 per cent. per annum and cover two alternative sets of assumptions on world fuel prices. Further details can be found in the report.

Notes:

1. Central Growth Assumption of 2·25 per cent. per annum.
2. Emissions expressed as million tonnes carbon.
3. All figures rounded.
4. Industry includes agriculture.
5. Transport includes marine bunkers and aviation.

Contracts

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how many contracts over £92,500 have been let by his Department in the 1988-89 financial year and in the present financial year to date; and how many of these were (a) automatically renewed and (b) advertised and therefore open to competition throughout the European Community.

Mr. Wakeham: The number of contracts awarded by my Department and covered by the provisions of the EC supplies directive, for which the current threshold is £92,000, was three in the 1988-89 financial year and one in the current financial year to date. Three of the contracts were let, and advertised, in accordance with the EC supplies directive.

Energy Efficiency Office

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will place in the Library the review of the Energy Efficiency Office which led to the announcement of new objectives on 9 June 1988, Official Report, columns 632-33.

Mr. Wakeham: The objectives of the EEO are reviewed regularly. It is not normal practice to publish advice to Ministers.

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what steps are being taken to set aside funds to deal with stage three decommissioning of nuclear power stations.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The nuclear generators will be making provisions in their accounts to deal with the decommissioning of their nuclear power stations.

Magnox Reactors

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what was the amount set aside by the Central Electricity Generating Board to deal with the decommissioning costs of the Magnox reactors in (a) 1985, (b) 1986, (c) 1987, (d) 1988 and (e) 1989.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The annual reports and accounts of the Central Electricity Generating Board show the provisions made to meet expenditure on the decommissioning of nuclear facilities, the long-term reprocessing of irradiated nuclear fuel, and the treatment, storage and disposal of the resulting waste products. These reports are available in the Library of the House.

The amount of provisions for decommissioning costs of the Magnox reactors is a matter for CEGB. I will ask the chairman of the CEGB to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority last reviewed the decommissioning costs of Magnox reactors; and if he will publish their figures.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The UKAEA reviewed the CEGB's estimates of the costs of decommissioning its Magnox reactors in May of this year. A report was submitted to the Department. Figures cannot be published because of the report's commercial confidentiality.

Flue Gas Desulphurisation

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when all large power station plants will be fitted with flue gas desulphurisation equipment.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The Government are committed to ensuring that the reductions in SO_2 emissions required by the EC large combustion plant directive are achieved. The CEGB estimates that this will require the fitting of flue gas desulphurisation (FGD) equipment to 12GW of capacity, equivalent to six large power stations, at a cost of about £2 billion. There is no requirement that all existing large power stations should be fitted with FGD equipment.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Exchange Rate Mechanism

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many times currencies in the exchange rate mechanism have been adjusted, giving the dates and the currency and its value before and after in each case.

Mr. Lilley: There have been 11 occasions on which exchange rates of currencies in the ERM have been realigned. For the detail I refer the hon. Gentleman to table 6 of "The European Monetary System: Recent Developments", IMF occasional paper number 48, and annex VIII of "The EMS: Ten Years of Progress in European Monetary Co-operation", both of which are in the Library of the House.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the arrangements for reviewing the levels of currencies in the exchange rate mechanisms; and when revaluations take place.

Mr. Lilley: Reviews are carried out through consultation in the appropriate Community bodies. I refer the hon. Gentleman to paragraph 3.2 of the resolution of the European Council of 5 December 1978 on the establishment of the European Monetary System (EMS) and related matters.

Stamp Duties

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what deliberations have been held on the future of stamp duties in the light of the consultative document issued in 1983.

Mr. Lilley: Following the response to the consultative document, numerous changes have been made. Since 1985 we have abolished a number of stamp duties, including capital duty and unit trust instrument duty, and streamlined procedures for those that remain.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what plans he has to streamline the levying of stamp duty on unit trusts;

(2) whether he will consider removing stamp duty from unit trust transactions;

(3) whether he will eliminate stamp duty on the sale and re-purchase of trusts within a unit trust.

Mr. Lilley: I cannot anticipate my right hon. Friend's Budget Statement.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received about the future of stamp duty being levied on unit trusts.

Mr. Lilley: I have received a number of representations from the unit trust industry suggesting altering the stamp duty charge on unit trusts.

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what volume of share transactions attract the minimum rate of stamp duty each year.

Mr. Lilley: I regret the information is not available.

Benefits and Allowances

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the documents produced by his Department available to hon. Members on the subject of the effects of ending (a) income tax allowances and (b) personal income tax allowances.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 12 December 1989]: A list of the direct revenue costs of tax allowances and reliefs is given in table 21.1.25 of "The Government's Expenditure Plans 1989-90 to 1991-92" (Cm. 621); but the figures cannot in general be interpreted as the tax yield from withdrawing a particular allowance or relief, because of the difficulty of estimating the behavioural changes which might result from such a move. The Financial Statement and Budget Report sets out the effects of proposed amendments to the tax system each year; and the Autumn Statement sets out the revenue effects of illustrative tax changes.

British Aerospace

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish any notes or correspondence involving the Inland Revenue over the tax affairs of British Aerospace.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 12 December 1989]: The tax affairs of British Aerospace are subject to the normal confidentiality rules. However, in order to assist understanding of this matter, arrangements have been made exceptionally, with the agreement of British Aerospace, to provide to the Public Accounts Committee and the Trade and Industry Committee copies of the exchange of letters between the accountants of British Aerospace and the Inland Revenue which is referred to in the letter of 12 July 1988 from the then Secretary of State for Trade and Industry to the chairman of British Aerospace.

Charities

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether value added tax is payable for expenditure by charities (i) on indirect publicity, such as cost of adverts and (ii) on direct publicity, such as cost of envelopes for sending educational or fund raising material to inquirers.

Mr. Ryder: Printed media advertising supplied to charities for raising money for their work or for making known their aims and objectives is relieved of value added tax. Zero-rating also applies to envelopes and other stationery items, but only when these are printed with such fund-raising or educational publicity material.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Special Needs Pupils

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to allocate time in the core curriculum to independence training for special needs pupils and to follow up the programme.

Mr. Alan Howarth: It is for schools themselves to determine how they deliver independence training and other elements of personal and social education. There is scope to do so within the targets and programmes of study of the core and foundation subjects, or as an independent subject, or as a cross-curricular theme.

Some pupils with special educational needs (SEN) will have a statement which can modify or disapply the requirements of the national curriculum and so provide an individual curriculum which might include appropriate training for adult life.

Pupil-teacher Ratios, Leicestershire

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will give the pupil-teacher ratios in Leicestershire primary schools for the years 1978 and 1988.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The pupil-teacher ratios within maintained primary schools in Leicestershire were 24 and 22·9 in 1978 and 1988 respectively.

Accountancy Firms

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many outside accountancy firms are employed by his Department; whether such employment is subject to any guidelines; and whether he takes steps before employing an accountancy firm to discover whether that firm has been censured by Department of Trade and Industry inspectors in their inquiries under the Companies Act.

Mrs. Rumbold: The Department has consultancy contracts with four of the major accountancy firms. All the contracts have been arranged in accordance with the Treasury guidelines for the appointment to audit and other accountancy assignments in the public sector. The Department does not routinely consult the Department of Trade and Industry, but would do so it it were planning to employ a firm whose reputation was not well established.

Pupil Expenditure

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the spending per pupil for each local education authority in England and Wales for the latest available financial year.

Mr. Alan Howarth: The latest information for local education authorities in England is for 1987-88 and is given in the table. Figures for Wales are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

[3] N/A denotes that an expenditure return has not been received from 4 LEAs.

Capital Allocations

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table giving the amounts for England of capital allocations for (a) county and voluntary controlled schools, (b) voluntary aided schools and (c) the total of (a) and (b) for each financial year from and including 1978-79 to 1990-91, expressed in (i) current prices, (ii) constant prices and (iii) an index of (ii) where 1978-79 = 100.

Mr. MacGregor: I shall reply to the hon. Member after the allocations for 1990-91 have been announced in the usual way.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish a table listing (a) the amounts of capital allocations for county and voluntary controlled schools for 1990-91 for which each local education authority in England has bid and (b) the amounts of capital grant for voluntary aided schools in their area which each local authority has asked of his Departments.

Mr. MacGregor: The information requested is set out in the table.
